
One of the strong points for the Badgers, according to Ryan, is the team's balance.

"We have a very balanced defense and offense. We've played great defense this year. We haven't given up many goals," Ryan said.

In 19 games this year, Wisconsin has yielded just eight goals. The defense is keyed by freshman goalkeeper Heather Taggart.

The balance also spills over to the offense, where the Badgers have several different sources for production.

Leading the team is senior midfielder Kim Backs, with seven goals and four assists for 18 points, followed by sophomore midfielder Amy Warner (7-2-16) and senior midfielder Patty Wirth (4-8-16). Sophomore forward Shelly Gehrke (5-3-13) and senior midfielder Amy Cardarelle (5-0-10) also figure highly into the well-distributed Wisconsin scoring sheet.

"One of the highlights of our season is our improvement," Ryan said. "In the past we've been inconsistent, but now we never know who's going to score. We could get a goal from any one of six or seven players, so we're fortunate. We're difficult to key on."

So UMass will have ita work cut out, but Rudy says that the strategy will be a simple one.

"We know that they'll fight us from the first whistle to the end. We can't get thrown out of our rhythm," Rudy said. "We just have to do our thing."

Rudy says that his team will have to be quick in transition, getting back quickly on defense and getting behind the ball, and then creating a solid attack.

UMass will have plenty of its own to work with. Leading the attack is sophomore midfielder April Kater, with eight goals and three assists for 19 points. Senior forward Michelle Powers (6-6-18), freshman forward Michele Woodside (6-5-17) and senior forward Beth Roundtree (3-6-12) are also big contributors.

On defense, senior goalkeeper Carla DeSantis has allowed 11 goals in 15 games while posting 10 shutouts. She has been aided by the backline work of senior Sue Montagne, junior Sarah Sztetela, and sophomores Sue Gaudette and Becky Bonzano. The midfield of Cassady, Kater and senior Sue Cooper has also played well.

UMass has had an extra week to rest up, but Rudy is unsure what effect that will have on the game.

"I don't know if we'll be stale. That's something a coach can't predict," he said. "We won't know until we get on the field."

One of the intangibles of the game could be the home field. UMass has a strong track record at Boyden, and Wisconsin's travel, along with a potentially big crowd, could all be big plusses for the Minutewomen.

"It should be a big advantage for us. The crowd should be a big factor," Rudy said.

"We're hoping it won't be a big factor," Ryan said. "We've played there before, and we'll train on the field the day before the game. But playing at home is always a plus for the home team."

The UMass football team will be looking to get physical Saturday when it will try to take down Villanova University at the stadium.

"They moved the ball slowly and deliberately against us," Reid said. "They were the poorest offense in the conference but they gained 360 yards against us. We're definitely going to have to play better defense this week."

Fullback David Mitchell, who missed four games before seeing very little action against Richmond, will be ready to play Saturday, according to Reid.

Two defensive standouts from last week, Andrew Thomas and Steve Robar, will be game captains Saturday along with Dimitri Yavis and senior quarterback Dave Palazzi.

But the outcome will depend mainly on whether UMass can stop the potent Villanova offense, led by junior quarterback Kirk Schultz.

Schultz is 170 of 289 for 1,955 yards, 12 touchdowns and 18 interceptions.

"He's a great player," Reid said. "He kicked our butts off last year and their receivers humiliated us."

In that game, the Wildcats scored 20 fourth-quarter points to grab a 44-27 victory.

This season, Villanova jumped out to a 3-0 conference record and was in good position within the conference before a 10-7 loss to Delaware and a 58-7 drubbing at the hands of New Hampshire last week.

Tailback Jeff Dingle leads the Wildcats in rushing with 741 yards and 6 touchdowns.

If UMass wins Saturday, the rewards could be great. And at least the Minutemen don't have to concern themselves with the outcome of some game miles away.

Women's swimming tops Vermont for second win

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Things are going good when a team has a tough day and still manages to win.

That's what happened Tuesday afternoon when the University of Massachusetts women's swim team traveled to the University of Vermont. Things didn't exactly go smoothly, but the Minutewomen still came away with a 164-134 win.

"It was not the greatest day we've ever had," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb. "There were some good things, but we learned some things as well. We lucked out winning over a vastly improved Vermont team."

The early events were an indication that it would not be smooth sailing for UMass. The meet started with the 200-yard medley relay, in which the team of Laurie Schwarz, Melissa Waller, Sue Gorski and Keira Cruz finished second in 1:58.45.

"Losing that first relay was tough. We lost a lot of points there, but fortunately the 1000 free was next," Newcomb said.

Yes, the 1000 freestyle. The Minutewomen made a clean sweep of the event, paced by freshman Tracy Young's first place time of 11:21.53. Melissa McCarthy and Megan McCamy took second and third, repsectively.

Senior co-captain Patty Pike followed with a victory in the 200 free in 2:05.69. "That was a good swim for her. I'm real happy with the way she's swimming so far this year," Newcomb said.

Following a third by Lori Carroll in the 100-yard backstroke, UMass got back to the winning ways, as Waller took the 100 breaststroke in 1:11.49, with Regina Jungbluth coming in third. Jodi Schwartz (2:19.84) and Gorski (2:24.03) then took the top two spots in the 200 butterfly, followed by firsts by Cruz in the 50 free and Debbie Mullen in the 1-meter diving.

Pike was edged out for first in the 100 free, but moments later, Jungbluth took a first in the 200 breast in 2:39.33, and then Young and McCarthy nailed down the top two spots in the 500 free, Young winning in 5:33.42.

"This was a much improved meet for Melissa McCarthy," Newcomb said. "And Young has bronchitis. But she swam through some things and helped us out."

UMass was unable to gather another first place finish until the meet's final event, the 400 freestyle relay, which was the highlight of the meet, according to Newcomb.

The team of Pike, Schwartz, Gorski and Young took home the gold, and then the second team of McCamy, Carroll, Leslie Cromwell and McCarthy crossed in grand style for second.

"Melissa McCarthy had a beautiful swim on the end of that relay. She's was real tough and took the girl in the last 25 yards," Newcomb said.

With Vermont in the books, the Minutewomen will now turn their attention to the University of Connecticut, which they will visit tomorrow at 7 p.m.

"It should be a lot more interesting than we originally thought," Newcomb said. "They are vastly improved over the team they had last year. I expect a lot closer meet than either of these first two (the Vermont win and last Saturday's win over Smith College.

"We're looking for a tough one [tomorrow]," Newcomb said.

Minutemen runners at IC4A meet

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team heads into Saturday's Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association (IC4A) meet looking to qualify for NCAA play.

The IC4A, which is made up of schools mostly from Maine to Virginia, will send around 70 teams (Division I, II and III), hich will be split into to districts based on geographic location. The top six teams will move on to the NCAAs.

"We like to improve on our past IC4A performances," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "The last three years we missed the NCAAs by one team."

O'Brien said Dartmouth College and Providence College would be the top two teams in District I (which UMass will compete in), followed by Penn State. "After that, it's a toss-up," he said. "Spots four through 10 could come from Bucknell, Georgetown, UMass, Pitt, Northeastern and a few others. We have to keep our eyes open for Northeastern. they could be a real sleeper."

The class of the runners will be Greg Whitely of Brown University and John Trautman of Georgetown. "Either one of those two should win the race. They're excellent runners," O'Brien said.

UMass will be led by its usual duop of Kerry Boyle and Joe Milette. "They are two of the top kids in the IC4A. They can crack the top 10," O'Brien said.

What will the Minutemen need to do to advance to the NCAAs?

"We need to get a good day from Milette and Boyle — top 15 finishes," O'Brien said. "After that, we need to utilize our depth. Our fourth man is as good as most teams' number three man."

The playoffs are here

Field hockey to face winner of Northeastern-Connecticut clash

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

One game is all that separates the University of Massachusetts field hockey team from the Final Four, which will be played next weekend at the University of Pennsylvania.

That game will be played at noon on Sunday at Totman Field, but who the Minutewomen, 17-2-1, will play in that NCAA playoff game has not been decided yet.

That will be decided in the preliminary round on Saturday when the University of Connecticut, 14-3-1, plays Northeastern University, 13-3-2, at Totman at noon. The winner will play UMass for the Northeast regional championship.

"We just have to focus on ourselves since we don't know who our opponent will be," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We just have to work on the little things in practice right now."

Saturday's game will be a dog fight. The Terriers (NU) played the Huskies (UConn) last weekend in Storrs, Conn. and UConn walked away with a 1-0 win.

Either team will give the Minutewomen all they can handle. UMass just barely edged Northeastern earlier in the season, 1-0, at Totman. And UConn, well, the Minutewomen have some old scores to settle with the Huskies.

Connecticut has played UMass three times in the NCAA Tournament since it was started back in 1981 and the Huskies have won every time, not always convincingly. Some of the games between these two teams have been crazy.

In 1981, UConn beat the Minutewomen, 4-1, in the game for the National Championship. In 1984, the Huskies beat the Minutewomen, 4-3, on penalty strokes after nothing could be settled after three overtimes. And then two years later, UConn knocked UMass out of the tournament in the first round again, 3-2.

The latest chapter in the Huskies' continued dominance of the Minutewomen came back on Oct. 29, when the Huskies

Women's soccer meets up with Wisconsin in quarterfinal game

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

This is what it all comes down to.

Sunday afternoon, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team takes to Boyden Field at 1 p.m. to face the University of Wisconsin-Madison. The winner gets the customary trip to the NCAA Final Four tournament the next weekend. It is a lofty goal, one which both teams have their sights set on.

UMass is familiar with the situation. This is the seventh year in a row that the Minutewomen have seen postseason action. They've made it this far the last five years, and each time managed to go on to the Final Four ball.

Wisconsin, on the other hand, is new to this game. Only once before have the Badgers even reached the playoffs, a 1-0 first round loss to Colorado College in 1985. Wisconsin is eager to show that they too can play this late in the season.

"This is the farthest we've ever gone. We'd sure like to go to the Final Four," said third-year Wisconsin coach Greg Ryan. "We're only one step away. Our kids are so fired up. It's incredible that our program has made it to this level. But UMass is a great team. We have a lot of respect for them."

Wisconsin earned its right to visit Amherst by beating the University of Connecticut, 1-0 on penalty kicks, last Sunday in Madison. It wasn't the prettiest of playoff games, but it was a win, just what Wisconsin was looking for.

"The conditions were miserable. There was two inches of snow on top of a mushy ground. It was very difficult for either team to show what it could do," Ryan said. "I think our team played extremely well."

With any amount of luck, Boyden Field should be in

Minutemen looking to tame Wildcats in YanCon battle

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Three weeks ago, the University of Massachusetts football team lost not just a three-point decision to Delaware, but control of its own destiny as well.

But two games and two wins later, UMass has a firm grasp on its own fate.

The Minutemen can take the field Saturday against Villanova University (1 p.m., Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium) and next week at New Hampshire and worry about only themselves.

If UMass takes care of business and wins its last two games, it will clinch at least a share of the Yankee Conference title, regardless of what the competition does.

"All I know is that [the Villanova game] it's a big game," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "We have to stay focused on this game. The more attention we pay to other things, the more time away from the task at hand."

The "other things" Reid referred to are the combinations of results that would give UMass, 6-3 overall and 4-2 in the conference, the YanCon title outright.

If UMass wins its two remaining games, and the University of Connecticut and Delaware each lose a game, the Minutemen would earn the conference crown and a trip to the NCAA 1-AA playoffs.

But, as Reid and the Minutemen well know, the biggest step will come Saturday against the Wildcats, 5-3-1 overall and 4-2 in the conference. And UMass will face the chore with its biggest injury list of the year.

"We have to get healthy quick," Reid said. "The most important person for us this game is [UMass head trainer] Vic Keedy. If it wasn't for him, we wouldn't even have a team this week."

The injuries hit the defensive unit hardest. Cornerbacks Garrick Amos and Vaughn Williams both sprained ankles last Saturday on the turf field at Richmond. Amos won't play and Williams is listed as questionable.

Linebacker Drew Comeau sprained a wrist and is listed as doubtful, linebacker Brant Despathy (sprained ankle) is questionable, and linebacker Chris Tenkin is out with a hamstring injury.

"The turf injuries did us in," Reid said.

Part of the reason for the high number of injuries is the simple fact that the defense was on the field so much. In the first quarter, Richmond held the ball for over 13 minutes.

The only rest for the defense in that period was one drive in which the Minutemen scored a touchdown on three plays.

Volleyball team ready for tourney at New Haven

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

This weekend's tournament in New Haven Conn. is like an oreo cookie for the Universitry of Massachusetts volleyball team. It's a law of nature that you lick the frosting out of the middle before actually eating the cookie.

The New Haven tourney is sanwiched between last week's Hofstra Tournament and next week's Atlantic 10 Tournament. . . so this weekend's matches are really just icing on the cookie for the Minutewomen.

They recover from one tournament to play another one, which is really preparation for another one.

Sound confusing? Well it is.

This weekend's schedule is simple, however. UMass will only play one match this afternoon— against Florida Southern College at 5 p.m. But tomorrow, the Minutewomen must play three consecutive games: C.W. Post University at 9 a.m., Navy at noon, and then the final match of the tourney against the University of New Haven at 3 p.m.

The rugged schedule and competition is exactly what UMass needs with only a week to go until the A-10s, according to UMass head coach Carol Ford.

"This tournament really helped us get ready for the Atlantic 10s last year," she said. Ford said she New Haven to be the most difficult test, but Forida Southern and Navy will present their own unique problems.

The state of Florida has traditionally turned out strong collegiate volleyball teams and FS is expected to be no exception.

"They're a real strong team, a division II team but very strong," Ford said.

Navy and New Haven will really test UMass' metle.

"These teams are going to be really good defensively," Ford said. "[We] need to play a lot and then we'll be in good shape."

Spectators stand in the rain yesterday while watching the UMass field hockey team lose to Northeastern in the NCAA playoffs.

When it rains, it pours

• Women's soccer eliminated, 2-1

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

For the first time in six years, the University of Massachusetts will not take part in the NCAA women's soccer Final Four.

And for the first time in its history, the University of Wisconsin-Madison will be there. Both were assured yesterday, as the Badgers outfought the torrential downpours and the Minutewomen for a 2-1 quarterfinal playoff win at Boyden Field.

The loss marks the end of another fine season for the Minutewomen, who finished at 14-3-1. But the exit was a little earlier that they had hoped.

Nonetheless, it all came down to the team that could capitalize on its chances. Wisconsin did that, and UMass didn't. It was that simple.

"We played very well. Except for the first 20 minutes we went at them non-stop. We played great possession considering how wet it was," said UMass coach Jim Rudy. "We did everything it took to win this game but score."

"We had our chances, but we couldn't get it in. We just didn't get any breaks," said senior forward Michelle Powers.

• Field hockey loses to NU, 2-1

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It was raining at Totman Field yesterday. The field was wet. The ball was slippery. The sticks were slippery. But there were no excuses.

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team's season was washed away yesterday as Northeastern University went on to a 2-1 victory over the Minutewomen in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

"The weather didn't matter," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "For both teams the conditions were the same."

One might have to wonder about that though. Yes, the conditions were the same for both teams. But when the conditions are as they were yesterday, a team very often gets a break that it wouldn't have under normal conditions, a lucky bounce sometimes.

The Minutewomen, 17-3-1, had plenty of opportunities to tie this game at the end but there were no lucky bounces for UMass. No fluke goals. The ball bounced like it did on any other day and there was always a Northeastern player there to intercept it.

'Temptation' draws large audience in Northampton

By GEORGE FRANCY

NORTHAMPTON — Christ is drawing sellout crowds in Northampton these days.

The film The Last Temptation of Christ has been playing at the Pleasant St. Theater for nearly two weeks now, and according to a manager at the theater, it is doing very well. Unlike other theaters which have shown the film however, the Pleasant St. theater has not drawn protesters.

Karen Andrade, manager of the 150-seat theater, said the film had been selling out on weekends and has been "very crowded" during the week.

She also said the management of the theater had no qualms about showing the controversial film.

"The only thing we were worried about was whether we could afford to get it," Andrade said. "If anything, we strive to get films which are controversial . . . or make people think."

As to why the film had not drawn protests Andrade said, "It's old news now." She said protesters had moved on to other, more topical subjects.

The theater does not have a marquee, but Andrade said that does not contribute to the lack of protests.

She said the film had not run at the theater sooner because it costs more when first released.

"Films when they first open don't like to open at small art-theaters. We had wanted to run it when it was first released," she said.

She said the philosophy of the Pleasant St. Theater is to offer films which are not generally in the mainstream and would not come to the attention of the general public. "We try to give voice to films that wouldn't get major runs," Andrade said.

Last Temptation's run ends tomorrow.

UM fees expected to remain same

COLLEGIAN NEWS SERVICES

Although the state Board of Regents has asked state colleges and universities to limit the student fees to 30 percent of the tuition, University of Massachusetts officials said the fees would not be lowered.

Although the Regents do not have the power to control fees, they approved the policy because the state school's presidents agreed to the cap earlier in the year, said Terry Zoulas, press aide to Chancellor of Higher Education Franklyn Jenifer.

Zoulas said although the trustees of the individual campuses retain the legal authority to raise fees, "we have every reason to expect they will voluntarily comply with the policy."

If the schools do not comply, "we can always go to the Legislature and seek the authority," he said.

UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey called the move "premature," in light of the state's continuing fiscal problems.

UMass undergraduate fees are $795 each semester. The fee is equal to 56.6 percent of the $1,404 charged for tuition.

The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported Wednesday that Duffey said Jenifer assured him UMass would not be asked to comply with the cap.

The Regents voted unanimously at their Tuesday meeting in Boston to establish the 30 percent limit and advise trustees to seek permission from Jenifer before exceeding it, Zoulas said.

The average fees at the state's schools are 30.4 percent of tuition.

Besides UMass, Holyoke Community College, Berkshire Community College, the Massachusetts College of Art, Mount Wachusett Community College, and Northern Essex Community College now exceed the 30 percent limit.

Report says AIDS health services inadequate

BOSTON (AP) — Health services do not adequately meet the needs created by the spread of AIDS, according to a 75-page report scheduled to be released this week by the Boston AIDS Consortium.

"The gaps in services are already apparent in Boston, where we're approaching 900 cases. What are we going to do when the numbers are up to 3,300 in three years?" said Consortium member Holly Ladd.

"When you look at the numbers, we're in big trouble."

The report, to be released on Tuesday, will address unmet AIDS needs in hospital care, mental health services, long-term care, health-care reimbursement, prevention and education, the Boston Sunday Globe reported.

The report, which represents the work of about 170 health professionals from 70 institutions and agencies, will also include a chapter addressing the needs of intravenous drug users, women and children - the fastest-growing high risk groups.

The report estimates by July more than 13,000 of Massachusetts' estimated 40,000 intravenous drug users will be in state-funded drug treatment programs, with AIDS data showing the virus spreading most rapidly in the neighborhoods of Roxbury, Dorchester, Mattapan and Jamaica Plain.

In addition, the number of AIDS patients in Massachusetts hospitals is expected to double or triple during the next 18 months from its current daily average of 90, said Dr. Harvey Makadon, the Consortium's chairman.

Makadon, of Boston's Beth Israel Hospital, said local hospitals are reaching their capacity limits and that many institutions remain wary of treating intravenous drug users with AIDS.

The consortium reports that by 1991 there will be an estimated 5,400 people diagnosed with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome in Massachusetts and thousands more showing signs of the disease's precursor, the human immuno-deficiency virus.

"These numbers will severely strain our capacity to provide quality care," the report said.

Health officials said the report is part of a campaign to secure more state funds in the 1990 fiscal budget to deal with the disease.

"We recognize the caseload is going up," said a spokesman for Philip W. Johnson, human services secretary. "We think we have one of the best AIDS programs in the country and we're going to continue that effort."

Johnson has said the human services agency is pushing to increase the health department's current $11.5 million AIDS funding to $18.9 million.

Hampshire graduate makes it big

By BRIAN PURCELL
Collegian Correspondent

Like most college graduates, Alexis Muellner wanted to make it big in the big world.

But the 1986 Hampshire College graduate never knew he'd make it so big so fast.

Muellner won the Livingston Award for Young Journalists earlier this year for his co-production with Boston producer Jonathan Schwartz of a special report about radio broadcasts in Vietnam during the war. The show aired on Veterans Day 1987 over National Public Radio on the program All Things Considered.

Muellner, who is now working as a producer in Philadelphia for NPR, said it's important to rediscover the war. "It was oral history, and it has disappeared. To hear it again transports you back in time," he said.

"The Vietnam War has been called the 'one year war ten times over' – everyone who went there saw something different," he added.

Muellner, 25, said his interest in the Vietnam War began during his last year at Hampshire, where he was studying media. He said he researched the underground anti-war radio that was prevalent during the 1960s.

Soon after he graduated, Muellner met Schwartz, 31, an independent Boston radio producer. The two continued Muellner's research, collecting recordings from the Armed Forces Network, pirate stations run by US soldiers, North Vietnamese 'propaganda' programs like Hanoi Hannah, and propagandist programs aired in the United States.

"The Vietnam War was a conflict that was fought in a set of unusual circumstances," said Muellner. "It was a new era in which advanced technology provided a powerful propagandist vehicle through broadcasting.

"[Also] it was a war fought mainly by adolescents, many of whom perceived US military programming as rather sanitized. This type of propaganda reinforced a growing cynicism within the ranks, and made them more vulnerable to the subversive broadcasts aired by Hanoi Hannah," he said. "This led to unheard-of incidents of pirate radio broadcasts of US soldiers, themselves, to help alleviate their sense of isolation and raise morale."

Muellner's success led him to a job assisting the directors of the movie Hamburger Hill and the television show Tour of Duty, both of which were based on the Vietnam War. In both cases he was responsible for selecting authentic wartime broadcasts for the soundtracks.

Muellner said that a career in media production is very competitive, but people aspiring to work in the media should "set your mind on what you want to do, and treat it as a discipline."

Workshop on stress offered

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Marie DeCristo, a single mother and recent graduate of the University of Massachusetts, said when she was in college, she didn't have a good support group.

At a university which caters primarily to traditional students, she said, it can be difficult for a woman who is both a student and a parent to find resources that address her special needs.

So DeCristo developed her own workshop, "Stress Management for College Mothers," which she will offer from 10 a.m. to noon, Saturday at the Jones Library in Amherst.

DeCristo said she has a unique approach to addressing the problems of stress in the lives of college mothers.

"Most people who teach stress management are directed at changing behaviors," she said. "I don't believe that our behavior needs to change."

Instead, she said, the social demands placed on women who are both mothers and college students need to be altered.

"We need to resist the demands put on us," she said. "We are already great at dealing with stress or we wouldn't be in college." DeCristo, whose son Jeremy is 2, said, "One thing we have a problem with when we deal with stress is forgetting to take care of ourselves. We feel guilty for taking on multiple roles and not being perfect in all of those roles."

But, she said, "directing our frustration at ourselves is not going to change the way demands are put on us as mothers."

Instead, DeCristo suggests that women look for new sources of support and work toward changing the causes of their stress.

DeCristo, who graduated last May with a bachelor's degree in nursing, said she designed the workshop as a part of her senior class project.

"Senior year we were required to take on a population we thought was particularly vulnerable to health care problems," she said.

"I worked rotations in the UMass clinic," she said, "where health care was directed at traditional students. I decided I wanted to address health care problems of older non-traditional students and then narrowed it down to mothers," she said.

She said she worked closely with Ann Grose, a Health Care Educator, at University Health Services, to develop a workshop in which the patients educate themselves.

DeCristo said the workshop will begin with an introduction of Dr. Hans Selye's traditional theories of the impacts of physical and emotional stress.

She said she then plans to facilitate a brainstorming session to allow participants to come up with their own perceptions of stress. "I think we have a lot to offer each other," she said.

The main focus of the workshop will be on sharing the methods participants are already using to cope with stress, and addressing the causes of that stress.

DeCristo said she hopes a more permanent support network will develop out of the workshop. "I didn't have when I was in school."

Schedule guide changed

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Office of the Registrar has changed the content and format of the course listing guide for the spring semester.

The guide now contains course descriptions, which were previously offered in a separate book. The guide is now also in a newspaper-tabloid size. Previously the course listing was magazine-size.

"We thought it might be helpful to combine the two documents," said Janet Bell, acting registrar. She said the UMass Provost's Office used to issue about 15,000 copies of the course description guide, which is now published by the registrar's office at a higher press run of about 20,000 copies.

"There's not necessarily a course description for every course," Bell said. She said individual departments decide which courses to describe, and typically choose to describe the most popular courses or ones which have changed in content from what was offered in the past, she said.

The course guide now lists courses which fulfill General Education requirements near the front of the book. Bell said this should allow students to easily pick the classes they need to fulfill their requirements.

The deadline for pre-registration forms to be handed in is Nov. 23, the day before Thanksgiving, and Bell stressed the importance of student's meeting this deadline.

"It's really a tight schedule to be on to process the forms because we have all 20,000 pre-registration forms coming in at once," Bell said.

She also said that in the summer, when the office is working on registration for the fall semester, they have more time as forms trickle in.

The system for processing forms starts just after Thanksgiving, when the information on the forms is typed into a computer, which does a preliminary check to see if student meets certain criteria set by the department offering the course. These criteria are usually things such as whether the student is in the major, if he is a senior, etc.

A roster is formed from this, which is then sent to the department. The department can then cut whoever they want.

After this a check is done with the bursar to see if the student has paid his bill. If so, the schedule is mailed to the student.

This should occur by about the third week in January. Then another check is run to see if there are time conflicts, or a schedule that isn't full, etc. If the schedule is not full, workers try to juggle the schedule manually by changing sections, and adding classes from the "alternate" boxes on the form. She said this is the most time-consuming step in the process.

Bush and Quayle cousins, but not kissing

BOSTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush and his running mate Dan Quayle may not be the odd couple they seem. In fact, they're related. According to a Boston genealogist who specializes in the lineage of presidents, Bush and Quayle are 10th cousins once removed.

The two are also related to Abraham Lincoln, not to mention Marilyn Monroe's alleged father. But despite Bush's blue-blood image, only Quayle can claim ancestors on the Mayflower.

If you listen to Gary Boyd Roberts, a genealogist at the New England Historic Genealogical Society, the shared relatives between Bush, a Yankee, and Quayle, scion of a wealthy Indiana newspaper publishing family, are not that uncommon.

The two represent a "throwback" to a time when American presidential and vice-presidential teams were solid white, Anglo-Saxon, Protestant stock, Roberts said. Bush and Quayle both have 16th-century roots in New England. Roberts estimates that more than 100 million people in the country are descended from less from the several thousand who settled in New England during the Great Migration of 1620-1650.

Roberts, 45, has spent almost a decade researching Bush's ancestry, which will be included in his upcoming book on presidential lineage, timed to coincide with the 200th anniversary of George Washington's inauguration April 30.

Roberts is director of publications at the New England Historic Genealogical Society, the nation's oldest and second largest, which contains a 250,000-volume library and 20,000-volume take-home research collection. He did most of his presidential research there, with occasional forays to the Library of congress and the New York Public Library.

"Part of my mission is to show how one goes out from one's self to one's family to the community and to various groups around the nation," Roberts said. "If you look at pedigree, you can tell about patterns in culture."

Bush, he said, is only the third of what he calls "Social Register" presidents. The first two were, ironically, Democrats Theodore Roosevelt and Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who were closely connected to New York society.

But Bush, and Quayle, are WASPS with a twist. They both have strong ancestral ties to the South as well as New England, Roberts said.

Bush is related to 10 American presidents, including Franklin Pierce, the nearest relation (fifth cousins four times removed), Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, Rutherford Hayes, Grover Cleveland, William Howard Taft, Calvin Coolidge, Franklin Roosevelt, Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, the most distant relation (11th cousins once removed.)

Bush also has royal ancestry and is descended from Edward I, King of England, Henry 1, King of England, according to Roberts, William 1, King of Scotland.

Quayle "almost certainly" has some royal ancestry but Roberts has not throughly researched his family tree. But his ancestors on the Mayflower include Myles Standish and John Alden.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Members of DVP chronicle events

The following is the opinion of the writer, and does not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless noted.

The following recount is a history of the meetings that took place between members of the Black Agenda and the Distinguished Visitors Program [DVP] as told by certain members of the DVP who are also members of the Black Agenda:

September 19: Two Black students approached the Pat Berkley, Co-chairperson of the DVP, and requested procedural information in regards to co-sponsorship of a program. The students were informed that co-sponsorship of a program required a unanimous vote and had to be initiated by DVP.

According to the DVP constitution [article 5, sec B], a co-sponsorship does not have to be initiated by DVP, and furthermore [article 5], "each motion must be passed by a simple majority of the quorum in attendance."

September 27: 5 Black students attended DVP meeting. A student representing the Black Agenda presented the proposal for Min. Farrakhan and co-sponsorship in the name of Phi Beta Sigma.

September 28: Pat Berkley, DVP Co-chair, verbally informed Black Agenda members that the proposal for Farrakhan could be addressed at DVP's next meeting.

According to the DVP constitution [article 5,sec B], "The Committee decision will be fowarded to the proposer [sic] in the form of a written memo the day following the meeting."

October 4: With seven Black students in attendance, a proposal for Farrakhan was read for the second time. Upon hearing the proposal the committee said it was necessary to put out "feelers" into the community to get an indication of whether this speaker should be entertained.

The DVP constitution clearly states [article 5 sec B],"action on each proposal presented by a non-committee member will take place during the same meeting in which the program is presented."

October 11: More than 20 Black students and an equal number of White students entertained debate on the speaker after video presentation. These charges were presented by the Black Agenda:

- Co-Chairperson Pat Berkley deliberately misled students concerning co-sponsorships.
- Action on each proposal presented by non-committee members must take place at that meeting.
- The function of DVP as stated in Article II, is to "stimulate critical thought and debate by presenting a balanced range of opinion with respect to a given issue.
- That in the last five years, DVP has failed to bring a single African-American speaker this campus despite the obvious racial tensions.
- That the DVP paid an honorarium for William Buckley greater than 13,000 dollars and in the face of this disparity, DVP should contribute to Farrakhan's honorarium.

After discussion of the above charges, the committee left the foom and voted in favor of the program. There were no opposing votes cast. There were no abstentions. The 7-5 vote that was reported to the collegian was fabricated. There were no minutes or attendance taken.

The Program Advisor, Margaret Arsenault, was in attendance.

- Black students delivered letter to Rick Townes, Assistant Dean of Students, requesting his assistance in bringing together Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson, Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson, RSO advisor to DVP Margaret Arsenault, DVP Co-Chair Pat Berkley and Rabbi Saul Permutter head of Umass Hillel Foundation, in an effort to reach out to those who have expressed concerns about the program and to clear up the security issue. The letter to Townes requested that the meeting take place on November 2 or 3.

Black students never received notification on the proposed meeting.

Vice Chancellor of student affairs claimed that he never received the letter.

DVP Co-Chairs attempt to nullify the vote by trying to pass off unverified charges as "announcements" without having the charges approved or the vote nullified by the body. Black Agenda representatives objected calling for due process.

Black Agenda representatives call for proper meeting order under the DVP constitution. DVP Co-Chairs Pat Berkley and Daniela D'Appalito admit to ignorance of the DVP constitution and Roberts rules of crder. The charges against the Black Agenda are not accepted by the DVP body. DVP decided to address the charges at the next official meeting (in two weeks).

No minutes were taken. Attendance was taken. Margaret Arsenault, Program Advisor, was in attendance.

October 25:The Oct. 11 vote by the DVP to bring Farrakhan has been deemed invalid because of constitutional violations, according to Margaret Arsenault, the DVP program advisor from the Student Activities Office.

These allegations remain unverified charges against the vote that the body has yet to accept. The vote has yet to be nullified by the body.

October 26:Director of public safety, Arthur Hilson was quoted as by the collegian as saying "We are talking $7000 to $8000 right off the top," for security costs concerning Farrakhan's arrival. Hilson said the money would have to come from the sponsors of the event. According to the Hilson, "Farrakhan's visit is just as big of a headache to him as when Paul Cameron, an anti-gay activist, came to campus in the spring of 87." Hilson also said "he would prefer the lecture to be held in a room with no windows, so there is no chance of anyone shattering glass and injuring someone."

According to the Student Activities Office documentation, the estimated support costs for a major speaker in the Fine Arts Center requires six university police officers at $25 per hour working a minimum of four hours, which amounts to $600 in security costs.

When Jesse Jackson came to the Fine Arts Center [spring 84], as a Presidential candidate, he was required to have only 2 university police officers costing $200.

When Paul Cameron spoke at his most recent visit at the university [spring 87], not one penny was transferred from any Registered Student Organization according to the Student Activities Office. They also went on to say that the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs picked up the security fees in full.

October 31:According to Assistant Vice Chancellor of Students Affairs William Weitzer, Dennis Madson, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, called a meeting that included himself, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Assistant Dean of Students, Rick Townes, other administration members, hand-picked student representatives and DVP co-chairs Daniela D'Appolito, Pat Berkley, Assistant co-chair Judy Kohn and Treasurer Frank Lapsley, in which the group convened to "brainstorm" possible alternatives for speakers that would better represent the interests of the "Third World Community."

This was not the meeting that the Black Agenda members had originally proposed.

November 7:Assitant co-chair Judi Kohn, co-chair Daniela D'Appolito, and the Program Advisor Margaret Arsenault, informed the Black students that recently joined DVP that they would not be honored as "full" members. This left no Black students on the DVP committee. Arsenault said that this decision was made by herself, the DVP co-chairs, Director of Programs, Sue Jean, and the Director of the Students activities Office, Irene Carew. At this meeting, Black students were also told that DVP did not have the $11,000 to bring Min. Farrakhan because DVP had already committed $4,000 plus expenses to Alan Ginsberg.

According to the DVP constitution, membership requires attendance at "three consecutives meetings." Four of the eight Black students had attended five meetings while the other four had attended four.

According to the DVP constitution [article 3 sec D], the only grounds for removal are:

- Unexcused absences at three regular scheduled meetings.
- Any financial/legal commitment or misconduct made in behalf of DVP without the expressed consent or vote by the committee.
- Prolonged non-involvement.

None of the former have been committed by the ejected Black students.

According to the DVP constitution, the removal procedure requires the member under consideration for removal to be notified in writing at least one week in advance of the said impending decision. The removal from the committee will be accomplished by a three force vote of the entire active committee.

No such procedure has taken place.

Nowhere does it state in the DVP constitution that the program advisor or the program director have the power to block membership of university students organizations. The DVP constitution states that "it has an obligation to permit any student to be member."

According to [article 3] of the DVP constitution, "The committee should strive to recruit a membership consisting of diverse interest and background." With the ejection of the eight Black students, that leaves 14 White students and one Indian student on the committee.

There has been no vote on Alan Ginsberg at any meeting this semester according to Virginia Chris Hansen and Sheila Pelligri who are all active senior DVP members. Without this commitment DVP has at least $12,089.49 not allocated for Spring 89.

- November 8:Members of the Black Agenda contact University Legal Services, The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination and the American Civil Liberties Union to inquire about the institutional racism, harassment and bias levied against the Black students by DVP, the Student Activities Office, Public Saftey, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, the Dean of Students office and the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Minister speaks on religion, Hitler

THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

As a response to the prospect of an imminent visit to the campus of the University of Massachusetts by controversial black leader Minister Louis Farrakhan, a plethora of accusations and condemnations have surfaced within the community. Predominant among the accusations have been those citing anti-Semitism and hate-preaching as focal points of Farrakhan's rhetoric.

Adversaries of Farrakhan's visit assert that his arrival would be divisive of the black, white and Jewish communities, setting back the progress already made towards unity.

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith has issued a 24 page fact sheet characterizing Farrakhan's views as "violent hostility towards whites and Jews in particular." Chief among the allegations made are that Farrakhan has called Adolph Hitler a "great man"in a laudatory sense and that he has described Judaism as a "gutter religion."

Fact: an excerpted transcript of his March 11 speech as quoted from the April 17 New York Times illustrates the fact that he did qualify the remark.

He said, "Here the Jews don't like Farrakhan and so they call me "Hitler." Well thats a good name. Hitler was a very great man. He wasn't great for me as a Black man but he was a great German and he rose Germany up from the ashes of her defeat by the united force of all of Europe and America after the first World War. Yet Hitler took Germany from the ashes and rose her up and made her the greatest fighting machine of the 20 century, brothers and sisters, and even though Europe and America had deciphered the code that Hitler was using to speak to his chiefts) of staff, they still had trouble defeating Hitler even after knowing his plans in advance. Now I'm not proud of Hitler's evil toward Jewish people, but that's a matter of record. He rose Germany up from nothing. Well, in a sense you could say there is a similarity in that we are rising our people up from nothing, but don't compare me with your wicked killers."

Farrakhan has never been quoted as having called Judaism a " gutter religion."

Farrakhan, in asserting his personal views on the validity of Zionism and the Palestine quest for self-definition, has criticized the state of Israel for it's brutality towards the Palestinians.

On June 24,1984, at the Arlington St. Church in Boston, he said "America and England and the nations backed Israel's existence. Therefore when you aid and abet someone in a criminal conspiracy, you are a part of that criminal conspiracy. So America and England and the nations are criminals in the sight of almighty God. Now that nation called Israel, never has had any peace in forty years and she will never have any peace because there can never be any peace structured on injustice, thievery, lying and deceit and using the name of God to shield your dirty religion under His holy and righteous name."

That the minister's arrival on campus would destroy the fabric of unity, many students find questionable.

Black Agenda strives to educate

By SUZZETTE HUNTE
Collegian Correspondent

Is Farrakhan a hate teacher? Is he anti-Semetic? These are just a few of the many questions the Black Agenda hopes to address with a week of events.

The Black Agenda is a political, economic, and cultural organization, whose most recent project is to bring the Minister Louis Farrakhan to UMASS during Black History Month [Feb 89]. The Black Agenda hopes, as senior Zouera Youssoufou spokesperson of the Black Agenda put it, "to replace the fiction, perpetuated by the media and others," with factual information.

To do this, members of the Black Agenda have organized a series of events starting today, that will allow the Umass and Five College area community the opportunity to see and hear the Minister and judge for themselves.

"We hope that the events we've planned will give members of the community something concrete to think about," said Youssoufou.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week from 7-9pm, the Black Agenda will show three controversial Farrakhan videos in which the Minister addressed students at UCLA, the relations between Blacks and Jews, and Jesse Jackson.

According to Youssoufou, the Black Mass Communications Project [BMCP] will aid in the effort by airing the Ministers speeches at various times Monday - Friday from 6 to 9 p.m.

Youssoufou encourages students to check out the UVC monitors, located in the Student Union, this Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at 12 noon to hear Farrakhan speeches. The Black Agenda has also planned a special Farrakhan screening at 8 p.m. November 21 in the Anacaona Cultural Center, located in the Thatcher dormitory basement.

According to Youssoufou, a rally to be held on the steps of the Student Union on Thursday November 17 at 12 noon, will address "the ejection of 8 Black students from the Distinguished Visitors Program [DVP]."

Said Youssoufou, " we are fed up with racially biased organizations who in the last 5 years have spent nearly a quarter of a million dollars on White speakers and tossed a mere 15,000 dollars at the MLK planning committee to pacify the Black community."

Trying to forget an old photo and find a new love

He placed the photograph deep within the drawer, shoving its memory outside himself and away. The future stood in the doorway gesturing to him to come froward. He stepped cautiously and walked down the lonely hallway.

They came in scattered waves. Some bore resemblance to the woman within the drawer, others didn't. Each one brought her own aspirations, her own photos. They would share a moment or perhaps moments in time. And then they would pass. That's the part that always killed him, the passing. Nothing stayed.

Moments became stretches of time, stretches became patterns. First there would be many. Physical contact, ego boost, something to talk about. Their feelings were insignificant. Even thoughts were rather meaningless, servants of small talk to prevent an even more uncomfortable silence.

Now and then a breakthrough, an intrigue. But it was usually someone who he never spoke to, more of a wish than a reality. Love at a distance and all in the mind. "I didn't want to meet her, anyway."

The search would go on. Phone numbers found while doing the laundry. Faces without names and names without faces. "Oh, great, she's in my class." Intimacy so inappropriate. "So, that's what she's doing now."

Josh Galitsky

Time alone becomes haunting meditation. Flip a coin between emptiness and loneliness. Only both sides are heads.

He keeps returning to the drawer for the photo. He stares himself to tears not once but many times. Years become a blur of hair spray and lies and boring conversation. More tired than his years, more lonely than his words. "I'm concentrating on my grades."

He calls upon his friends for salvation. Some come running, some run the other way. It isn't salvation but preservation. They keep him afloat. Some female friends become the ideal of what he dreams for in a lover. Perhaps some become lovers and no longer stay friends. Life is getting hit after the bell has sounded while the referee turns his back.

Then, a glimmer. Someone who speaks and laughs and cries and thinks not just in her own head but in his. She has what he didn't even know he was looking for. He's calm and not jealous. "Why haven't I started to panic?" He simply enjoys her company. . . deeply.

Then it all crumbles. Not with melodrama or harsh words, but a crumbling nonetheless. For while he has forgotten about his photo, she has her own sitting on the shelf, very far away from the darkness of the drawer. The glimmer peters out and dies.

So he returns to the blur with several layers added to the thickness of his skin. He wallows until his schoolwork is due and time presses on. But for the first time in so very long the drawer remains closed, untouched. He senses a hollow yet needed triumph in this Olympiad of despair. A victory unrewarded as he kisses someone new.

Odds and ends

Core requirements make headaches, not knowledge

Reflecting on my three and a half years at this fine institution of higher learning, it has become very clear that the University policy on providing a well rounded education is nothing short of menacing. I'm a communications major, I want to be a journalist, or a broadcaster, or a screen writer. I know nothing about biology, or oceanography, or geology. Nor do I wish to find out.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

Why does the University see fit to force feed me Entomology 226? In addition to the painstaking process of selecting the best classes in my major, pre-registration has become a quest for the easiest E cores. Why doesn't FS&N 130 ever fit into my schedule?

Sure it's my own fault for not satisfying these stupid requirements when I was an underclassman, but I shouldn't have to. Just like I shouldn't have to spend the great majority of my study time preparing for those damn Friday quizzes in Latin 120. Which brings me to my other pettest of peeves . . . the foreign language requirement.

My bout with the language requirement is legendary. Freshman year . . . Japanese. Intensive, six credits . . . what the heck, get it over quickly. Wrong. No amount of academic enthusiasm can justify learning a 350 character alphabet when you're 18 years old. Which way to the express drop table?

It took a full semester to regroup from the trauma of sitting in that class and not even knowing how to raise my hand. It wasn't until the fall of '86 that I could get up the courage to tackle another foreign dialect. "How about Italian?" my folks said. Why not? Father's native language. A little heritage. It might even be fun.

Yeah . . . lots of fun. F

Spring semester 1988. Panic sets in. Latin is the only way. "It's real easy" my roommate says. And so it was, until I took the final. D is for dandy they say. At least I made it to 120. That's an accomplishment.

If you haven't guessed, I'm fed up. Nothing is more frustrating than having your well designed program of study poisioned by a slew of classes that don't interest you in the least.

So here I am. Wading in the pool of academic mediocrity. Doing things I should have done two years ago. Learning a language that is only spoken by priests in movies like The Exorcist. It's nice to be a well rounded student.

Color and ethnicity: there is a difference

The following is an excerpt from The Boston Globe Magazine. It will illustrate a point that African-Americans have seemingly forgotten to address: We as a people are continuously being socialized to be inferior.

Joseph L. Hill Jr.

"It was a middle class neighborhood: first for Yankees, then for Jews, and finally for blacks."

If you are African-American, and you need to read this quote again, do so.

It will illustrate my point that you have been so socialized into accepting this terminology, namely black, that you do not even notice its use when it is printed in front of you.

Upon closer inspection you must realize that the author in using the word Yankee was referring to the ethnic group of Anglo-Saxon or Europeans, in using the word Jews, he was referring the ethnic/religious group of Jewish peoples, and his use of the term blacks is a reference to all persons of African descent.

Why is it that all the groups named in the above excerpt are referred to using a proper noun; therefore, it is capitalized, except for blacks?

There can be only one justification for not capitalizing black, and that is if it is used as an adjective. Get it? As an adjective. Used to describe something. Namely a person's skin color.

None of the other groups were referred to by their skin color, so why African-Americans? I can only speculate on the lack of respect the ethnic group of African-Americans receive. It is quite obvious that when referring to African-Americans, ethnicity is not as great a factor as is skin color.

So what can this group of people do about this? Well, for starters, you can stop allowing other ethnic groups to define who you are or what you are supposed to look like, i.e. black. I am a brown skinned man. My ethnic group is African-American. It's that simple. Lower case "b," and capital "A's." My ethnicity is African-American, not brown.

Letters

A supreme dictator for UMass

As the Undergraduate Student Senate is presently in a confused state of turmoil and thus rendered quite powerless, I felt that since there is a need for an SGA leader that perhaps a new approach should be taken.

Therefore, let it be known that I hereby proclaim myself as supreme dictator of the University of Massachusetts student body.

Until they, (the senate and its constituents) can come up with a counter solution — one which may render me powerless by either a revolution of some sort by the students, or otherwise, I hereby take over and announce my first two doctrines:

1) I am your new student leader and my armies will smite you unless you continue to act in accordance with my policies.

These include the students now being ordered by me to continue to act in exactly the same way that they have been acting as students here at UMASS, but with thought.

2) Ask me anything and I'll comply provided that it pleases me too.

That's how it's been anyway.

Sincere thanks, your supreme dictator, Jeff Filipov.

P.S. If you aren't pleased with this, as I'm sure many of you are not, then at least it will get you to vote on the issues at hand more efficiently, quickly, organized, sensibly, and less apathetically, ignorantly, inconsiderately, and confused.

Already 1,700 students have complied in my support.

Jeff Filipov
Southwest

Forget the filibusters, let's just resolve the SGA presidential issue now

The Undergraduate Student Senate once again left the Student Government Association president's office empty and without a solution as to how to fill the vacancy.

One solution seems apparent ... follow the SGA Constitution and the Student Supreme Court. The court states that co-presidents-elect Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff cannot be ratified. The senate took a first step by issuing an order that states that Rabinowitz and Silkoff cannot use the title or office of SGA president.

The next was to clarify the ambiguity of the SGA Constitution. The constitution states that there can be a president and a student trustee, or one person can hold both offices. Notice how president is in the singular form.

"But it doesn't say anything about co-presidents." Exactly, it doesn't. Since they are not designated, they are not allowed. By adding a "co-" in front of the term president, the Constitution is being changed. Until there is an amendment stating otherwise, co-presidents are not allowed.

The last request is that new elections be held. At the last senate meeting (Nov. 9) it was decided that the motion calling for the election is out of order. Why? The other suggestions are taken care of, why not follow through with the Student Supreme Court's recommendations? Get Rothman not to "point of order" until he's blue in the face and Jay Festa to get his faction under control. Suspend the rules after roll call to have both sides draw up legislation for new elections and then vote to enact that legislation. If anything is resolved at the next senate meeting, let it be this, so the student body can be resolved of this issue once and for all.

Mt. Holyoke chair suspended

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The chairman of the English department at Mount Holyoke College has been suspended as a result of sexual harassment charges filed against him by a student.

James Ellis was suspended by Holyoke President Elisabeth Kennan on Nov. 2 following a brief investiagtion, according to the Mount Holyoke News.

The student, whose name was not released, submitted a written complaint to affirmative action officer Katharine Stevens, the newspaper reported.

Richard Johnson, an English professor at Mount Holyoke, has been named acting head. The newspaper reported that Ellis' students were told that Ellis was on "medical suspension."

Anti-smoking advocates to push for legislation to protect minors

BOSTON (AP)– Anti-smoking advocates and lobbyists said yesterday they would step up their attacks on the tobacco industry, as as ground-breaking legislation aimed at protecting minors comes under consideration in the Massachusetts Senate.

The state Legislature is scheduled to consider at its next formal session a bill requiring tobacco companies to print a warning on all cigarette packs that it is against the law to sell tobacco to minors.

"Our hope is that Massachusetts will take the lead in this effort to protect the health and well-being of the nation's young," said Dave Altman of the Stanford School of Medicine in Palo Alto, Calif. He was one of five Stop Teenage Addiction to Tobacco board members who met here to discuss strategy to prevent the illegal sale of tobacco to minors.

"We're looking to have the sale of tobacco to kids treated just like the sale of alcohol to kids. That is, just don't do it," said Richard A. Daynard, a professor at Northeastern University's School of Law and chairman of the Tobacco Products Liability Project.

The group said studies in California have shown that in cases where a printed reminder that it is illegal to sell tobacco products to minors is displayed, sales were reduced by 70 percent.

"There are only six cigarette manufacturers in the United States, so it's going to be much easier to enforce the law against them than against thousands of mom and pop stores across the country," he said.

Edward L. Sweda, Jr., a lobbyist for the Group Against Smoking Pollution, said he would step up his campaign in the Legislature to see the mandatory warning label approved.

UMass has been making a Bataan Death March to next week's Atlantic 10 Tournament at Penn State University. The Minutewomen have played 10 straight road matches, losing six of those 10, and have played less than spectacularly in two consecutive weekend tournaments.

"We have really been struggling since the Temple match (their last home game 23 days ago)," UMass head coach Carol Ford said.

"We know we've been up and down and haven't been able to sustain any level of intensity. We've been on a real roller coaster," she said.

In the weekend's first match, UMass went five games with one of the top Division II teams in the country, Florida Southern.

"To beat them, we would have had to have been at our best. We had a really slow start. We just made a lot of mistakes," Ford said.

According to Ford, mistakes cost the Minutewomen the first game, but UMass then gave FSC a run by taking the next two games.

Leading two games to one, UMass couldn't control Florida in the next two games. FSC only allowed UMass 12 points in the final two games.

"In the fifth game Florida was all over us," Ford said.

On Saturday, UMass was forced to play three consecutive matches. The first, C.W. Post was the most distressing for Ford and the Minutewomen.

"As far as intensity and quality of play, this was our worst match of the entire tournament. We really should have beaten them," Ford said.

UMass won the first game fairly handily but lost the next two by the same heartbreaking score — 15-17. That was enough to morally deflate UMass as it lost its next game 7-15, dropping the match 3-1.

"They did a whole lot of tipping and we had a hard time passing off the tips," Ford said.

"I think everybody was a little down," for the first game against Navy, Ford said of UMass next opponent. The Minutewomen were soundly pounded by Navy in the first.

UMass, however, had the last laugh. The Minutewomen bobbed up and down, winning the second, fourth and fifth games for the 3-2 victory over the Midshipmen.

Again, UMass was forced to fight the roller coaster style of play. Although they won the match, the Minutewomen collected only six points in the two games they did lose.

"Against New Haven [UMass' last match], in comparison to the other matches, we played great," Ford said.

The Minutewomen stole the first game from UNH, dropped the next two, and set itself up for a fourth game battle.

New Haven [the tournament champion] had gone the entire tournament without a loss. UMass pushed UNH to 14-16 in the fourth game, but as was UMass luck all weekend, it wasn't enough.

"I thought we were going to pull it off and have a real shot of winning that fifth game," Ford said. "We did a great job of serving and blocking."

For now, UMass needs to put all the pieces together with only five days to go until the A-10s.

My first time tutoring was a night to remember. My student was something called Bone Crusher Reed, a.k.a. Billy Jo, defensive tackle for the football team.

I had the shock of my life when he answered his dorm room door. He was about six foot seven...in diameter. And when he shook my hand, I thought I'd never get it back.

So there I was, face-to-knee with the big man on campus, wondering how I was going to relate American Literature to The Hulk.

But then he pulled out a can of Orange Cappuccino. I was shocked! Could it be that this tough jock liked its delicate taste? And when Bone Crusher brought out the bone china, I was beyond belief.

Reading the expression on my face, he said, "What can I say? I like it. The Café Francais is pretty good, too." Well, who's going to argue, I thought. As we sipped our Orange Cappuccino, I discovered that Billy Jo loves reading novels; his only problem was poetry. So I gave him tips on reading Emily Dickinson, and he gave me a copy of Ann Beattie's "Falling in Place."

All I could think was, Dad's never going to believe this!

Twin's Society stale; Mann too maudlin; Sure's cover too close

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Staff

UB40 with Chrissie Hynde "Breakfast In Bed"
This winning combination that brought us the 1985 hit "I Got You Babe" have joined forces once again. UB40, masters at pop reggae, craft a sound that highlights the light falsetto of lead singer Alie Campbell and the rich voice of Pretenders front woman Chrissie Hynde. Add to this a terrific horn section and a beat that never stops and you have yet another great UB40 single.

Thompson Twins "In The Name Of Love '88"/ Information Society "Walking Away"
After hearing these two song it's easy to tell where the Information Society get their inspiration from. Already a huge hit on the club charts, "In The Name Of Love '88" is a revamped, re-released remix of the Twin's 1981 hit from their new greatest hits album. The Minneapolis band Information Society falters by comparison to their British counterparts. "Walking Away" isn't as solid as the band's first hit "What's On Your Mind (Pure Energy)," and ends up a disappointing follow-up for such a promising band.

Mirandolina (Lee Anne Hutchinson) and Baron Ripifratta (Michael Riseberg) share a lovers' toast in the UMass Dept. of Theater production of Mirandolina by Carlo Goldoni opening Tuesday in the Curtain Theater. Call 545-2511 for tickets.

'til Tuesday "Believed (You Were Lucky)"
After a grand debut in 1985 with "Voices Carry," this Boston-based band virtually faded away. The former foursome are now a duo, but their melodious harmonies still remain thanks in part to the moody, inspiring vocals of lead singer Amiee Mann. Despite this, the song will most likely fade away with the others due to the usual gloomy, bitter lyrics that seem to turn up in most 'til Tuesday singles.

Cheap Trick "Ghost Town"
How fortunate we are that these late 70's rock relics have staged a successful comeback, now a whole new generation is able to suffer through their dime-a-dozen style. "Ghost Town" is a semi-ballad that's about as soothing as a bed of nails and dull beyond words. This cliche tune really is a cheap trick.

Hazel Dean "Turning Into Love"
This defunct disco singer has made quite a come back with the help of producers Stock, Aitken, and Waterman. It is true that most SAW productions sound similar, (such as Kylie Minogue, Rick Astley, and Banarama) but "Turning Into Love" breaks the traditional SAW mold. The catchy lyrics and Dean's light voice seem to recall the girl-group sound turning this song into a pleasant surprise.

Artists discuss Gallery show

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Two professors from the UMass art department, Jack Coughlin and Rosanne Retz, are holding a showing of their recent works done while on sabbatical last fall in the Herter Art Gallery.

Coughlin's exhibit, entitled "Friends and Other Strangers" is a series of portraits done of friends and colleagues done in pencil and watercolor.

"I began with these drawings of my mother last spring and I just continues from life," Coughlin said. "I just wanted to do a series of drawings from life and see how many I could do in a six-month period." Coughlin said he completed over 100 works to date, but plans to continue to series. Most of the portraits were done in one sitting, but Coughlin said, "Sometimes I have to do two or three drawings before I get it right." Often the last drawing is the best, he told me.

Coughlin said, "I tell people when I draw them that it is a hit or miss thing. I don't know if I can get a likeness or not." I found the eyes and hands in Coughlin's portraits added insight into the personalities of the subjects. Coughlin explained, "I think next to the head, the hands are the most expressive. The hands can express a lot, or we think they can express a lot."

The individual titles of Coughlin's works consist of the subjects' names and occupations. "I put down the occupations," he said, "so it isn't just a series of mug shots. They help the viewer to understand the drawings in some cases."

Coughlin is best known as a printmaker and sculptor. Permanent collections of his works can currently be seen at the Metropolitan Museum and the Museum of Modern Art in New York, as well as the National Collection of Arts in Washington.

Rosanne Retz, best known for her printmaking using the technique of lithography, currently teaches printmaking a UMass. Her exhibit is entitled "Recent Works on Paper."

Retz's works are very different from Coughlin's. Hers are abstract and highly colorful, with a few peices done in black and white. These black and white pieces, Retz said, were created by using acid tint on stone. Retz explained that in this process she draws on stone, starting with a black surface. "I create the image by painting on brush-fulls of acid gum arabic mix," she said. The varying shades of gray and black depend on the strength of the acid. The result is and amazing illusion of texture.

The colorful works are also a treat to the eye, with their misty, glittery, soft surfaces and subtly shifting shades of color blending together and separating before the eye.

All the works, Retz said, were "based on the land where I live in Shutesbury; mainly on a road that is adjacent to our house." Each of the works in the exhibit are related, and with each successive piece, Retz said she tried to explore the subject further.

"Friends and Other Strangers" by Jack Coughlin, and "Recent Works on Paper" by Rosanne Retz, will be at the Herter Gallery through Nov. 23. Gallery hours are Monday-Friday, 11 a.m. - 4 p.m. and Sunday 2 p.m. - 5 p.m.

No Mercy for those affected by atom bomb

By RICH A. BOUCHER JR.
Collegian Correspondent

On Thursday, Nov. 10, despite a small second night turnout, audiences were treated to a fantastic performance of No Mercy by the Amherst College Department of Theater and Dance. A play concerning the wide-ranging effects and the ethical dilemma of the development of the atom bomb, No Mercy was written by Constance Congdon and directed by Michael Birtwistle.

No Mercy is a look at the effect of the 1945 testing of the atom bomb on the life of Roy, a soldier who, while on watch at the testing site is blinded in one eye when his goggles shatter. The play switches from scenes of 1945 to 1985, with a much older and affected Roy accompanied by his wife Ramona. Running in between the scenes throughout the play is J. Robert Oppenheimer, who observes the ripple effect of his experiment, as he tries to remember where he's seen Roy before, not remembering Roy as the young soldier.

Playing the elder Roy, Homer Robinson did a spectacular job depicting an aged man. The play shifts from Roy and Ramona's life to the lives of Adam and Jane, Adam being a modern counterpart to the young Roy, equally unquestioning of his duty and equally as faithful in his work. Adam and Jane are parallels to Roy and Ramona. The direction seemed a bit busy at times, as there were often several things going on at the same time on stage. While Ramona speaks, Jackie (a present day televangelist) seems to answer her as she chatters away about the Rapture, the concept of Christ delivering the faithful up to Heaven. Ironically, Roy wants to sing a song called "I Saw The Light" on the show.

The play questions Roy's faith, Oppenheimer, and us. The question is one of ethics as Oppenheimer, throughout the play, struggles with the conflict between progress and the means to make it, and the consequences on humankind it can have. "Oppie" tries to tell Roy at the end that he only wanted to gain knowledge and insight.

Pure knowledge, he stresses, is not bad. The question he asks of Roy is: "When you come to an open door, and there is a line of people waiting to go through behind you, don't you go through it?" The character of Oppenheimer seems only to want to apologize for the devastation of lives, and for the shaking of Roy's faith in God. This is a play full of irony, humor, and drama. It is challenging and entertaining. Oppenheimer's last word on stage is "sorry," to a little lost boy, because he can't stay behind and help him. He has to go on.

Tracy Chapman "Baby, Can I Hold You?"

On both sides of the Atlantic, Tracy Chapman has had phenomenal success with her debut album. This third release from that album is yet another masterpiece of modern folk music. Her rich alto vocals and skillfully played acoustic guitar combined with the thoughtfully written lyrics create yet another sensational single for this Massachusetts native.

Al B. Sure "Killing Me Softly"

Just when you thought every song ever written has been remade within the past two years, surprise! Al B. Sure has remade the 1973 Roberta Flack "Killing Me Softly." Besides a few minor alterations, the song doesn't sound much different from the original. Sure's mellow, laid back voice is adequate for such 70's fluff, but the overall effort is no better than mediocre.

STRONG PERSUADER — Jon Z. Bowser jams with his band Strong Waters at The Hatch Monday. The Robert Cray/Rolling Stones-influenced trio paid a visit to UMass from the Boston circuit, where they have been playing for much of the year. Highlights of the upbeat peformance included Cray's "I Guess I Showed Her," off of Strong Persuader, as well as an original blues song with an Irish twist.

Pastorick got the Minutemen on the board with a 6-yard touchdown run with 3:53 left in the first half. The Wildcats then drove to the UMass 2, only to see McKeown stop Pete Lombardi cold on a 4th-down-and-1.

"That play was out of a Hollywood script," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "It was the difference between us going into halftime tied, and us going in with 85 guys yelling and screaming."

Villanova coach Andy Talley said, "I thought the way the game was going, that on the 1-yard line, we were confident that we'd score. But UMass was playing really well. They just stopped us."

It was not the last big play the UMass defense would make. At the end of the third quarter, McKeown's interception and 4-yard return gave the Minutemen the ball at the Villanova 31.

Seven plays later, tailback Kevin Smellie leaped in from the 1-yard line, and Silvio Bonvini's extra point made it 14-0.

"We capitalized on turnovers and that was the difference," said Palazzi, who threw for 154 yards and was UMass' leading rusher with 67 yards.

The Wildcats put together a 7-play drive that was capped off by 21-yard pass from Schulz to Robert Brady, but Tom Withka missed the extra point.

Following a UMass fumble, the Minutemen got the ball back when Sean Cummings picked off a Schulz pass at midfield. Moments later, with 5:14 left, Bonvini put the final nail in the coffing with a 38-yard field goal to ice it, and was carried off the field by Palazzi.

"It feels awesome," Bonvini said. "I knew it was a big kick even before I went out there. I'll always remember my teammates holding me in the air after I kicked it. That will always stay with me."

The win in their final home game will stay with all the seniors.

"The way I see it, there are no seniors on this team," Robar said. "Everyone is equal and I'm sure this win is as important to everyone else on the team as it is to the seniors."

A win next week would be even more important, and none of the Minutemen are looking past New Hampshire.

"I seriously feel that if we look at anything but taking care of ourselves, we are doing ourselves a disservice," Reid said. "I've been around here since 1978 and this is the hardest working group, bar none. They love to play football. They would play in a drafty barn, because they love to play. And I want people to appreciate this team for that, not because of the seven wins."

The hard work has shown through most of the season. And the appreciation was never more evident than late Saturday afternoon in the UMass locker room.

UMass beats UConn

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team picked up its third straight victory of the young season Saturday, beating the University of Connecticut, 155-126, in Storrs, Conn.

Due to limited space, we are unable to print the full details of the match, but look for a complete rundown of the meet in tomorrow's issue of the Collegian.

With the win, the Minutewomen are now 3-0 on the season.

Football beats Villanova in home finale

Minutemen get key conference victory, 17-6

Senior linebacker John McKeown picked up his 500th career tackle Saturday as the Minutemen beat Villanova, 17-6 at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

A familiar face on defense was missing, and an old face that hadn't been seen in weeks was back on offense.

But in the end, it was the faces in the University of Massachusetts football locker room that told the story best after the Minutemen's 17-6 victory over Villanova University Saturday.

"It's a great win," said Dave Palazzi, one of 19 seniors who played their final game at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. "We needed a big, big win and we went out and got it done."

The Minutemen, missing injured cornerback Garrick Amos but aided by the return of fullback David Mitchell, moved back into a tie with Delaware for first place in the Yankee Conference at 5-2. The Wildcats, 5-4-1 overall, drop to 4-3 in the conference.

UMass got some help from the outside as well, as Boston University handed the University of Connecticut its third conference loss to clear some air at the top of the standings.

"Whatever happens, happens," said senior Nick Salmon. "I'll think about this one today and once we hit the weight room Sunday, I'll start thinking about New Hampshire. They knocked us off last year and we owe them one."

If the Minutemen beat New Hampshire Saturday in Durham, and Delaware loses to BU, UMass would win the conference title and gain a playoff appearance.

But a win over the Wildcats would be the second step. UMass took care of the first big step two days ago. Despite the fact that Villanova gained 524 yards in the game, UMass improved to 7-3.

"We did what we had to do," said senior defensive tackle Steve Robar, who was one of the game captains Saturday. "The defense held together one more time."

The Minutemen took advantage of three interceptions and stopped Villanova on two key fourth-down plays to help preserve the win.

Senior linebacker John McKeown had one of the interceptions and also registered his 500th career tackle when he stopped Wildcat quarterback Kirk Schulz on a 4th-and-1 play early in the second quarter.

"I started here [Alumni Stadium] with a bang and I went out with a bang," McKeown said. "The interception was just reaction. If I had gone to the fullback like I should have, I wouldn't have gotten it.

"Getting 500 tackles is nice, but we won and that's all that matters. Besides, with the linemen I had this season, I couldn't help but get my 500th tackle. If I miss tackles it's my own fault."

McKeown had a game-high 16 tackles, while free safety Pat Doran had 15 and linebacker George Karelas added 14 for the Minutemen.

But Villanova tailback Jeff Dingle managed to slip through the grasp of the Minuteman defense for 119 yards rushing.

UMass' ground game got a boost from Mitchell, who returned Saturday with 8 carries for 32 yards after missing five games with an ankle injury.

"There's no question we missed Dave and Jim [Pastorick, who missed three games with an ankle injury]," Palazzi said. "We're not as strong without them."

Field hockey falls to Northeastern

"We had a ton of chances and when you play a championship team, you have to capitalize," Hixon said.

But this was not like any other day for UMass. Maybe, the biggest play of the game was made by Hixon herself. She opted not to start junior forward Kathy DeAngelis who has been UMass' leading scorer for the last two years. She led the Minutewomen this season with 11 goals and three assists but did not enter yesterday's game until there was six minutes left in the first half.

"We started a little different lineup today to give us a little bit of speed," Hixon said.

Sophomore Elise McDevitt, who has scored five goals this season, replaced DeAngelis in the starting lineup.

The Minutewomen had two very good chances to capitalize coming down the stretch, down 2-1. With about six minutes left, UMass drew a penalty corner.

Senior co-captain Ruth Vasapolli hit the ball out to senior Julie Stuart at the top of the circle who drilled a shot toward the bottom left hand corner of the net.

Northeastern goaltender Amy Westerman extended her right leg to the limit and kicked the ball out, saving the game for the Huskies, now 15-2-2 and heading to the Final Four at the University of Pennsylvania next weekend.

UMass drew another penalty corner about 20 seconds later. Stuart again received a pass at the top of the circle and hit a low hard drive that missed wide left of the net.

"The penalty corners are the bread and butter of this game," Hixon said. "And we just didn't execute."

The Minutewomen had 19 penalty corners in the game, yet were only able to convert on one of them.

That play came at 15:17 of the second half when Vasapolli slid a pass out to Stuart. Stuart penetrated down the middle of the circle and dished off to freshman Dawn Trumbauer who beat Westerman to cut the NU lead to 2-1.

UMass had dug itself a hole by breaking down late and breaking down early, late in the first half and early in the second half.

With only four minutes left in the first half, the game was scoreless. But when NU's Jennifer Deo walked in on UMass goaltender Cindy Cox, that would change. Deo flipped a shot to the left of Cox into the goal to give the Huskies a 1-0 lead.

Northeastern carried that momentum into the early stages of the second half. At 2:25 of the second, Debbie Sweeney scored what proved to be the clinching goal when Anne Mucera hit her with a pass right in front of Cox. Sweeney tucked it home and gave the Huskies a 2-0 lead.

"We turned the ball over a couple of times in crucial situations," Hixon said. "Our goalkeeper made a mistake and they made it happen."

Women's soccer ousted by Wisconsin, 2-1

Powers was one of six seniors who saw their collegiate careers end in the rain yesterday. Carla DeSantis, Cathy Cassady, Beth Roundtree, Sue Montagne and Sue Cooper all fell just short in their attempt to reach the Final Four one last time.

"I can't name a player who had a bad game," Rudy said. "It was a helluva game to watch."

The game was won by the Badgers in the early stages of each half. UMass dominated play for most of the game, but dominance doesn't always show up on the scoreboard.

Wisconsin got on the board just 11:03 into the game. A corner kick from the left side bounced around in the box and got into the left side of the net. Senior defender Laura Keinz got credit, although it appeared the ball went in off a UMass defender.

"We were flat early. We got a late start," Rudy said. He admitted that the fact that UMass hadn't played in two weeks could have been a factor in that.

But the Minutewomen were able to get a big goal before the half to tie it. Roundtree served a corner kick from the right side into the box. After it bounced around a bit, Cooper got control of the ball and dished it inside to Powers, who struck it just inside the left post with 9:46 left in the half.

The first half ended at 1-1, with UMass getting a tremendous boost from Powers' goal. Amazingly, Powers was playing with a bad knee, injured in practice last week.

Coming out for the second half, the Minutewomen didn't let down a bit, pressuring Wisconsin's end early and often. They missed a pair of chances to go up, as Powers just missed getting her second off a long chip feed from April Kater, and then goalkeeper Heather Taggart just beat Roundtree to the ball of a serve from Cassady.

Then, came the killer.

Wisconsin, on its first trip deep into the UMass zone in the second half, got a free kick from the left side. The serve went into the box, and a huge scramble ensued. Both goalkeeper DeSantis and Cassady tried to clear the ball, but as the wet ball squirted out of DeSantis' hands, senior midfielder Patty Wirth got on it and pushed it inside the right post.

Both Wisconsin goals came off of re-starts, a problem area for the Minutewomen all year.

"They got their two free kicks and got two goals. On of our weak spots is defending re-starts," Rudy said. "They caught us on it. They got us on a corner and then a big free kick. We knew it was coming."

Despite the goal, UMass didn't let up its assault, picking up numerous other chances until game's end. But Taggart and the Badger defense came up big time and again, and the trip to the Final Four was in hand for Wisconsin.

"If they had tied it again, we'd have really been in trouble," said Wisconsin coach Greg Ryan. "They really had us rattled."

In the end, it comes down to a big nemesis for UMass all season, the lack of ability to finish. Each time the opportunity presented itself, UMass was unable to get the ball in the net.

"Finishing is our weak point. We created a lot of danger, but not a lot of chances," Rudy said.

And the Wisconsin defense can take a bow for its part in that.

"Their defenders were tough. They had a very sound plan and executed real well," Rudy said. "Tactically, they played an excellent game."

"We work so much on team defense," Ryan said. "We organized our defense to not give up high-percentage shots, but they created some good shots."

But this time, for the first time in six years, it just wasn't enough.

Guiness foils postcard effort

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

What started two weeks ago as an act of charity and community service has turned into a lesson in frustration for sophomore Steven LeDuc, a pledge of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

LeDuc, a resident assistant in Wheeler Residence Hall, saw the poster proclaiming the wish of David, a 9-year-old luekemia patient from Florida, to set the world record for the amount of mail received by an individual.

All was well until LeDuc discovered the Guiness Book of World Records would not accept any new records for amount of mail received. David Boham, American editor of Guiness, said the record is for unsolicited mail only. Because David is actively seeking support, he is ineligible for the record, he said.

LeDuc said he called Guiness, but the editors there would not change their position.

Hank Aaron, the baseball player, holds the current record, according to Guiness.

LeDuc said he then contacted the Make-a-Wish Foundation, a non-profit organization for terminally ill children who were sponsoring David, to inform them of the record book's decision not to accept the record, if attained. The foundation told him that David had already heard of the decision, and withdrew his wish, LeDuc said.

Richard Verville, director of the Western Massachusetts Make-a-Wish chapter, said the organization will sponsor a different wish for David at his request.

The fraternity set up a table on the Campus Center Concourse last week for students to sign post cards and make donations to Make-a-Wish. LeDuc also talked to American Greetings, a greeting card company, and arranged for them to donate hundreds of post cards, he said. Even Chancellor Joseph Duffey got into the act, coming to the fraternity's table Tuesday to sign a post card and make a donation.

"For [David] to get tons and tons of post cards would be a really good moral boost for him," LeDuc said. "It's a sad thing that he couldn't get his wish."

Verville said, "David has elected to rethink it and come up with another wish."

"However, from the bottom of my heart, I'm saying that if he gets cards every day, he'll have something to look forward to," Verville said.

Regardless of whether or not David reaches his goal, Sigma Phi Epsilon plans to honor him with a plaque or trophy, according to chapter President Adam Smith.

"For 25 cents, you're going to make a lonely boy very happy," Verville said, urging people to keep the cards going.

SGA co-presidents-elect, opponents to debate on WMUA show tonight

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Presidency will be the topic on tonight's SGA Today radio show on WMUA-FM 91.1. Guests will be Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz, SGA co-presidents-elect, and two of their opponents, conservative Senators W. Greg Rothman and Brian Darling.

Senators Val Vagoda and Todd Lever will host the show, which runs from 8:30-9:30 p.m.

The SGA Presidency has been hotly debated since Silkoff and Rabinowitz won a majority of votes in the election last March. The Undergraduate Student Senate has yet to ratify the election because some senators have interpreted the SGA Constitution to bar co-presidents from holding office.

Rothman and Darling have called for a new election in which only single candidates will be allowed to run. Last week Senate Speaker Robert Fadel ruled that new elections would not be allowed.

With frequent shouting matches at senate meetings, tensions have run high in the controversy. Asked if it was wise to put the two warring factions in the same room, Lever said, "I don't foresee any problems, they're all civil people.

"The reason we're having these four people on the show is so the student body can get an idea of what the issues are in the SGA presidency controversy, and if there is any common ground from which a compromise can be worked out," Lever said.

Lever encouraged student participation. "I'd like to encourage students to call-in to the program," he said. "These people are our student leaders, and they should have answers as to why the SGA presidency has been an issue for such a long time."

Investigation of racist remarks closed; offender not identified

An investigation of a Physical Plant worker who broadcast racially derogatory remarks has ended with no one being identified as the culprit.

According to James Langley, associate vice chancellor for University Relations and Development, the investigation was closed Oct. 26 by Affirmative Action because of a lack of evidence.

Physical Plant Director Roger Cherewatti said he felt the investigation was fair and based on the evidence.

Cherewatti said he will be forming a committee which will develop a human relations policy. He hopes to have the committee formed by the end of November, and a policy formed three of four months subsequent.

Amherst town meeting limits growth of fraternities, sororities

By LISA JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

By a single vote, Amherst town meeting last night passed a zoning change that will stop fraternity/sorority growth along North Pleasant and Phillip streets.

With a two-thirds vote needed, town meeting members voted 103-51 to pass Article 17.

After the vote several people, including both town meeting members and members of the Greek system, were suggesting a re-vote.

Board of Selectmen Chairwoman Edith Wilkinson said town meeting members may reconsider the article during the current town meeting if they choose to. Ninety-seven members were not present for the vote which could change the outcome of the article.

According to Wilkinson, only members who were not present to vote and members who voted against the article could recast their votes.

The passed article will rezone North Pleasant and Phillips streets from campus residence to general residence. The change will grandfather existed fraternities and sororities but will not allow any new properties to become Greek houses.

Seymour Friedman, an Allen Street resident, said passing the article would help curb the noise from weekend parties, parking on crowded narrow streets and on front

ACLU fights bad image

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

President-elect George Bush's campaign presented the American Civil Liberties Union in a false light, according to the co-founder of the University of Massachusetts chapter of the ACLU.

UMass student Jose Afonso, who helped found the chapter three weeks ago with Stefanie Krantz and Aiden Miller, said Bush's criticism of Gov. Michael Dukakis' membership in the union was unfounded.

"A lot of people are frightened and concerned," Afonso said, "that a president-elect would attempt to connect the American Civil Liberties Union to a left-wing, extremist, out-of-the-mainstream movement, when in reality the ACLU is very American and is an ardent supporter of the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Constitution."

Founded in 1920 by Roger Baldwin, the ACLU is the largest law firm in the country, Afonso said. The union has fought for the desegregation of schools, the decriminalization of abortion and the publication of books like James Joyce's Ulysses. The union defended Lt. Col. Oliver North's right to take the Fifth Amendment during the congressional hearings in 1987.

According to an ACLU press release, the union defends "the right to express unpopular views — in the belief that once the government is empowered to violate anyone's rights it will use that power against all of us."

The UMass chapter has not yet applied to the University for Registered Student Organization status, Afonso said.

Student Senator W. Greg Rothman said he welcomes the A.C.L.U. to campus, but does not agree with what he calls their defense of child pornography or their objections to the tax-exempt status of the Catholic church.

"If they stick to issues like freedom of speech, then I have no problem with having them on campus," he said.

Rothman said he expects the ACLU will work to bring Rev. Louis Farrakhan to the University since the Distinguished Visitors Program is not sponsoring the civil rights leader's visit. Afonso agreed.

"The [Ku Klux Klan] should have its right to march or speak as well as should Rev. Farrakhan," Afonso said. "We believe that civil liberties extend to all individuals in organizations regarding their Constitutional rights. That often means, however, that unfavorable and often distasteful material must exist. If we try to suppress ideas or material that is in opposition to the majority, we will effectively endanger opposing views."

Editor of The Christian Science Monitor resigns

BOSTON (AP) — Editor Katherine Fanning and two of her top assistants at the Christian Science Monitor resigned yesterday, saying a restructuring of the church-owned newspaper "means a serious weakening of its editorial substance."

Fanning was joined in her resignation by David Anable, managing editor, and David Winder, assistant managing editor of the paper, which has a Monday through Friday circulation of 170,000.

Fanning said in prepared remarks that the church had decided to cut the daily size of the newspaper to 16 pages form its current average of 28 pages, and to eliminate advertising.

"The increasing diversion of church funds from the Monitor to other media, the decision to downsize the paper and drastically cut its staff means the serious weakening of its editorial substance," she said.

Representatives of the church scheduled news conference yesterday to discuss changes at the newspaper, which has lost money for years but is widely respected by its readers and by the newspaper industry. Don Felheim, a spokesman for the church, said there would be no immediate comment on the changes at the paper.

Fanning said she also was protesting the decision to allow John Hoagland, the Monitor business manager, control over content, which was said "threatens the editorial independence."

Friends help slain man's family

CHICOPEE, (AP) — Nearly 75 friends gathered to renovate the home of a carpenter whose dream of fixing up his house ended with his stabbing death in August.

"Of course, the dream was shattered," said Ray Rokowski, father of the slain carpenter David Rokowski. "But then somebody thought, 'Why not finish his dream up?'"

"It's overwhelming," said Donna Rokowski, wife of the slain carpenter who lives in the house with her two children.

More than $8,000 was raised for the remodeling of the Montcalm Street house at a Polish American Civic Center Club dinner dance attended by 370 people Friday.

Friends and relatives began work at 7 a.m. Saturday and Sunday. Ray Rokowski said the group numbered 74 at one point on Saturday and helpers came from as far as Buzzards Bay.

Salvation Army running unique day-care center for the homeless

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The Salvation Army is operating a drop-in day-care center for homeless children near Central Square that is believed to be the only service of its kind in the state for the homeless.

The center, which opened last year and was expanded to a five-day-a-week operation this fall, is open from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and it gives parents a place to leave preschool children while they look for jobs or places to live.

"It was a blessing," said Diana Paiotto, 44, who placed her 3-year-old son, Andrew, in the center last winter while searching for an apartment.

Andrew often was sick, but shelters wanted him and his mother out by 8 a.m. He often cried, so secretaries in public welfare offices did not want this mother using telephones to call landlords if she brought Andrew along.

"I had not place to leave him, and in the winter, I couldn't be making phone calls with him there on the ground," she told the Boston Globe. "I couldn't call to get an apartment, which was the very thing we needed."

Moses Ware, 39, lives in a shelter with his son, Jason, 5. He uses the center to look for an apartment and a job, and he wishes the center were open longer. "Its really not enough time to get very far," he said. "I can't make any afternoon appointments either."

Jacqueline Kittle, director of the center, said it would like to say open longer and take in more children, but under state rules, it is limited to 10 children a day, and no child can attend more than six days a month.

The center offers it services free. It gets help from area business, foundations and the state Department of Social Services to pay expenses of approximately $60,000 a year.

Jacqueline Clarke, who runs a small day-care center four blocks for the Salvation Army told the Globe she is organizing area day-care centers willing to take in children of the homeless.

Sen. Kennedy says Dukakis should have emulated JFK

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — If Michael Dukakis had followed John F. Kennedy's example and embraced the term "liberal" early in his campaign, he would have won the presidential election, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said yesterday.

Speaking at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government, the 56-year-old Democrat maintained that "the liberal tradition of the Democratic Party is alive and well and strong in America" and "this election was eminently winnable."

About 250 students and faculty members jammed a semi-circular lecture hall for the speech, one of a weeklong series of events commemorating the 25th anniversary of President Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22, 1963.

"I know how my brother would have ridiculed the Republican attempts in the recent election campaign to make 'liberal'' a dirty word. They tried that trick in the 1960 election, too, and my brother rejected it out of hand," Kennedy said.

"He embraced the liberal label without hesitation. He didn't run away from it, he welcomed it, and he campaigned proudly under its banner.

"And I believe that if he had started campaigning that way a few weeks earlier, Mike Dukakis and not George Bush would be taking the oath of office next January as the next president of the United States."

Local senator promotes movement forcing business to build facilities

Support for child care bill sought in legislature

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Now that the presidential election is over, lobbyists for Massachusetts child care are once again pressing for support of the Child Care Linkage bill now pending in the state senate.

If enacted, the bill mandates all businesses and industries that construct buildings of more than 50,000 square feet to erect child care facilities either inside or in a nearby building.

Funding for the facilities is entirely the responsiblity of the employer, said Kate Mehr, aide to recently re-elected State Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst. Employers who are unable to provide adequate facilities will be required to contribute to a fund to expand day care in communities, she added.

Mehr said the bill is in the Senate Ways and Means committee, after being stalled for several months because of the Presidential race, budget conflicts, and the auto insurance bill.

Olver, who is chairman of the Taxation Committee and a member of the Senate Ways and Means committee, has sent letters to all senators and is targeting Ways and Means Chairwoman Patricia McGovern to help rally support, Mehr said.

"I am optimistic," she said. "I don't know if it will pass this year but we will refile it if it fails."

The need for child care in this state is increasing, Mehr said, adding that 2 out of 3 people in this state cannot find affordable, adequate child care.

"I feel strongly that the linkage bill is a solution," she said. "It [requires] the private sector to contribute to a problem it helped to create."

Mehr refused to predict when the twice-introduced bill will reach the committee floor, but said it has until the end of legislative session in early January to survive.

"We know very little of the agenda," she said. "But we're working very hard trying to lobby support."

In September, the House Ways and Means committee approved the bill, Mehr said, but only after adding several amendments and technical changes that contradict the original premise that the bill will save the state money.

One amendment added by the House allows a rental deduction to employers providing child care because they cannot use the space for offices.

A second amendment, the Dependent Care Assistant Program [DECAP], was also added in the revision. It provides a 100 percent tax deduction plus 10 percent tax credit to anyone providing child care to children under 11 years old.

Mehr said she is hopeful this year's budget constraints will force the Ways and Means committee to drop the amendments and restore the purpose of the bill.

lawns, and littering from empty beer cups after parties.

Friedman said the area residents have been trying to talk to the University of Massachusetts, Greek Affairs and the fraternities/sororities in the areas for the past three years without success.

"All the University says is they do not have very much control (over the houses) because they're not in UMass housing or on their property," he said.

Carlene Riccelli, director of Greek Affairs, spoke out against the change.

Riccelli said the houses have been established there as far back as 1915, the proximity to campus makes it a logical site for fraternities and the houses have contributed to the community.

Ricceli said Greek Affairs has started working with the residents and the Greek houses to solve the problems. Among the possible solutions are clean-up crews after weekend parties and parking restrictions in the area.

After the vote she said, "The vote was misguided because the issues presented tonight are not a zoning issue. They're not even considering the rooming houses and the residents who rent to students and don't live there."

Riccelli also said she has never been contacted by the residents directly when there is a problem. "They seem to call the police rather than talk to us."

Amer Syed, a member of the Interfraternity Council and Pi Kappa Alpha, said the fraternities have been working on the area's problems.

"We've organized neighborhood clean-up projects and we have our own parking lots, so the (parking) problem doesn't stem from us," he said

My fraternity spent $7,000 this year to beautify the front lawn and we're implementing noise restraints and quiet hours," Syed said.

Town meeting adjourned until tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. when they will meet at the Regional Junior High School auditorium.

Dukakis faces budget woes

By HILARY L. TRACY
Collegian Correspondent

"Mike Dukakis is coming back to Boston with a fair amount of baggage" as far as the state budget crunch is concerned, said Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, last week at a panel discussion sponsored by the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

The crisis must be resolved soon because as far as the budget is concerned, "there is no more free lunch — the legislature can no longer bail us out," Olver said.

Raising taxes may be the only solution, said Steve Wollmer, of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association. He said the recent elections "ignored the most pressing issues," the national deficit and the federal budget. "How to deal with a trillion dollar deficit without raising taxes is beyond me," he said.

Jim Braude, of the Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, said, "Tax equity is a critical component of good public policy."

"We can no longer look at taxes in a vacuum," he said, pointing out that people often vote against tax increases while voting for increased government spending.

10 years ago, Massachusetts had an average per capita income in comparison with other states and one of the highest tax rates, Olver said. Now the situation is reversed. "The shift is the hemorrhaging of the public sector," he said.

The problem now, Olver said, is "how do we raise monies adequately and fairly for public services?"

Braude said the Tax Equity Alliance has several strategies, including a truth in taxing plan which would require corporations to report their state tax statements. The group also supports tax cuts, he said.

The only revenue proposal sponsored by the Tax Equity Alliance would give $20 million in unclaimed bottle deposits to the state. However, this bill has yet to be passed by the state legislature.

If people want things to change, Braude said, they "have to start becoming tax literate and make their presence felt."

UMass grad arrested on assault charges Sunday

COLLEGIAN NEWS SERVICES

AMHERST — Dwayne D. Warren, former University of Massachusetts student and one of the leaders in last February's takeover of the New Africa House, was arrested and charged with indecently assaulting a 20-year-old UMass student Saturday.

Warren, 22, of Hillside, N.J., was arrested at 3:52 a.m. Sunday on College Street and charged with indecent assault and battery.

The UMass student reported at 4 p.m. Saturday, Warren assaulted her in the back room of a party they had attended in Swiss Village Apartments.

Warren, who graduated from UMass last May, is a graduate student at Rutgers University and had returned to Umass for the weekend, police said.

UMass arrested Warren's brother, Todd Warren, 21 also of Hillside, N.J., Sunday on charges of intimidating a witness.

Dwayne Warren was released on bail Sunday night, and both men pled innocent to their charges yesterday in Hampshire District Court. Todd Warren's case has been continued until Dec. 8, and was warned to stay away from the alleged victim. Information about Dwayne Warren's case could not be obtained at press time.

Police are still investigating the reports and are interviewing other people who attended the party.

Warren emerged as a leader among black students at UMass during the last school year, when a racial brawl after the 1986 World Series and the beating of two black students in February led to the six day takeover of the New Africa House.

Expert to lecture about faith and the Holocaust

By MARIA CRESPO
Collegian Correspondent

Dr. Emil Fackenheim will lecture at 7:30 tonight in Memorial Hall about the Holocaust in a speech titled "Fifty Years after Kristalnacht: Faith and the Holocaust."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of the Hillel Foundation at the University of Massachusetts, said he hopes Fackenheim will "help us to understand how this kind of persecution could take place, and also to help us understand what we can do so that the Jewish people, nor any other people, would not have to suffer that again."

November marks the 50th anniversary of Kristalnacht ("Night of Broken Glass"), the infamous anti-Jewish riots in Nazi Germany and Austria in 1938.

Fackenheim was in Germany during the period and described it as "the day that revealed to the whole world that the Nazi persecution of the Jewish people would stop at nothing." Fackenheim brings with him the story of the past and hopes we can learn enough to prevent any reoccurrence.

Fackenheim was born and raised in Germany and completed his Rabbinic Studies in Berlin in 1939. He continued his studies in Aberdeen, Scotland and Toronto, Canada, receiving his doctorate in philosophy.

Fackenheim was a professor of philosophy at the University of Toronto until he immigrated to Israel in 1983. He is presently a professor of Jewish Thought at the School of Overseas Students at Hebrew University. He has also received numerous honors for his many books, articles and reviews.

Perlmutter said of Fackenheim, "despite all the pain and anguish, he is affirming life.

Fulghum charms with crayons and cookies

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarden
By Robert Fulghum
Random House

I've never run across a book quite like this. Not only does it seem to be tailor-made for reading aloud, but I've yet to come across someone who hasn't been charmed by it.

By now you've probably seen the essay that this book derives its title from. It's appeared in Dear Abby numerous times, been reprinted in numerous magazines, and even been read on the U.S. Senate floor.

The book is a collection of short writings, pieces that Fulghum calls "uncommon thoughts on common things." To stop after reading one of them is about as easy as eating only one Dorito from a full bag.

Take, for example, Fulghum's essay on Crayola crayons. He writes about how we've probably all had a set at one time or another, and about how he gives them to people as gifts. "The adults always get the most wonderful kind of sheepish smile on their faces -- a mixture of delight and nostalgia and silliness . . . Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev used crayons, I bet."

Then there's the death of his washer and drier. "Five minutes later the dryer expired. Like a couple of elderly folks in a nursing home who follow one another quickly in death, so closely are they entwined."

Fulghum makes you smile. His writing never seems forced, never comes across as saccharine. What makes his writing both refreshing and charming is that he comes across as someone who is genuinely happy.

There's the essay about raking leaves and shoveling snow. Fulghum doesn't believe in either of these. He'd rather have "an Oriental carpet of red and yellow and green and brown." As for the snow, he'd rather spend his time making tape recordings of it so that he can use the tape to wrap Christmas presents.

Buy this book. It has a kind of quiet greatness that won over from page seven, where Fulghum talks about Kindergarden. What a wonderful world it would be, he writes, if we all had cookies and milk at three p.m. and took a nap; "or if all governments had a basic policy to always put things back where they found them and to clean up their own mess."

Dream's diversity comes to Iron Horse

By DEREK LEIF

Dream Syndicate guitarist Steve Wynn describes the band as "guitar rock and roll," and he doesn't like to get any more specific than that. Their latest album, Ghost Stories, features several different styles of music, and Wynn prefers to use moods rather than styles to define the band's sound.

"We play a big variety of moods, from soft to noisy to blues," said Wynn. "If I can get everything that makes me happy, angry, frustrated, and elated and feed that raw emotion into my guitar and amplifier, I know I've had a good night."

It's when you try to pin things down with Wynn that you get into trouble. Commenting on his favorite music, Wynn said "I've got a tape of traditional Greek folk music, so that's what I like this week."

Wynn also said that the band's different musical interests have an effect on each concert.

"Last night's set sounded like it was influenced by Ornette Coleman," said Wynn. "I don't mean to be pretentious or anything, but it just reminded me of some of his stuff. But then some nights, we we might sound like Hendrix."

Pink-like Paintbox; Waters back at Hatch

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

It's always good to hear from new bands, and one of the newest around these parts is Paintbox, who will play the Hatch this Saturday night at 9 p.m. Paintbox describe their musical style as "cosmic rock," and their free-flowing versions of Pink Floyd, Moody Blues, and Grateful Dead material should prove at least to be interesting, if not downright cool.

Right on the heels of their first single, a Grave Goods album is now in the works. More on this later.

Last Thursday night at Katina's, Eastern Wind, Split Decision and Mini-Bus Sandwich each played solid sets to an enthusiastic crowd made up in large part of band friends. Look for Split Decision to play Katina's again soon with the Maniax, while Mini-Bus headlines Sheehan's tomorrow night.

Local Vocal

On the subject of Katina's, this Saturday night, The Radiators (a personal favorite) take the stage. Their Cajun-cookin' rock is packed with up-beat danceable rhythms and "reach out and grab 'ya" lead guitar breaks. Also, in the "kinda cheesy tribute band" department, Physical Graffiti is at Katina's this Thursday. An incredibly popular attraction all over the state, Phys Graf's Led Zeppelin show is nothing short of astonishing in its impeccable musicality, stage presence and overall mood. If nothing else, it really makes you realize how great the real Zeppelin was in its early 70's heyday.

The Hampshire College Tavern, with its inexpensive admission and often free beer, is fast becoming one of the best places to catch a live band in action. This Friday night, The Lonely Moans and the zany Gidget Goes To Hell will be on the bill. Be sure to make this an option as you consider your plans for the weekend.

It was nice to have old favorites Strong Waters back on the Hatch stage last Monday night, even if the only original member is band founder Jon Z. Bowser. Perhaps we'll see more of them in the future.

Don't forget. Send any and all band info to Local Vocal, c/o Cosmo. Collegian 113 Campus Center. Or drop off stuff in the Arts/Living mailbox. Local Vocal also welcomes tapes and or records from area bands. Keep rockin'.

Velvet Jesus prepares to leave the Valley

By CHRISTOPHER PARK
Collegian Correspondent

The other day, I had the pleasant chance to interview Velvet Jesus; a somewhat notorious post-punk, "power-grunge" band from the Pioneer Valley. For over a year, the guys — Dave Ferry, Link, Dan Green and Rick Deming — have had the opportunity to play all the local clubs they've wanted, and have thus made the decision that they are ready to move on to bigger cities like Boston and New York.

Velvet Jesus regrets to have to leave a community where there are so many kids to play for, but explain that

Bush isn't the end of the world

"He lost."

"Yeah, I know," I said. "But, I mean, it's not like the world's about to end just because we elected George Bush.'

"Oh yeah? I wouldn't be so sure."

"Remember when Reagan got elected? Everyone said he'd push the button," I said. "Everyone thought he was a jerk — that Bonzo was smarter . . . not to mention a better actor."

"Yeah, and he's still a jerk. And now we have another jerk — with a jerkier jerk as his vice president. . . . Just like the Republicans to give us jerks to elect for president."

David R. Mark

"Well, we elected him, we've got to live with him 'til '92," I said. "And for our sake, I hope things go well for the country."

"Oh good."

"What?"

"Didn't you vote for the Duke?"

"Sure I did," I said. " But I'm a realist as well. I may have preferred Dukakis, but Bush won and I want things to go well."

"Why didn't you just vote for Bush? That way he'd have his mandate to ruin the environment, and say women can't have abortions. What happened to your Democratic values?"

"Look, you're missing my point," I said. "Even with Bush, life will go on. Plus there are things you and I can do for the sake of our Democratic values."

"Like what?"

"Well, we can . . . we can work in our communities — stuff like that," I said.

"You sound like a United Way commercial."

"Thanks."

"You almost sound like you've fallen for that '1,000 points of light' garbage.'"

"Well. . ."

"No! C'mon, you wrote about how stupid it was."

"No, I wrote how stupid it was for Bush to keep using it over and over again like it was a panacea for all of our worries," I said. "The idea itself isn't that bad. It's like that Michael Jackson song, Man in the Mirror, 'If you want to make the world a better place, take a look at yourself and make that change,' or whatever he sings. That makes sense to me."

"I can't believe you believe that '1,000 points of light' garbage. That's the problem with you moderates — you're so wishy-washy, flip-floppy — no wonder you voted for Gore in the primary."

"Hey, I liked Gore."

"You liked Dukakis, you liked Gore, now you like Bush — that makes a lot of sense."

"Hey, I don't like Bush," I said. "And I certainly don't like Quayle. But I'm not going to whine my way under a rock and hide for four years — blaming everything bad on the Republicans and not caring if the world ends. That's not the way I am — and that's not the way everyone should be. This is our country — the best one on earth — and if we elected Bush/Quayle, for better or for worse, we have to live with Bush/Quayle."

"Only one problem."

"What?"

"If Bush does a good job like you want, and we all work hard to make things go well, won't that make it harder for the Democrats in '92?"

Apathy allows senators to fail student body

Upon attending Wednesday night's senate meeting, I became concerned about the credibility of some of the senators. There seems to be a major discrepancy between what UMass students want and what these senators are doing. This meeting exemplified the quality of senators that we have elected.

If the ratification issue is examined carefully, one should question why it didn't receive two-thirds of the senators' vote. The vote was held to consider the ratification of last year's election. This didn't mean that if the election was ratified, then Silkoff and Rabinowitz would hold office. It shouldn't have been inferred that the vote was questioning the validity of co-presidents. On the other hand, had the senate been allowed to consider the ratification, it would have only acknowledged that an election took place. It would not have implied that we agreed or disagreed with the election's outcome.

It can be argued that the ratification should not have been considered because it was "out of order." The Student Judiciary decision, "On April 13, 1988 the campus-wide election was ruled unconstitutional by the Student Judiciary," was read at the beginning of the meeting. There is only one problem with this. Since that decision was made, the judiciary chose to issue a de nova hearing, which would allow a new hearing with new evidence. This implies that there was some uncertainty with the previous decision that was reached. The Student Judiciary did not have to accept the appeal. How should we base our decision on precedent that is still in question?

There are many students who are concerned with what's happening on this campus. Our senators have an obligation to represent us, and we have the duty to insist they do that. Do you know your senator? Do you know what he/she stands for?

Students who were appalled at the behavior exhibited in our senate meeting should get involved. We are letting our senators use their personal opinions to make decision which affect us all.

The fundamentals of life

The government robs the people

If you suddenly discovered you were an extra $10,000 in debt, you would probably not be happy. Now imagine everyone in the country has the same problem; that's the size of the national debt.

But wait, you're even more in debt — $700 and growing fast — because Social Security debt was omitted. Believe it or not, the $700 is as bad as the $10,000. The situation is like this:

Every year your employer sends the government seven weeks of your pay as Social Security (FICA) taxes. The FICA trust fund pays it to the sick, the disabled and the elderly. What's left is called a "surplus" — not that it is a surplus, but they call it that. By law, the treasury gives it to Congress, and in return gives the trust fund government bonds.

Rusty Denton

Now these aren't just any bonds. Unlike other US bonds, they can't be sold to the public, and can only be redeemed by the treasury. It's the same as if you wrote yourself a check and only you could act as the banker. Congress uses the funny bonds because they may want to renege on them some day without infuriating legitimate lenders, who buy other types of treasury notes.

Why, you may ask, would Congress renege on Social Security? Good question.

Okay, after they write themselves a check, Congress spends the FICA surplus. Social Security is the one tax that remains sacrosanct, so Congress uses it to bilk the taxpayer. In their second debate Dukakis said Bush would raid the trust fund (that is, the surplus), but in fact it's been raided ever since Lyndon Johnson ran out of legitimate funds to finance his Great Society and the Vietnam war. The trust fund for the elderly is perpetually empty; any reserves are provided by current taxes.

Bush calls this "a covenant between generations"; I call it congressional embezzlement of the national pension plan. At present the Social Security Administration owns about seven percent of the national debt in the form of those funny bonds. It's expected that in the future almost all of our debt will be represented in those bonds because FICA revenues from baby boomers will be so abundant.

That means when boomers retire expecting a return on their years of paying Social Security, their younger peers (who are far fewer in number) will have to pay off the equivalent of our entire national debt. That should worry you: today's college students are the post-baby boomers. One estimate says FICA taxes for people born after 1965 would approach half their incomes if we did that.

It will probably never happen. Washington may default on Social Security directly (remember those funny bonds?) or by changing guidelines for distribution. Or they could give deceitful payments by printing inflationary fiat money to pay old rates without cost-of-living allowances.

It's hard to say how Congress will respond, but the omens aren't good. Carter's Social Security chief faithfully defended the system until he re-entered private life, then started saying it was near collapse. Also, the treasury keeps three sets of books: the one for the public lists Social Security as an asset; the one for Congress lists it as a debt; the most detailed account required by law is crudely typed and photographically shrunk to illegibility, and contains no documentation for interpreting it (even Congress rarely sees it).

In a corporation this kind of financial operation would be a felony. A legitimate pension plan is supposed to garner enough money to give the elderly the ability to get through even the most economically unstable times. However, the premise of social security management is that we don't need reserves, and that the economy will remain stable. It's a policy that is destined to rob both you and your parents of a secure financial future.

Rusty Denton is a Collegian columnist

In other news. . .

The Dukakis campaign, for better or worse, never became cynical, says Jack Corrigan [director of operations for the Dukakis campaign]: "Dukakis doesn't just do what his pollster tells him. We had television commercials and photo opportunities. Those are all things we do, but at some level the thing the candidate represents is a set of beliefs.

"And if you trade that to win votes you've traded the integrity that is the core of the whole effort."

Dukakis and most of his high command were Harvard-educated lawyers.

Lawyers think in straight lines.

"The problem with Democrats is that they're afflicted with truth," says Swope. "but in television, which is the only way that people get their information, you have a medium which has its own language that lies and distorts."

they cannot continue to play here because of the lack of appropriate clubs. With the closing down of L'Oasis and the banning of Velvet Jesus from the Hatch (because of an incident where a girl received a cut above her eye during one of their shows), the band has been left with fewer places to play.

As bassist Dave Ferry puts it,"We've done enough that we can do here, but we've got more to give."

Guitarist Link explains,"The Pioneer Valley does not give us what we need." Yet let it be known, Velvet Jesus is not departing for good; they are simply expanding themselves. An eight-track demo tape, produced by Mark Miller of the band Sartora, has been completed and ready for sales distribution in local music stores. The five songs on the tape are all originals (with the exception of D. Faulkner's "Dig it Up," and a cover of Bob Marley and Peter Tosh's "Get Up, Stand Up") and have a raw, "punkish," "underground" feel to them.

With the exception of Rick "n' Roll" Deming, who is 18, the members of Velvet Jesus are in their 20's. Although each have different tastes and opinions towards things, they all share a common bond that keeps them together. As Link put it, "To me, (Velvet Jesus) is about good times and friendship;" and as Ferry states, "If other people enjoy what we're doing, then I'm psyched."

What is the meaning of Velvet Jesus? Well, the name was taken from a velvet painting of Jesus Christ; but I understand Velvet Jesus to be a band who is striving to achieve the hedonistic pleasures of life. As Deming states, "I want to be the ring-master; giving everybody the time of their lives."

Guitar guru Satriani puts talents to No. 11

By PAULA HOGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Dreaming No.11
Joe Satriani
Relativity Records

With the recent sucess of Surfing with the Alien, Joe Satriani is definitely one man who needs no formal introduction. After all, there isn't a whole lot left to question about a man whom Steve Vai quotes as being his mentor.

Best known as a guitar professor, Satriani has taught the likes of Alex Skolnick (Testament), Rick Hunolt (Exodus), Larry LaLonde (Possessed), as well as Kirk Hammett (Metallica). When it comes to his own playing, he has taken a period of 15 years to nurture and develop his craft to the point of pure perfection.

Picking up the guitar at age 14, Satriani established himself as an upcoming virtuoso at a very young age. But it wasn't the guitar that drew him to music. "I started out playing drums. At that age it was my way of being a brat. It wasn't until the day that one of my friends told me Jimi Hendrix died that I decided to play guitar. And since then I've stuck with it."

Moving to the fruitful musical city of Berkley, CA, in 1979, Satriani formed his first band—a power trio called The Squares. After an unsuccessful stint of about five years, Satriani left to pursue a solo career.

With the help of a credit card, Satriani released Not of this Earth in 1985. All instrumental, all guitar, it sold all of 300,000 copies. Not bad considering that albums of this nature rarely receive the kind of commercial success that they truly deserve. Hence, when it came time for the release of his second album (on Relativity Records), Surfing with the Alien, retailers weren't in a big rush to make space on their shelves.

Now, with a gold album and a recent tour with Mick Jagger under his belt, Satriani's newest assault on the musical masses is creatively titled Dreaming No.11. Recorded at the California Theater in San Diego, this live EP captures Satriani doing what has brought this Long Island native his fame and fortune—playing one mean guitar.

Combining inputs from bassist Stuart Hamm, who also has a solo release on Relativity titled Radio Free Albemuth, and drummer Jonathan Mover, of GTR fame, Satriani blazes through a performance that is sure to bring him yet even more recognition as a modern day guitar hero.

For those who weren't fortunate to see Satriani on his summer tour of America, this is a definite must for your listening pleasure. Side one consists of a studio track that was initially released on a soundpage for Guitar Player magazine, "The Crush of Love." With a new mix, a catchy beat and a very strong pulse, Satriani's playing sails with such velocity that it entices you into his world of completely mesmerizing riffs.

Side two unleashes three of Satriani's finest creations. From Kurt Vonnegut's Cat's Cradle comes "Ice 9,"an unforgettable nine minute version of "Memories," and a grand finale ending with "Hordes of Locust."

Satriani's performance is solid and ultimately captivating. In the end, the only thing you'll be screaming for is more. What this musical genius intends to do next, only time will tell. But, until then, Dreaming No.11 should keep all avid Joe Satriani fans very content.

McCloy's trash not worth relishing; Velocity too vacuous

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

Velocity
By Kristin McCloy
Random House

Trashy novels are like sex: if you fall asleep during either of them or just sort of stop and laugh while muttering "this is awful," chances are you're not having a good time.

I wanted Velocity to work. Really I did. I've got a lot of work to do this semester, and a nice lightweight book full of lust and sex would have been great. Unfortunately, Velocity is 256 pages of sluggish, clunky and boring writing that is at times unintentionally hilarious.

Most of the time it's just boring.

Velocity - for those of you who care - is about Ellie, a young New Yorker who spends her summer in the North Carolina town of her childhood. She's there because her mother has died, and she wants to help her father cope with the loss.

Within the first fifteen pages of the book, we learn of Ellie's method of coping: she gets involved in an obsessive affair with Jesse, a half-Cherokee, motorcycle-riding, part-time member of the Hell's Angels.

That's it. Well, not quite: there's an occasional mention of Dec, Ellie's boyfriend from New York. He worships the ground Ellie walks on, and Ellie likes him a lot, but she'd rather sleep with Jesse even though she feels guilty about it. Then there's the plot development about Jesse dealing guns and speed . . .

Enough. I'm beginning to get flashbacks, reminders of segments in which one suspects that McCloy was embarassed to write them. Think I'm kidding? Check out page 78: "It's in Jesse's silence that I sense the purity of his spirit; in his silence it appears and I see it the same way I can see the shape of his skull, made up of clean, elegant lines. . ."

It gets worse from there. Most of the sex scenes had my friends — male and female — laughing out loud when I read it to them. On page 18, we get: ". . .then we're breathing together, into each other, carbon dioxide sweet poison makes my head light—I come with head hanging off the roof's edge, my fist in my mouth to keep from screaming."

Please, no more. I want to forget this book. Spare me. Spare yourself. Run far. Run fast. Run away from Velocity.

Duffey honors successful grads

By JEN McKINNEY
Collegian Correspondent

Chancellor Joseph Duffey announced at the end of October the winners in the "125 Alumni to Watch" project honoring professional accomplishments and civic contributions of the University of Massachusetts graduates from the classes of 1967-87.

The 125 alumni correspond with the University's celebrating its 125th Anniversary.

"We can think of no better way to end our anniversary year than by recognizing the rising stars of our alumni, particularly considering they have yet to reach their full potential," said Deirdre Ling, vice chancellor for University Relations and Development. The University marks its progress by the success of the alumni and we are pleased there were so many distinguished alumni to chose from," she said.

Part of the celebration will be an awards banquet for the winners hosted by Duffey on Friday in the Campus Center.

Giving the keynote address at the banquet will be 1973 graduate Bruce A. Murphy, a political science professor at Pennsylvania State University.

Jane Stoia, director of Cooperative Education and chairwoman of the "125 Alumni to Watch" selection committee, said the alumni were chosen from 400 nominees for recognition. "There are over 70,000 living UMass alumni under the age of 40," she said.

"The main purpose of the project is to honor those who will be involved in major roles in government and society," Stoia said."

Stoia listed some of the top winners:

- Nate A. Kerman, a 1969 graduate with a political science degree, who has degree from Harvard and was a Watergate prosecutor;
- Tom Benedict, a 1972 graduate with a degree in film, who wrote the screenplay for the movie Cocoon;
- Gail Royal, a 1976 medical technology major, who is a doctor of opthomology at the University of California;
- Raymond Jordan, a 1980 graduate who is a state representative from Springfield.

Students are invited to attend a reception at 4 p.m. Friday in Memorial Hall. Students can contact their departments for more information, and a complete list of activities is available from University Relations and Development in Whitmore.

■ Kennedy

Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor and Democratic presidential nominee, initially took a defensive posture toward Republican assertions that he was a liberal whose views were "out of the mainstream." He did not call himself a liberal until the final two weeks of the campaign.

Far from being out of the mainstream, Kennedy said, the current liberal positions on issues like day care, parental leaves, national health insurance, education, and the minimum wage have received broad support on opinion polls.

"I believe when the economic issues are level, this country is basically for the Democratic agenda," he said.

Twenty years ago, Kennedy added, liberals had to deal with "very tough questions" like busing for racial integration, withdrawal from Vietnam and the trade-off between jobs and environmental protection.

By contrast, he said, the current agenda consists mainly of family issues which have support from 80 percent of the public.

The six-term senator also contended that the need to reduce the federal budget deficit may boost support for the Democratic position on defense.

"I think you'll see a dramatic change, hopefully, in terms of Americans' understanding of defense issues. ... In the past, the people who wanted the stop (weapon systems) were always accused of being weak on defense. Now that debate hopefully will change," he said.

Asked by a student whether Jack Kennedy would have withdrawn US forces from Vietnam if he had not been assassinated, the senator at first said that "it's not worthwhile to speculate on it ... in terms of fairness to those that succeeded him."

City returns Civil War flag to mark anniversary

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — This New England city of fiery abolitionists, one of the few places to hail Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, will mark the 125th anniversary of the now-famous speech by returning a captured Confederate battle flag to North Carolina.

The flag, bearing 10 stars, was believed to be the personal flag of Lt. Colonel Wharton Green, who commanded the 2nd North Carolina Battalion and later was wounded and captured at Gettysburg. It was captured by the Massachusetts' 27th Regiment at the Battle of Roanoke Island in 1862 and had been in the museum's collection for years, according to Joseph Caralho, director of the Connecticut Valley Historical Museum.

"It is a very personal piece of North Carolina's own history and we felt it should be returned to the state," Carvalho said yesterday.

The Saturday ceremonies were to open with the reading of the names of more than 50 men buried in "Soldiers Rest," a section of the Springfield Cemetery set aside for Civil War dead. Elementary school children were to place a rose on each grave.

Decon Donald Ford of St. John's Congregatinal Church in Springfield was to give the invocation. The church was renamed St. John's after one of its early members, abolitionist John Brown, was hanged for treason in 1859 for attempting to seize the U.S. Armory at Harper's Ferry, Va. While in Springfield, Brown had been active in the "underground railroad" that helped fugitive slaves.

Following a march to the museum, Springfield Mayor Richard E. Neal was to formally present the captured flag to officials for the North Carolina State Museum and descendent of Union troops was to read the Gettysburg Address.

At the time, the short speech which has become one of the most memorable in U.S. history, was panned by most political writers.

"The Springfield Republican, which reprinted it in full, is said to has been one of the few newspapers in the country to praise the Gettysburg Address. It may have been one of the few, but I haven't been able to locate any other," said Richard Garvey, a historian and associate publisher of the Springfield Newspapers. "Most newspapers called it silly, gave it a very sarcastic review, or just ignored it."

Samuel Bowels, who started the newspaper, now known as the Sunday Republican, in 1824, was one of the founders of the Republican Party. And in 1960, he traveled to Springfield, Ill., to bring word to Lincoln, who had not attended the party's Chicago convention, that he had captured the party's nomination for President.

Dukakis faces fiscal problems, says Bush exaggerated them

BOSTON (AP) — Defeated Democrat Michael Dukakis, facing an uneasy return to the Massachusetts Statehouse rather than a transition to the White House, acknowledged yesterday that his state has fiscal problems, but he insists they're not as bad as George Bush said they were.

In a scene far removed from the cheering rallies of the campaign finale, Dukakis fielded questions from the home-state press ranging from taxes to a new car for the lieutenant governor.

"We face major challenges," Dukakis acknowledged at a jammed Beacon Hill news conference, but he disagreed with critics who maintain the state faces a "fiscal crisis" and determined that problems have worsened at home because of his 20-month presidential campaign.

As he did on the campaign trail, Dukakis refused to rule out new state taxes. But he promised to balance the current $11.6 billion state budget next June.

Asked about his own political future, Dukakis said he had made no decision about whether to run for governor again in 1990 when his current term expires.

"It's too early to tell. I'm back at a job I love. I'm challenged by it," Dukakis said, promising to make a decision on his plans "sometime next year."

Last Wednesday, Dukakis held a day-after news conference to assess his unsuccessful campaign. At the time, he said he planned to continue the fight for the national agenda his campaign stressed, but he would not speculate on a possible second run for the presidency in 1992.

Back at the Statehouse yesterday, Dukakis appeared rested and engaged after his first weekend of rest in months.

While Republican George Bush was vacationing in Florida, with federal officeseekers and international stock traders hanging on his every word, Dukakis walked from his home in suburban Brookline to the local trolley stop and rode public transit to work yesterday with no fanfare.

At his morning press conference, Dukakis was not even asked about his presidential campaign, except by a reporter who wanted to know if the time the governor spent campaigning was to blame for the fiscal situation.

Dukakis admitted that the presidential race "took some of my attention away," but he said other states are facing the same fiscal problems. In any case, he said, "I'm back and rarin' to go."

On the campaign trail, Bush challenged Dukakis' credentials as a fiscal manager by brandishing a copy of the tabloid Boston herald featuring a front-page story on the state's borrowing to pay its bills under the banner headline "What a Mess!"

Dukakis refused to characterize the state's fiscal condition and declined to specify the size of the shortfall in the current $11.6 billion budget. Moments later, however, his top budget official testified at a House oversight hearing and admitted that the state is lacking at least $282 million.

In an effort to regain the initiative on the homefront, Dukakis announced three steps to address the fiscal "challenge". Most new hiring will require specific approval, each Cabinet member will be told to generate "savings targets" and the administration will crack down on accounts that traditionally run "deficiencies", especially Medicaid.

Allstate Insurance leaving Mass.

BOSTON (AP) — Less than a week after California voters threw the insurance business into turmoil by ordering a rate rollback, Allstate Insurance Co. announced yesterday it is leaving Massachusetts because of financial losses and frustration over the state's regulatory climate.

The surprise announcement came about a week after a number of insurers doing business in California promised to leave the nation's biggest market after voters approved a measure providing deep cuts in auto and other insurance rates.

Kevin Sullivan, director of Allstate's Group Auto division, told a news conference that Allstate has lost $115 million in Massachusetts over the past five years, largely due to "unique regulatory environment" for auto insurance.

"We have no intention to return," Sullivan said, making Allstate the third major insurer to abandon Massachusetts.

Allstate will not renew its license when it expires on June 30. But until then, Allstate will continue to sell new policies and follow through on all its Massachusetts policies until they expire, he said.

Peter Rice, the deputy Massachusetts insurance commissioner, reacted with "complete surprise."

"We had no advance knowledge,' Rice said. "I guess our overall assessment is we think the company was premature in assessing the effect of the recently passed auto reform bill on the market."

Last week, a bill was signed into law that will reduce 1989 insurance premium by 16 percent, or $400 million, by cracking down on fraud and abuse in the system, reducing required coverage and limiting the number of auto cases that end up in court. The legislation comes after industry court challenges and rate decisions increased Massachusetts rate by nearly one third since 1986 to among the highest in the country.

Sullivan said Allstate saw some encouraging improvements for consumers in the bill. But he said it did little or nothing to restore free markets to Massachusetts.

In Massachusetts, state law requires that all companies wishing to sell any form of insurance in the state participate in an open "high-risk" auto insurance pool.

In addition, state law forbids open competition for automobile insurance. Instead, the state insurance commissioner annually calculates a single statewide rate for each category of compulsory and optional insurance. Only Texas has a similar "fix and establish" system.

State Sen. John Houston, a pro-consumer Democrat from Worcester who helped draft the new Massachusetts law, said good riddance.

"If that's a sign of their attitude about the Massachusetts market, we would be better off without them. Their view was not shared by the rest of the industry," Houston said. "They seem to have the attitude that if we don't give them everything, they'll take their ball and go home."

Allstate, based in Northbrook, Ill., has been doing business in Massachusetts since 1951. The company has 6.6 percent of the Massachusetts auto insurance market and 5.2 percent of the state's homeowners insurance market.

Massachusetts accounts for some $153 million annually, or about 2 percent, of the company's total revenue.

Allstate has 573 full-and-parttime employees at several locations in Massachusetts. Sulivan said Allstate will "make every effort to try to relocate qualified employees" and predicted there would be few or no layoffs.

four goals and three assists from her midfield position.

"Athletically, she is probably the most talented of this group," Hixon said. "She has a wonderful sense of humor. She and Ruthy have been great leaders. She has become a really good midfielder."

Vasapolli was the third leading scorer for the Minutewomen this season with four goals and seven assists. She is also the one that set up senior Julie Stuart on the penalty corner.

"Ruthy is just always there, always steady," Hixon said. "We've played her in a number of positions in her four years. She is always someone we can count on. She has been our best passer."

It is easy to pick out Stuart on the field. She's the one with the big slap shot on the penalty corners. Stuart, who hits the ball harder than anyone on the team, has gotten the Minutewomen out of a lot of trouble from sweeper, a position that she was just switched to this season.

"Julie has always been a little bit of a rebel," Hixon said. Julie was really a catalyst that has made this team work."

For the last two years, Chris Gutheil has played a big role in the defense since climbing to the varsity level.

"Out of all our athletes, she is probably our least talented but she is probably our smartest defender," Hixon said. "She has always had to play against one of the top players on the other team."

Tonia Kennedy will leave this year after an injury plagued career at UMass. But despite her injuries, she has always been a dangerous offensive threat for UMass. She led UMass in goals this year with 12

"She's just a fighter," Hixon said. "She's been very strong in scoring. She's a very intense competitor. I think her desire to play just says a lot for her character."

Kathy Derwin is a senior but still has one year of eligibility left. She has not discussed with Hixon whether she will come back next year.

"She is probably the inspirational leader of the team," Hixon said. "She has been there when we needed her to perform."

■ women's swimming now 3-0

The 1-2 punch continued with Waller and Jungbluth in the 100 and 200 breaststroke, followed by Gorski and Jodi Schwartz in the 200 butterfly. "Those were two of the best swims of the meet," Newcomb said of the butterfly race.

Senior co-captain Pike picked up a first in the 50 free in 26.35, what Newcomb called "probably one of her best swims here at UMass. She's had good swims every time in the water." Cruz was second in that race, and the two followed suit with similar placings in the 100 free.

Highlighting the rest of the meet were Gorski's 100 fly victory, a pair of seconds by Debbie Mullen off the 1- and 3-meter diving boards, and a second place for Leslie Cromwell in the 200 individual medley in 2:22.52. McCarthy also had a lifetime best in the 200 backstroke, finishing in 2:24.66.

The meet closed with a second and third finish in the 200 freestyle relay. The team of Pike, Theresa Jacobs, Cruz and Morin took the silver in 1:45.22, a time that Newcomb said was almost as fast as the end of last season.

"It was a fun meet. The team was up and enthusiastic the whole time," Newcomb said. "They made it fun for themselves. They were noisy and loud and came and did what they had to do."

Then Newcomb summed up the feelings of any UMass team.

"We beat UConn, which is always fun."

Minutemen 11th in poll

After a month-long absence from the NCAA Division 1-AA poll, the University of Massachusetts football team is back this week in the No. 11 spot.

UMass, which dropped out of the top 20 after a 35-14 loss to the University of Connecticut, has gone 3-1 since then while moving into a tie with Delaware for first place in the Yankee Conference.

UConn is No. 17 in the poll this week.

■ a look back at men's soccer

than anything else."

After sweeping the hometown Challenge Cup Tournament, UMass rolled over Brown and Fairfield to improve to 7-4. But four losses in the next five games shut the door.

"We're trying to treat the players as adults," Gettler said. "We expect them, through help from us, to be able to prepare themselves for big performances. I'm not sure the coaching staff did as good a job as they should have done because obviously they weren't always prepared mentally."

The Minutemen did, however, leave their mark on the regional soccer scene in the time that remained. In the final two games of the year, the Minutemen conjured their best performances, salvaging both personal pride and a winning season in a pair of ties at Rutgers and Harvard to finish at 8-8-2.

"They showed pride," said Gettler. "To be able to turn around and turn in two great performances, that could have been wins, that was very positive."

And all along the way, underclass talent such as Pete McEvoy, Steve Cesnek, Brett Anthony and Dan Lawrence developed into the nucleus of good things to come for the patient program.

"Lawrence was our steadiest player, and Cesnek had a good year while playing against their best defender every time," said Gettler. "The team personality is always different from year to year. But winning helps breed winning, the players that are returning can learn to give a greater effort."

Parting Shots: Ginzburg set the UMass career shutout mark, amassing 14 over the last four falls. . .Senior sweeper (and team captain) Michael McCormick was voted Most Valuable Player, and will be UMass's sole representative at this Sunday's New England Intercollegiate Soccer League all-star game at Worcester Polytechnic Institute. . .Assistant coach John Martin was a late season recruit to the Lawrence/Cesnek school of hair design.

Volleyball to battle Northeastern tonight

Minutewomen in last meet before Atlantic 10 Tournament

This is it, the final match for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team before the Atlantic 10 Tournament Saturday. It's the Minutewomen's last shot at tuning up their machine while looking at the A-10s. But that's not how UMass head coach Carol Ford is looking at the game.

Yes, the Minutewomen will look to improve their continuity which has been static in the past three weeks, but Ford said she has no intention of looking past tonight's opponent, Northeastern University. When UMass travels to Boston tonight, UMass will be looking for a victory, not a warm-up.

"It's a friendly rivalry. It comes down to who is the best team in Massachusetts," Ford said.

That same thought was echoed by Northeastern coach Mark Massey who said "Northeastern and UMass are usually the top two teams in the state."

"I think it's going to be another one of the classic matchups. I've been at Northeastern for five years and every time these two teams have met, it's been a real dog fight," he said.

The Minutewomen have been up and down in these final weeks of the season. UMass, 19-9, has lost six of its last nine games. At times, they've pushed some of the better teams around and at times they haven't been able to get out of their own way.

"We want to play well, we don't want this slump to continue," Ford said.

Last year, the Huskies got the best of UMass by sweeping the Minutewomen in their three confrontations last year, including the finals of UMass' own tournament.

NU's record, 21-15, may not leap out as great numbers but the Huskies have been playing solid volleyball. They are 15-4 since the middle of October, and are ranked second in the upcoming ECAC championships.

"We have one of the toughest schedules in the Northeast . . .and we have a very young team," Massey said.

Importantly, tonight's match will carry badly needed momentum to either team for their upcoming post-season tournaments.

"I think it's going to be an interesting day. I think it's going to come down to who can get their act together," Ford said.

The Minutewomen will probably go with a revised lineup for this week's contests, according to Ford.

UMass will move outside hitter Nancy Sullivan to the middle and middle hitter Juliet Primer to the outside. Sullivan is second on the team in kills and Ford said she liked the way Primer played on the outside when the switch was first made at this past weekend's New Haven Tournament.

"I'm going to experiment with some different things," Ford said.

Notes: UMass has had a very short injury list this year but, according to Ford, UMass' middle hitter Barbara Meehan has some pain in her knees. Although Meehan will play tonight, Ford said the soreness in her knees has been very painful . . . Tonight's match is the 10th straight away match for UMass and is the last regular season match . . . UMass has not had the strongest of statistical years. The Minutewomen are sixth in the conference in hitting percentage, kill average, and dig average. They are seventh in blocking average and ace average; and are eighth in assist average . . . The Minutewomen are currently ranked fourth in the Atlantic 10 with a 4-4 record . . . The host of this year's A-10 tourney, Penn State, moved up one spot in the volleyball coaches poll this week. The Lady Lions are now 19th in the country.

Seniors wrap up careers

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Sunday's 2-1 loss to Northeastern University marked the end of seven, and possibly eight, collegiate careers for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team.

"It's an outstanding group of athletes and people," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "One of the things that I've enjoyed about this group is their competitive attitude, and they are not just fine athletes but fine people."

The Minutewomen have reached the NCAA playoffs in each of the four years that this year's class of seniors have played.

"I would never question the effort they have given in every game," Hixon said. "They have always given everything they had."

One senior that has not been here for four years is goaltender Cindy Cox, who transferred to UMass this season from Purdue University. In this, Cox's only year at UMass, she has been a big factor in the Minutewomen's success.

"I have to say that Cindy has been the mainstay of our team," Hixon said. "She has kept us in many games when we couldn't score."

Senior Sue Desmond is Cox's backup. Desmond has not been a starter for UMass but her presence has been felt by her team.

"I have never felt worried about going to Sue if necessary," Hixon said. "I think Sue really has given us a lot, though it has not always been on the field. You have got to have two good goaltenders. You just can't have one."

The two captains are seniors Ruth Vasapolli and Pam Bustin. Both were four year starters for UMass.

Bustin was an All-Conference selection this year in the Atlantic 10. She has scored

Women swimmers 3-0 after win over UConn

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team continued its unbeaten ways over the weekend, running its record to 3-0 with a 155-126 win over the University of Connecticut in Storrs, Conn.

The Minutewomen jumped out to a quick start, dominating the early events, and were never headed.

"We swam a very good meet. It was as we expected," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb.

The meet got off on a good note for UMass, as the team took first and third in the initial race, the 200-yard medley relay. The foursome of Laurie Schwarz, Melissa Waller, Sue Gorski and Patty Pike won it in 1:58.21, while Lori Carroll, Regina Jungbluth, Marcia Samsel and Kim Morin teamed up for third. Newcomb lauded Morin's anchor leg, a comeback effort that just beat the UConn swimmers for the third and final spot.

"That was a good way to start it out," Newcomb said. "It was important for us to hit them hard in the first three events, which we did."

The next two events saw the Minutewomen capture first and second in both. Tracy Young took the 1650 freestyle in 18:37.15, with Melissa McCarthy second in 18:56.68. Then, it was Keira Cruz (2:03.32) and Megan McCamy (2:04.65) taking the top two spots in the 200 free.

"We couldn't have written it any better the way we wanted it," Newcomb said. "We came right after them and went nuts."

Gettler: Minutemen weren't tough enough

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Back when the leaves were green, and sun tans were still to be seen, when freshmen still looked confused, hope sprung eternal for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team.

"I really, deep down, thought we were going to the NCAAs," said graduating senior fullback Bret Blanton.

Through the first four games of the fall, things went well indeed. UMass opened with a pair of wins over Maine and New Hampshire on Upper Boyden Field, allowing neither team to score, and eventually finished the 3-1 homestand on a very positive note.

Three consecutive losses on the road followed. It was a much humbler soccer team that returned home with a 3-4 record at weeks' end, having seen its own mental weakness exposed.

"That's my only disappointment in this team - we lost our focus," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "What kept this team from being nationally competitive was the mentality.

"We're not going to on to the field too many times with better talent and win a game without playing well. We need everything to be clicking, everything to be in place, in order to be successful. We didn't do that enough to have a better record. We had some letdowns that were more mental Larisa, left, and Natasha Diephuis know all too well what being mistaken for someone else is like. The 18-year-old identical twins say it happens daily.

Identical twins reflect more than mirror image

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

Most people view themselves as individuals with the world encircling them, she says as she draws a circle around a dot to illustrate her point. Then she draws a circle around two dots and says, "But this is how it is with us."

Then the identical twins Natasha and Larisa Diephuis, 18, look at each other and nod in agreement. Their gestures frequently mimic one another.

Out of every 1,000 births in the United States only about four sets of identical twins are born, according to Newsweek. Identical twins are born from the same egg.

> In high school they got the simple nickname "twin," Natasha says. "It's like you're still connected at the umbilical cord. People don't realize you have your own identity."

And they in fact, describe themselves as being a novelty at which singletons, people who do not have a twin, gawk.

"The first thing they don't understand is we don't know what it's like not to be twins." Larisa says, as they both laugh.

The twins confess they have their moments of sibling confrontations, but Larisa says, "She probably understands me better than anyone else."

"We're each other's best friends," Natasha says, as her twin adds, "And worst enemies," Natasha finishes, "Because you know everything about that person."

A common phenomenon between identical twins is their ability to communicate in mysterious ways. Their mother noticed this when they were laying in the crib, they say.

Later Natasha confirms this: "We never have to complete sentences."

The twins are thrust into being best friends mostly because they experienced growing up together, they say. They don't have the years in between their ages to separate them; they empathize rather than sympathize with each other as siblings.

But frustrations arise in having your best friend also be the one with whom you live.

In high school they got the simple nickname "twin," Natasha says. "It's like you're still connected at the umbilical cord. People don't realize you have your own identity."

The twins say that when they were younger Natasha had long hair and Larisa had short hair in order to make their identities known. "I was so mad when she started to grow out her hair. It's like, 'You are intruding on my identity!'"

But now they agree: "Eventually, you learn that it's okay to be alike."

In fact, they howl over the times that they are the mistaken identity of their twin.

Larisa said one day a man stopped her and started asking her about one of "her" classes. "I didn't know who he was." The conversation ensued for 20 minutes. "I kept thinking maybe I am supposed to know him."

Her reason for not cluing the man into realizing he had the wrong twin? "I just didn't feel like dealing with it."

Scenarios such as this happen at least three times every day, the twins say with authority.

Because Natasha, a political science major, lives in the Southwest Residential Area and Larisa, a psychology major, lives in Central, sometimes people do not know they each have a look-a-like on campus. As the twins are talking a man does a double-take as he walks by. "That's two in an hour."

Margaret McClamroch, 53, a University of Massachusetts alumna and also an identical twin, founded a group last fall for twins, fraternal and identical to share their experiences.

McClamroch, who has just finished her book "Two by Two: Twins' Stories," says every twins' experience is unique. But she says twins are different from other students because they have to deal with many issues such as growing apart.

Natasha says, "It's really important to me to stay family-oriented because your best friend is your sister too."

The twins' group meets at 6:30 p.m. the second and fourth Thursday of each month in the first-floor lounge of Thatcher Residence Hall. It's informal and open to twins at UMass and in the community of all ages.

Five Colleges don't want another Bennett

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — President-elect George Bush should appoint an education secretary who, unlike William Bennett, will not strain relations with Congress and academia, top officials of the Five Colleges said yesterday.

American education needs "a secretary who may not think everything we do is wonderful, but sees himself or herself as an ally with education," said Adele Simmons, president of Hampshire College. "Our experience of the last few years with a secretary of education who chose every possible moment to attack us destroyed a number of possible alliances."

Bennett, who frequently criticized college administrators, served as Ronald Reagan's secretary of education from Feb. 7, 1985 until Sept. 20 of this year. Lauro F. Cavazos succeeded Bennett.

"One of the great failings of the Reagan administration was the standoff between the Department of Education and the Congress. There was no working together," said University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, who recommended Bush keep Cavazos as the nation's top educator.

The new administration should take a "more pragmatic approach, with fewer people grinding ideological axes," Duffey said. "The Department of Education has been a repository for people with extremist ideologies."

Bennett, who succeeded Duffey as chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, last year publicly ridiculed Duffey's handling of the six-day occupation of the New Africa House.

The Five College forum, "An Educational Agenda For the New Administration," was held in the home of Smith College President Mary Maples Dunn on the Smith campus. It was the first time the five top administrators have gathered for such a forum.

Several of the college presidents said elementary and secondary education must be a priority for the new administration.

"It's ironic that in many ways kids were given prominence at the conventions. They were all on the platform," Simmons said. "And then the kids seemed to drop from sight in the presidential debates."

Dunn said attention and money "at the beginning of the educational life" can help prevent problems like high dropout rates later on.

"To my way of thinking, the next government, if it wishes to be the education government, is going to have to look to the early years. And it's going to have to spend some money on it," Dunn said.

Elizabeth Kennan, president of Mount Holyoke College, said math and science deserve special attention. The number of science majors at the South Hadley campus has dropped from 25 to 17 percent of the student body in recent years, she said.

More suspects sought in hazing probe

The Amherst police said yesterday they now have more than two suspects in the on-going investigation of alleged hazing activities at the Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity at the University of Massachusetts.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson decided last week to strip the fraternity of recognition and gave ATG members until Thanksgiving to move out of the house, providing "there are no more allegations of improper behavior."

Gladys Rodriguez, acting dean of students, said several parents and students reported the alleged activities to her office about three weeks ago.

The University "looked into the matter," and ordered the pledges to move out of the ATG house into University residence halls, out of health and safety concerns, Rodriguez said.

The police began investigating about three weeks ago at the request of University officials, who are required to inform police of possible hazing episodes. The University is also conducting an investigation through the Dean of Students and Greek Affairs offices.

The police and the University have declined to comment on the specifics of the investigations. Fraternity members have also declined to comment.

Soviet leader says he will visit United States

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced yesterday he will visit the United States early next month to address the United Nations. US officials said he will also meet with President Reagan and, possibly, President-elect George Bush.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said in Moscow that a meeting with Bush, as well as Reagan, could be 'assumed' for "a continuation of the US Soviet political dialogue that we believe should continue without artificial pause."

The announcement was made while Gorbachev attended a session on agricultural problems in the Russian city of Orel, south of Moscow, and was carried by the official Soviet news agency, Tass.

The Soviet Communist Party general secretary also will visit Britain and Cuba, according to the announcement. US officials said the visit to New York and a fifth meeting with Reagan would take place around Dec. 7.

"Mikhail Gorbachev intends to appear in New York at the session of the General Assembly of the UN to set forth the views of the Soviet Union on the most important problems of world development," Tass said.

Two members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said today such a session could give Bush the chance to build on recent positive Soviet moves around the world.

White House Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said that neither a date nor a site has been set for the meeting, although he acknowledged that it would likely take place in New York while Gorbachev is there to address the UN General Assembly.

Fitzwater said Reagan and Bush would meet, probably together, with Gorbachev, but said the session would not be "a summit in the sense of a summit."

"It would, rather, be a cordial meeting between superpower leaders reflecting the friendship they have created and the historic change in the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union," he said.

Fitzwater said the main purpose of the meeting from the US standpoint would be to "ensure that the momentum and continuity of the arms control talks are extended and it will reaffirm the relationship between the general secretary and the new president of the United States."

"I would not look to it as a meeting that would be settling things (differences)," Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater acknowledged that the Kremlin had proposed that Gorbachev meet with Reagan and Bush in just the last few days and that the administration had quickly approved the request.

Interviewed today, Sen. Joseph Biden, D Del., pointed to "some of the moves taking place in the Soviet Union, and its effect on Europe in particular and the third world in general."

The Soviet space shuttle Buran lands yesterday in Soviet Central Asia, eight miles from its launch pad after a flawless 3-hour, 25-minute maiden flight.

Soviet shuttle has successful maiden flight

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet space shuttle Buran orbited the Earth twice yesterday and landed eight miles from its launch pad in Soviet Central Asia, ending with flawless precision its unmanned 3-hour, 25-minute maiden flight.

The Buran, which means snowstorm in Russian, touched down on a 2.8 mile concrete runway with a puff of dust from its rear wheels and rolled to a halt as three parachutes opened at its rear.

"The USSR has successfully tested its first reusable space craft Buran," official Radio Moscow said, interrupting regular programming two minutes after touchdown.

The flight originally was scheduled for Oct. 29, but the countdown was stopped by computers with only 51 seconds left when an access arm failed to pull far enough away from the rocket. Officials said Monday that they redesigned the joint.

Within 30 minutes of yesterday's landing, Soviet television showed the fully automated approach and landing of the delta-winged US shuttle look-alike in the middle of the barren, brown steppe.

Radio Moscow said the flight, which had been in jeopardy because of cold, rainy weather, went according to schedule, and all on-board tests were completed.

"Buran made little more than two orbits around the Earth. When the testing was completed, the computer issued landing commands," it said.

Fackenheim speaks on Holocaust crimes

By ALLEN BERNARD
Collegian Staff

Dr. Emil Fackenheim stressed the need for people to remember the Holocaust and the events that led to that catastrophe, in a speech last night to about 200 in Memorial Hall.

Fackenheim, a professor of Jewish Thought at the School of Overseas Students at Hebrew University in Israel and a German concentration camp survivor, said that the passage of the Nuremberg Laws in 1935 was the single most important factor in allowing the persecution of the Jews to take place without the world intervening.

The laws stated that Jews were no longer protected under German law and anything done to them would not be punishable by legal action, Fackenheim said.

"Once you start out with a doctrine as the Nazis did — that Jews are criminals by birth — then you have to prove (that Jews were criminals)," he said.

These and other laws, such as the Munich Pact, passed by the German parliament enabled Kristallnacht ("the night of broken glass") to take place because the laws justified Jewish persecution, he said.

Not only did the laws justify the persecution, but they also "rendered impotent" the abilities of such countries such as England to help or protect the Jews.

On the night of Kristallnacht, November 9, 1938, Jewish stores and homes were systematically looted and destroyed by German citizens and Storm Troopers. Synagogues were burned all over Germany and as many as 30,000 Jewish men were arrested and shipped to concentration camps.

"No one can say 'I didn't know anything about it' — the whole world knew about it," because of Kristallnacht, Fackenheim said.

"Even if the Nazis had not decided to punish the Jews, it should still be considered the greatest criminal state in history," Fackenheim said.

Quoting his friend, Franklin Littell, Fackenheim said "The Nazi movement was never a movement at all — it was a criminal organization."

Fackenheim said that Jews need to remember Kristallnacht carefully because if they don't they could end up hating the world for what happened or begin to hate themselves.

"Where there is smoke there is fire," he said referring to a situation where a Jew might end up believing the reasons behind the Holocaust are true.

"One must remember in order to understand," he said, "We have to ask 'how could this happen?'

"You can't do anything about the Holocaust that happened, except understand it," Fackenheim said.

Fackenheim commended the Jewish people for their resilience and ability to retain their faith and religion in the face of overwhelming adversity.

"The Talmud (Jewish book of law) once asked, 'Who is a Jew?' The answer is — one who hopes," he said.

Germany is still paying an emotional debt to millions of Jews world-wide because of Kristalnacht, "the night of broken glass."

For the Jewish people, the word symbolizes the beginning of the Holocaust, in 6 million of Jews were brutally persecuted and murdered.

Lebowitz brings house down with pungent prose

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Fran Lebowitz hates pets, algebra, Dan Quayle, anti-smoking crusaders and school. But above all, New York author Fran Lebowitz hates to write.

"It is somewhat ironic," said the 38-year-old writer, "that I have chosen a profession which is essentially a lifetime of homework. To be a writer is to have a life of always having a paper due."

In an informal address that resembled stand-up comedy, Lebowitz spoke to an audience of about 200 in the Campus Center Auditorium last night. Clad in a green sweater and jeans and sucking cigarettes, the New Jersey native read two selections from her second book of collected essays, Social Studies, before answering questions.

Lebowitz's first book was a collection of essays which she wrote for Interview magazine. Metropolitan Life sold out in New York City the same day it was reviewed in The New York Times. Social Studies, her second collection, also proved to be a best-seller. She is now finishing her first novel, Exterior Signs of Wealth.

Her writing consists largely of questioning the taste in various aspects of modern society. Her urban style of social commentary was dubbed "snobbery" by Vanity Fair magazine.

The 1988 presidential election provided a gold mine of material for her to work with.

"Dan Quayle — this may not be common knowledge but it's not exactly a secret," she said, "looks exactly like the head parking valet at the Beverly Hills Hotel — minus intelligence. I have never seen a photograph of Mr. Quayle without having the impulse to hand 10 dollars and say 'Don't park it in the back, I'm coming right out.'"

Morristown, NJ, was the hometown Lebowitz gladly escaped. She was expelled from a private all-female Episcopalian high school, having taken algebra I six times.

She headed for New York, where she worked as a taxi driver, a belt salesperson and a bartender. There, she spent a great deal of time at Max's Kansas City, where she mingled with the big names in New York pop culture. She started writing for Andy Warhol's magazine and her popularity grew. Today, she has written columns for Vogue and Madamoiselle magazines, and has appeared on Late Night with David Letterman.

Her dislike for animals, particularly urban pets, has led Lebowitz to propose a possible solution, to which she devoted a chapter of her book.

"Pets should be disallowed by law," she read. "Especially dogs. Especially in New York City. I have not infrequently verbalized this sentiment in what now passes for polite society. Even if dogs should be eliminated completely, there would still be the blind and the pathologically lonely to think of. I am not totally devoid of compassion, and, after much thought I believe that I have come upon a solution to this problem: let the lonely lead the blind."

Among Lebowitz's other pet peeves are aftershave, children who speak French (for whom she said airplanes should be sectioned off) and the Great American Smokeout.

Lebowitz knows she is renowned for her pungent prose.

"Usually at this point," she said, late in the discussion, "some very disgruntled 4-H Club member says, 'Well, what do you like? We know what you don't like.' So, if you don't like listening to what I don't like, don't listen."

Historic clu will rebuild from ashes

By Richard Sasson
The Patriot Ledger

WESTWOOD — Dominic Marinelli of Walpole, president of the 92-year-old Norfolk Golf Club on East Street, vowed yesterday to rebuild the clubhouse that was destroyed in a $100,000, three-alarm fire over the weekend.

Marinelli said the golf course will reopen in a couple of days and the clubhouse will be rebuilt.

"It's a disappointment," he said. "The building has been there a lot of years and there's a lot of history to it. The club will come out of it. The club survive like it has in the past."

No members were in the club during the fire which started near the club's function room at 5 a.m. yesterday, leaving only the shop and a section of locker room standing, John J. Sheehy said.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Vermont Governor urges women to take more active role in politics

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Governor Madeline Kunin, D-Vermont, urged women to seek greater involvement in politics to balance the gross inequity of representation at all levels of government, in a lecture Monday night at Smith College.

Kunin, one of three women governors in the United States and a graduate of the University of Massachusetts, spoke to a crowd of more than 200 in Wright Hall Auditorium.

"The number of women in both elected and appointed positions remains persistently modest," Kunin said, "despite the fact that women have made great inroads in other fields in the last 20 years."

"We somehow have to remind ourselves what political participation is all about," she said. "We can't afford to simply let half of the population fulfill the democratic dream."

It is never too early for women who are interested in public service to begin their political ventures by volunteering to work on campaigns or attending local party meetings, Kunin said.

"On some level, you simply have to stop analyzing, you have to jump in and say we're going to defy the odds," she said. "There are constantly miracles in politics. That's what makes it exciting."

A native of Switzerland, Kunin said her family fled the country in 1940 because of Adolf Hitler's invasion of various countries. Her wish to prevent this type of domination is what motivates her political actions.

"Being a passive victim of events provides no protection," she said. "Only political empowerment permits some control over the events of one's time."

The absence of women in politics projects the idea that women do not exist in major policy positions, she said.

"One is perplexed and even angry that in a democracy, where power is supposed to be shared equally, this inequity exists so pervasively — so many years after women obtained the right to vote," she said.

The scarcity of women role models and its effect on childrens' perception of leadership are two basic reasons for the continuing male "power vacuum," Kunin said.

"When children go to public buildings and they don't see the portraits on the walls of their gender, a foul but very strong message is sent to them," she said. "It's hard to visualize yourself in a role without examples to pattern yourself after," she said.

The continual re-election of congressmen hampers women's ability to attain higher positions, Kunin said.

"Nobody quite voluntarily says (to women), 'well, now it's your turn, you deserve 50 percent of the power so we'll just move aside,'" she said. "That's never going to happen."

But, this imbalance of power is changing in many states and Kunin said she is hopeful this transition will reach the national level.

In Vermont, she said, there are 6 women state senators out of 30 and there are 50 women representatives out of 150. Approximately 40 percent of top administrative appointments there are women, Kunin said.

"These are both record numbers," Kunin said. "We're making a very strong effort to change things."

The most rewarding aspect of political involvement, she said, "is the belief that I really can have an effect on the events of the people in my own state and in my own environment."

"It is what keeps me engaged in the battle, and the battle does get very fierce and very hostile," she said.

Kunin, who is extensively involved in environment and welfare reform issues, said the gradual shift of more power to state governments is increasing the role of states in policy making.

Governor Madeline Kunin

Governors are involved with job and welfare reform, the environment, and all governors have led at least one trade mission to a "far flung country," she said.

One reason for the shift, she said, is the federal neglect of environment and social issues in favor of sustaining military budgets.

"It will be interesting to see if the Bush administration continues the Reagan trend," Kunin said, "or follows through on his campaign promises."

Vermont also has the lowest unemployment rate in the nation at this time, she said.

"We have proven that you can have a low unemployment rate and a strong environmental ethic," she said. "I hope this gets to the national level as well."

The Smith College lecture was sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Young, parents of New Jersey state senator Leanna Brown.

Car maintenance rip-offs; experts give advice

By LINDA DOHERTY
Collegian Correspondent

Car repair shops are notorious for taking advantage of unsuspecting car owners, but local experts say there are ways to avoid being taken for a ride.

Joan Virginia, an auto service representative for Cullen Auto Sales, said "the most important thing upon entering a garage is to seem knowledgeable and assertive."

"Women especially can easily fall prey to mechanics who make unnecessary repairs and wind up paying a bundle for services they don't need," she said.

"Don't ever walk in and say 'I have no idea what's wrong,'" Virginia said. Your obvious lack of understanding will make the service station attendant more likely to think "he can put one over on you," she said.

Virginia suggested getting a free estimate. "It's wise to get at least two, so that way you have a better idea of what your car needs before you actually go for repairs."

When it comes to finding a garage, local experts agree it is best to shop around. "Ask friends where they have found good services," said Virginia.

The Better Business Bureau also offers a list of agencies that can refer you to reputable stations in your area.

Peter Cullen, owner of Cullen Auto Sales in Taunton, suggested "It's best to have repairs done in a small garage. The technicians are better and offer a higher quality service. You also know who does what to your car," he said.

Department store car care centers should only be used as a last resort, he said. "Don't be fooled by their lower costs. They are a secondary business and don't give the customer personalized service."

If a problem is centralized, for example in the muffler or brakes, it is usually better to go to a center specializing in that area, he said.

"They usually cost the same as average service stations and offer more complete, thorough repairs with a warranty," Cullen said.

Mike Aldrich, owner of Aldrich Auto Supply in Amherst, suggested if a problem is minor, or easily fixable, it's best to get an estimate first, and then buy the parts yourself.

Many parts, such as filters can be easily installed without ever having to go to a service station. "If you don't know how to install the parts yourself," he said, get a mechanic or a friend to show you how.

"This will save you a lot of money, time and aggravation," Aldrich said.

A good way to check up on your mechanic, Cullen said, is to "tell the mechanic up front that you want all of the parts that are removed."

Make sure the mechanic tells why any parts were replaced. Then, Cullen said, "Take them to an auto parts store and see if they needed repair, especially if the work was costly."

If you do feel you've been victimized by a service station, Cullen said, don't hesitate to complain. Contact the garage immediately, he said, and if they refuse to cooperate don't be afraid to take action.

Michael Simard, a mediator at The Consumer Protection Agency in Northampton, said they can contact the business for you and determine if your complaint warrants taking the service station to small claims court.

The Chamber of Commerce and the Better Business Bureau cannot take any action against a service station, but will send a letter of complaint to the business on your behalf and will keep the complaint on file for future requests.

Aldrich suggested the best way to avoid being taken advantage of by a service station is to get to know your car. "Keep your car well maintained," he said.

"Learn to spot potential problems early and make sure you can perform tasks yourself that don't require a mechanics' help," he said.

UMass professor warns of side effects of the pill

DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Correspondent

The birth control pill is one of the most commonly used contraceptive methods in the nation. But the side effects still present more risks than many women are willing to take.

Human Biology Proffessor Judy Goodenough said women on the pill have an increased likelyhood of blood clots forming in blood vessels. These blood clots may then block the flow of blood to important organs like the brain and heart, she said.

Smokers who take the pill have been found to have an even higher incidence of heart attacks and strokes, she said. Women who smoke are at greater risk because both smoking and the pill increase blood pressure.

The pill has also been shown to increase the risk of urinary tract infections and gonorrhea, Goodenough said.

And, she said, most women who use the pill are not using condoms and spermicides which help prevent the transmission of STD's and AIDS.

"There is an increased risk of liver tumors, also," said Goodenough, "they're most often benign, but the tumors may rupture and cause hemorrhaging."

According to Ron Mazur, staff associate in the Health Education Department at University Health Services, the pill is essentially a synthetic hormone that fakes the body into not ovulating, and regulates the menstral period.

The pill is better than it used to be, he said. When the pill first came out 30 years ago, there was only one dosage. And, the hormone level in the original pill had to be high enough to be effective for all women.

Today, the pill comes in a variety of hormonal levels and is prescribed according to the needs of each individual, he said.

Mazur encouraged women to attend workshops at UHS to find out all of their options before going on the pill. It's important to know all the facts, he said.

That drop reflects the weakness of science and math education in elementary and secondary schools, she said, and commended new state certification with higher standards for math and science teachers.

"Teachers in the schools, like teachers in the colleges, must be thoroughly trained in the discipline of science or mathematics and must be expert in it," Kennan said.

Duffey and Amherst College President Peter Pouncey both spoke at length on the fiscal constraints facing education.

"The economy of higher education spins more and more out of control," said Pouncey, noting that by 1995 tuition at his small liberal arts college could cost more than $25,000 a year — or $100,000 for a degree.

Pouncey said financial aid programs are set up so that people who save money to finance their education are penalized.

"You almost get paid not to save," he said, proposing that education savings bonds be counted as "self-help" on a financial aid form.

Duffey, like several others, proposed students could earn "loan forgiveness" from public service programs — "some kind of GI bill without the GI."

"We have national needs that could be met through such a program," Duffey said.

Simmons suggested social service programs could be modeled after ROTC.

The officials said they expected to get their message across through the media, direct communication with the department of education, and legislative lobbying.

Noting that many Five College alumni now work on Capitol Hill, Pouncey said "We're a noisy and vociferous bunch, and we have people well-placed to carry the noise further."

"Any deafness in Washington will very soon be willful, if there is any," he said.

■ Fackenheim

November 9 marked the 50th anniversary of the night when thousands of Jews were rounded up and sent to concentration camps and their homes and businesses looted and destroyed by mobs.

The issue of the Holocaust is so sensitive in Germany today that Parliament President Philipp Jenninger felt it necessary to resign his post last week because of a speech in which he quoted Adolf Hitler.

"They (the parliament) thought the views he was expressing were his own," said Political Science Professor Gerard Braunthal.

Braunthal said Jenniger should have been more sensitive to the national scene at the time of the speech.

"The statements he made could be made at some historians' conference where the finer points could be debated," he said.

He said many young people in Germany feel guilty about what their fathers and grandfathers did to the Jews and that they are trying to come to grips with the Holocaust.

There is "a generation that still keeps asking their parents and grandparents why did they support Hitler," he said.

Yehudit Heller, program director for Hillel, said that "In the last 20 or 30 years Germany is regretting (the Holocaust) as a society and tring to make up for what happened."

"They're shamed and embarrassed that such a thing could come out of such a civilized society," she said.

Heller's grandparents were victims of the Holocaust and her grandmother still bears on her arm tatooed numbers the Germans used for identification in the camps.

The events of Nov. 9, 1938 are still poignant memories for those who experienced them and for their relatives.

"I live (the Holocaust) everyday," Heller said, "by seeing the numbers on my relatives arms."

Hannah Kliger, assistant professor of Judaic Studies, said younger Germans do not necessarily feel guilty about what their forefathers did but are, instead, trying to understand the events of those years.

"At some level there is a certain degree of collective conscience working," she said.

Young people are asking, "What does this say about us as a country, about our leaders?" she said.

Kliger said that what she sees in Germany today is repercussions of the Holocaust and there is a silence that needs to be bridged between the older and younger generations about what happened 50 years ago.

Heller said, "The term we always use is 'forgive, but not forget', because if we forget, it will happen again."

McDevitt charges Festa with misusing SGA funds

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association Senator Bob McDevitt has filed a complaint with the Student Judiciary against Commuter Area Government President Jay Festa for illegally transferring funds.

McDevitt said Festa transferred $440 dollars from the CAG account to the SGA President's account for a trip to a United States Students Association conference in Hartford July 22-27. McDevitt claims this is in violation of the CAG Constitution. He said as a commuter senator it is his responsibility to uphold that constitution.

"The only person who can transfer more than $50 is the Commuter Area Treasurer," McDevitt said, adding that such a transfer also could be done by the full CAG board.

"Some would question how the money was spent, but that's not my main problem. My problem is that he's not upholding the constitution."

Festa freely admits he made the transfer, but said this is not a violation because the constitution has not been ratified.

He also said this charge by McDevitt is politically motivated.

"It's a way to attack someone who's on the left," Festa said. He called the assertion by McDevitt that he is upholding the constitution a "smokescreen."

Festa said he also spent $1,500 for movies as well as other events during the summer, but McDevitt did not complain about these expenditures.

"I don't think Bob McDevitt has a problem with the constitution or else he would have complained about all the other expenditures," Festa said.

"I had a whole summer's worth of programming to do and no way to get in touch with the governing board," he said.

McDevitt does not mention any reprimand for Festa in the complaint, but asks that the money be transferred back into the CAG account. No trial date has been set.

Graduate senate rescinds new SCERA charter, invokes errors

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate voted unanimously last night to rescind the new charter for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) passed on Nov. 1, because it was found to be plagued with errors.

The new charter, created in conjunction with the Student Government Association, was found to need revision because points about the paid position in SCERA had to be cleared up and several details about the organization had been omitted.

The troubled charter stands tabled and a new one will have to be drawn up. However, the senate is waiting for the SGA to settle its own problems before taking on those of SCERA. Senate treasure, Kevin Dodson said he hoped SCERA would be back on its feet by next semester.

In other senate business:

The senate passed a motion to change its object code classification, which is a heading the senate uses to pay Student Teaching Assistants and Research Assistants.

The current object code groups TAs and RAs as consultants, which is widely looked at as a slush fund of little importance.

The consultant funding is in danger of being cut down during the budget crunch anticipated this year, and the Senate wants to isolate their stipends by getting a classification of their own.

The senate passed motions to grant a total of $850 dollars to several campus orgnizations that requested money from the finance committee. The groups include Pioneer Valley Student Action Network, Afrik-Am, Board of Governors, UMass Greens, and the Central American Solidarity Association.

Mambo X weavin' catchy syncopated grooves

By DEREK LEIF
Collegian Staff

Though the Albany-based band Mambo X plays some of the catchiest amd most dancable tunes around, guitarist Seth Kaufman doesn't think the band has many hooks in its music. He does, however, think the band's music has a lot of grooves.

What's the difference?

"A hook is like the riff off "Jumping Jack Flash," said Kaufman. "The Smithereens are the ultimate hook band. You just repeat "Behind The Wall of Sleep" again and again. I think a groove appeals more to your rhythmic sense. It's more primal, where no single thing strikes out at you, no single instrument. It's all designed to massage your brain."

From the band's start three years ago when Kaufman, vocalist Erin O'Hara and former guitarist Mitch Rosen met in an ice cream shop, Mambo X has built up a loyal following. Their first album, Whirled, is due out in February, and it's produced by R.E.M. producer Mitch Easter.

New elections should also be held for senator posts

Why do members of student government refuse to cooperate in legitimizing the co-presidents-elect Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff? I hope the University of Massachusetts students will join together to let democratic elections take precedence over tyranny of student senators who are not helping students.

John Sutton

During Civility Week, Andrew Young, the mayor of Atlanta, gave a speech encouraging students to work with others to make progress in our society by learning to live and work together. This is not the message UMass students are getting from their representatives in the student senate.

My proposal to the Student Government Association: If conservatives opposed to ratifying the co-presidents-elect want to have a new election for the SGA presidency, then new elections should be held for all members of the Undergraduate Student Senate. Why?

First, while student senators are blocking the co-presidents-elect from office, they have not been helping the student body. Second, the blockers of ratification have incensed those who voted for and support the co-presidents-elect; if they feel so strongly that they know what democracy is supposed to be like, they should also be subject to elections.

If all student senators were to meet the test of a new election, the student senators' voting records would be displayed for the scrutiny of the student body. Students could review and judge whether they want to support those members who have and those who have not blocked ratifying the SGA co-presidents-elect, Rabinowitz and Silkoff.

Rabinowitz and Silkoff won the election by more than 300 votes when the they ran for office last March. They said they wanted to fight racism, oversubscribed classes, and tuition hikes. What has resulted from their effort is outstanding: the results of Civility Week and Hands Across UMass made national news.

Ask yourselves if you believe in democracy. Then consider the two names Rabinowitz and Silkoff. Their names were on the election ballot last March; they were the winners. Almost all students would agree that student leaders who take responsibility to fight against the injustices of racism, and the plague of oversubscribed classes and tuition hikes are good leaders for the best interests of students.

Those members who resist ratifying Rabinowitz and Silkoff disregard democracy, progress, and civility. We need leaders to work together, no matter who they are. Greg Rothman and Brian Darling along with the other student reactionary leaders, have slowed progress for too long.

I want student leaders who respect the election process, not those who feed their egos at the expense of UMass students. Rabinowitz and Silkoff ran on student issues, not on political ideologies. I believe they care about the students.

Silkoff and Rabinowitz disregard Constitution

I have been a student senator for over three years and I have seen a lot of crazy things. Quite frankly, I've helped to create a lot of crazy things, but nothing as crazy and outlandish as what is going on.

W. Greg Rothman

Past senates have ignored the student body, we have ignored common sense, we have ignored what was in the body's own best interest and we have ignored our own rules. But never before have so many senators wanted so badly to ignore the Student Judiciary and the Student Government Association Constitution. Last spring after the Student Supreme Court ruled the election "null and void," an appeal was heard. The court then issued an injunction preventing the senate from ratifying Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff as campus presidents.

Regardless, Rabinowitz and Silkoff want the rafification to come to a vote. Using their puppets in the senate, they have tried to confirm and ratify the elections since last March. When such senators as Tony Rudy and Brian Darling prevented them from doing that, they were attacked for "filibustering."

It seems that Rabinowitz and Silkoff feel that they are able to label and degrade those who have differing opinions. Certainly their puppets have fallen in lock-step behind them. But not everyone is prepared to swallow the lies and fuel their self-centered ambition.

Students are beginning to realize the immense Constitutional violation the senate would have made had it not been for the efforts of these principled senators.

I became involved in the ratification fight at the first meeting of this session. Even then I spoke of the controversy surrounding the issue of co-presidents. The action of 'filibustering" prevented what would otherwise be railroaded through with complete disregard for the judicial branch of the SGA. We will not allow the senate to commit contempt of court by ratifying an election which has been ruled null and void.

Silkoff and Rabinowitz seem to have no concern or need for the constitution.

They ran together because neither of them could win alone. They now seek to justify their last-minute marriage of convenience. The fact remains that the Constitution says only one person can run for the office of SGA President. If Rabinowitz's and Silkoff's blatant disregard for anything they dislike is any indication of the type of leaders they hope to be, the students have a lot to worry about.

I know the SGA Constitution and its bylaws. I respect them and the institutions they define. My critics can scream McCarthyism, anti-democracy and the like, but the truth of the matter is that the issue is political ideology only for one side of this fight — the ultra-left extremists. It has been said that if Rabinowitz and Silkoff were conservative this fight would not be taking place.

First of all, conservatives could have never gotten the senate into this mess by ignoring the Constitution. Secondly, Rabinowitz and Silkoff are ignoring the same Constitution written by the campus left of four years ago. That left, the left which sat in at Whitmore, would have never forsaken the document that is the foundation of student rights.

If Rabinowitz and Silkoff cared as the old left did, ratification would not be considered and the SGA Constitution would be preserved. This fight is not one of ideology, it is not even a fight about qualifications; it is a fight over the conservation of the one document that unites the senate, the SGA, and the student body. The Constitution.

We will fight to preserve that document. The senate will eventually realize after the smoke has cleared which side has been hindering the smooth functioning of the SGA and dividing the senate. The senate will then be able to hold new elections and get back to business defending students on issues such as the alcohol policy, the Halloween policy, the parking policy, the police station in Southwest, the over-subscribed classes, the Textbook Annex rip-off and the building of a hockey rink.

By continuing their illegal and selfish efforts, Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff and their fellow travellers have been 'filibustering' students' rights and the senate responsibilities.

Odds and ends

Two-party system should not dominate

After eight years, it seemed reasonable to expect that we would now be anticipating a transfer of power. When it became obvious that George Bush played a major role in an international scandal that made Watergate seem like so many little white lies, that should have sealed it.

John Purin

But something went wrong.

Instead, we now face at least four more years of government a la Reagan. (There are certain resemblances to another right-wing regime which held power for 12 years, but that's another story. . .) The voting public simply liked Bush better than Dukakis.

It was a pretty dismal election from the start. Marred by petty personal attacks and media overkill, the entire affair was a disgusting travesty. However, it would be wrong to blame all of this on the press or the candidates. These are merely inevitable side effects of that wacky little farce we like to call democracy in America.

During his recent visit to the University of Massachusetts, Libertarian candidate Ron Paul discussed issues on which neither of the "serious" contenders dared touch. Time and again, he referred to the "Republican Democrats." Americans are very proud of their two party system, but as Paul and the other third-party candidates make clear, the distinction has become meaningless.

Both parties cater to the allied desires of big business and the middle class. There are, of course, differences in rhetoric and specifics of policy, but these are minimal. When neither party seems committed to genuine social change, it should come as no surprise that most Americans simply chose the candidate who looked best on television, or they didn't vote at all.

This trend does not bode well for our electoral process. A society such as ours is bound to have complex problems. It is ridiculous to think that these can all be solved within the narrow ideological framework of the major parties.

We need to be open to all viewpoints, whether they come from Libertarians, Socialists, or Anarcho-syndicalists. Yet, third parties have historically been something of a joke in American politics, and are effectively barred from the system.

We live in an increasingly pluralistic society, large segments of which are excluded from the power structure because their views threaten the oligarchy of the "Republican Democrats." But if the system does not open itself up to those outside the mainstream, the day may soon come when those people feel compelled to cast their votes with Molotov Cocktails.

The band draws on African music for their sound (Kaufman lived in Kenya for several years), but Kaufman shies away from labels.

"We're not an African rip-off band," Kaufman said, "we're just very rhythmicly oriented. Erin's vocals remind me of people ranging from Kate Bush to Janice Joplin."

Kaufman said that much of the band's sound comes from its approach to playing music. Often Kaufman and the band's new co-guitarist, Dennis Blaine, will play carefully syncopated parts that move back and forth so that the two guitars sound like one.

"If you listen to African stuff, especially stuff from Zaire, you notice a lot of weaving in and out; it's very syncopated, and it's weaved together," Kaufman said.

Bassist Ken Powls and drummer Dave Pollack add yet another element, often providing a polyrhythmic contrast to Kaufman and Blaine. On top of this are O'Hara's vocals, which combine with the band's new co-vocalist Robin Gelman to create yet another layer of intertwining rhythms. Though Mambo X has been compared to another rhythmic band, 10,000 Maniacs, Kaufman doesn't think it's fair to compare the bands.

He thinks Mambo X is better.

"I can see the comparisons, but Erin demonstrates a lot more range than Natalie," said Kaufman, referring to 10,000 Maniacs lead singer Natalie Merchant. "If they had stayed where they were in their first E.P. - which had some reggae, some funk - I think it'd be a valid comparison.

"Even their first album was good - sounded like Fairport Convention - but the latest album is watered down rhythmic stuff, and it's a lot weaker. They've lost some energy, and our stuff rocks a lot harder."

Mambo X will perform at the Iron Horse Cafe on Thursday, Nov.17 at 8:30. Tickets are $5.

With warnings, Kinison is released

By JAMES MALOY
Collegian Correspondent

Have You Seen Me Lately?
Sam Kinison
Warner Bros.

One of the dumber things about living in the 80s is the creation of warning labels for rock records. Sexually repressed religious zealots have pressured record companies to put labels on rock records that they feel contain "objectionable" material

It's a big fuss about nothing; most of the albums that get these label are so lame that imagining their posing a threat to anyone with half a brain is ludicrous. But every once in a while, some completely sick mother comes out with an album that truly deserves labeling. The last one was Prince's Black Album which contained some fairly deviant words and ideas, and was never released by Warner Bros. due to the controversy they thought it would arouse.

You've gotta wonder what goes on in the minds of the people who run Warners, though, when they kill a mildly smutty Prince album but release Sam Kinison's Have You Seen Me Lately? which may very well be the single most offensive album in history. Kinison's last LP got a label warning that there was some stuff that certain people may have found offensive, but this one has a sticker which says that the views expressed within do not represent the views of Warner Bros. That's quite a step: from a warning label to a legal disclaimer.

Kinison deserves it though, because there is literally something on this album to offend everyone. Kinison appeals mostly to heterosexual white males with no particular religious affiliation. Females, homosexuals and Jesus Christ are his favorite targets. And he slams them. Hard

You may have heard his heavy-metal cover of "Wild Thing" on the radio. In Sam's hands, it ceases to be a statement of affection and desire for a woman and becomes a blast of anger at that special someone from your past who broke your heart for the very first time. If you are a guy, you might relate to the song, but might not admit it in public. If you are a woman, you'll probably hate it. Warning: "Wild Thing" is the only music track on this LP. It is also the least offensive thing on this LP.

Have You? contains fewer jokes than his first album and seems to exist solely to make people squirm in their seats. Just when you think he can't get any more offensive, he does. Most heavy metal bands would kill to create the vision of "Total Hell" that Sam does here: life is a torment, filled with women who are demons from hell sent to torture men. Our leaders, religious and otherwise, are total idiots, and the horror of it all doesn't end with death. And this is a comedy album. God help us if he decides to make an all-heavy-metal album.

This is a very heavy album to deal with. The guys I played it for laughed, but seemed kind of uncomfortable at doing so. The one female I played it for left the room after 5 minutes. If this doesn't sound like a glowing recommendation, well, it ain't. But if you want to leave an unforgettable message on an ex-lover's answering machine, or cause a religious fanatic to die of cardiac arrest, then snarf this sucker up. But don't say you weren't given enough warnings not to.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1988

NUMMO is the magic power of the spoken and written word. With each word translated there escapes vapor. Vapor is a form of water. Water is necessary for the existance of all life forces on earth

The Black News Service strongly believes that our newspaper will speak the truths of the protractive struggle of black people. Only through the truth can we, as a people develop a clear and precise knowledge of the world and its perplexities. When we receive knowledge, it is our duty to use it and share it with you, our fellow brothers and sisters.

It is through this exchange of written information which you, the people transfer the spoken word into power. Then together we will surely become the creators of our creative life forces, our destiny.

"I am, because we are, and since we are, therefore I am."

NUMMO would like to inform the public about information that may be both educational and enlightening to the community. The following articles are compiled from a spokesperson from the Nation of Islam and are not neccessarily the views of NUMMO's staff.

JESSE JACKSON, MINISTER FARRAKHAN AND THE JEWS!

The most recent attacks on Black people and their leaders started in 1983 during the presidential campaign of Reverend Jesse L. Jackson. THe following is a chronology of these events:

1983-Some Jews organize a group, calling themselves "Jews Against Jackson", to oppose the candidacy of Reverend Jesse L. Jackson, a Black civil rights leadeer and founder of "People United to Save Humanity" or Operation PUSH. The J.A.J. protested by taking out full page advertisement with the slogan "Ruin Jesse, Ruin," mocking the slogan of Jackson's supporters, "Run Jesse, Run".

1983-4-Reverend Jackson becomes the symbol of Black political advancement, registering thousands of Blacks and poor Whites to vote in local and national elections. Hundreds of threats against the life of Reverend Jackson and his family were recorded and several arrests are made. THe remains of mutilated animals were left at the home of Jackson and his campaign headquarters in two cities were bombed. Jackson enlists the support of Minister Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam whose elite organization of bodyguards named the "Fruit of Islam", secure the life of the candidate.

THE "HITLER" REMARK-WHAT'S THE TRUTH

February 25, 1984 In a speech given by Farrakhan at a rally for Jackson, he notes the unusually bitter attacks on Jackson by Jewish leaders and organizations.

"Now whether you know it or not, anytime a Black man stands up with justice in his mouth, his life is on the line. You know that, don't you brothers and sisters? When Jesse decided to run, Jesse decided to put his life on the line. It is unthinkable that we should let our brother go down into the valley of the shadow of death and we say 'Watch Jesse run. Look at Jesse go.' It is unthinkable that we should not go down with him so that we may go up with him. I say whether we know it or not, there have been over a hundred real threats on this man's life already and several people are already in jail for thinking, planning to do harm to this brother. What has he done to merit this kind of thinking in the American public? What has he done? I'll tell you what he's done. He's freed the minds of these young Black boys and girls who will never again think that Black people cannot rule themselves and go to the top, this is what he's done. What has he done? He stands up for the poor, the oppressed and the locked out. WHat ahs he done? He's extended his hand to the American Indian, the owners of the country who languish on reservation while others live from the riches of their land. He reaches out to the Mexican American, to the Hispanic American. He reaches out to the poor and to the women. But there's another segment that her reaches out to. He reaches out to Arab Americans. No president or no presidential candidate goes to the Arab seeking Arab American votes. Reverend Jesse Jackson has the nerve to do that and because he had the nerve to want to include all, not some, he's hated."

"I'm saying to the Jewish people who may not like our brother, it is not Jesse Jackson that you are attacking. Remember this now. You're not attacking an individual. Jesse's gone past that now. When you attack him, you attack the millions that are lining up with him. You're attacking all of us. That's not intelligent. That's not an intelligent thing to do. That's not wise. We know that Blacks and Jews have had a good relationship in the past. We've gotten along well, because you're a suffering people and so are we. But my dear friends, you must understand that everything comes of age. We cannot define our self interests in terms of your interest. And because our self interests differ because we've come of age, why dislike us? Why attack our champion? Why hurl stones at him? Why feed the press so that they can create a climate into which hatred and bitterness and strife can be poured, creating the same kind of climate that led to the assination of John Kennedy, the assination of Martin Luther King, Jr., Malcolm X and Bobby Kennedy. Why create that kind of climate when you have the power to turn it around and show the world that you realize what you're doing? Are you are as blind as the government? And if the blind lead the blind, both fall in the ditch. You are blind.

"You do not realize there are 35 to 45 percent of your armed forces are Black. It is we who you will send to Nicaragua. It is we who will be sent to Grenada. It is we who you sent to Lebanon. It is we who will be sent to fight your wars. This is our brother. This is our son. This is our champion. If you harm this brother, what do you think we should do about it? How can we fight for America, if America kills all of our fighters who fight for our justice? This is a foolish thing you are doing.

"I say to you as intelligent people, sit down and talk with Rev. Jesse Jackson. Sit down Jewish leaders and talk with us. We are ready to talk with you. Sit down and talk like intelligent people who have a future at stake. But if you harm this brother, I warn you in the name of Allah this will be the last one you harm. We are not making any idle threats, we have no weapons, we [don't] carry so much as a pen knife. But I do tell the world that Almighty God Allah is backing us up in what we say and what we do, and we warn you in His name leave this servant of Almighty God alone. Leave him alone. If you want to defeat him at the polls, we can stand to lose an election, but we cannot stand to lose our brother..."

On February 27, 1984, Nat Hentoff, a Jewish leader and columnist for the Village Voice participates in a New York radio call-in-show. He refers to the comments by Farrakhan and characterizes the Muslim leader as a "Black Hitler."

On March 11, 1984 Min. Farrakhan responds to this insult in a radio braodcast from Chicago:

"..So I said to the members of the press, 'Why won't you go and look into what we are saying about the threats on Reverend Jackson's life? 'Here the Jews don't like Farrakhan and so they call me 'Hitler.' Well that's a good name. Hitler was a very great man. He wasn't great for me as a Black man but he was great German and he rose Germany up from the ashes of her defeat by the united force of all of Europe and America after the first world war. Yet Hitler took Germany and made her the greatest fighting machine of the twentieth century, brothers and sisters, and even though Europe and America had deciphered the code that Hitler was using to speak to his chief[s] of staff, they still had trouble defeating Hitler's evil toward Jewish people, but that's a matter of record. He rose Germany up from nothing. Well, in a sense you could say there is a similarity in that we are rising our people up from nothing, but don't compare me with wicked killers.

"Why would we tolerate this. I've been among Black people as a teacher from Honorable Elijah Muhammad for nearly thirty years. I'm not a stranger in America. I have lectured in every major university and college and theological seminary in this country. I'm well known by my brothers and sisters who are scholarly. I ask, why should we submit when a White man calls one of our Black brothers a Hitler that we don't rise up and take them to task. You wait for Farrakhan to come and defend himself, though I am a defender of Black people. Not that it matters to me whether you defend me not. That's up to you. But that would show some gratitude on your part for the work of your brother. I am defended by God and He's sufficient for me, He and his Apostle, but when you can allow the enemy to call your leaders anything they want to and get away with it, then you are selling yourself again into slavery."

Minister Louis Farrakhan
Servant to the Lost-Found Nation of Islam
Publisher of the Final Call

Immediately the media is filled with Jewish charges the Minister Farrakhan praised Adolf Hitler, based on this statement.

"Great" is word that is assigned to anything that has a lasting influence or consequence. The twleve volume Oxford English Dictionary uses four full pages to define "great" and only one of the definitions suggests a positive or lauditory connotation. The others refer to the size or magnitude, quantity or scope of a thing or event. Webster's Unabridged Third New International Dictionary goes even further. Its primary definition refers to a "large spatial dimension" and then uses the example of a "politician," "dictator" or "creator of political confusion" Adolph Hitler was all three

We should note that Muslims did not write Webster's Dictionary nor did they freely choose to speak English, that's a language that they picked up from the slave master. If Minister Farrakhan simply called Hitler "great", he would have been entirely correct, according to Mr. Webster, but he thoughtfully expressed his belief that Hitler was also an evil wicked killer. Americans call all of the following things "great"

The Great Train Robbery, Babylon, Earhtquakes that register over 8 on the Richter scale, Alexander the Great, the Great Depression, The Great White Shark, Great Britain, the Graet Wall of China, the stock market crash, the Hindenburgh disaster, Ceasar, his ghost, wars, disasters, massacres, revolutions, communist political purges, China and the Soviet Union, among other things. In realm of evil and wickedness Adolf Hitler was a great man.

his friend and ally, Nation of Islam leader, Minister Louis Farrakhan. Using their propaganda department (NBC, CBS, ABC, all major newspapers and wire services; see "Jews and the Press"), they purposely distorted the words on Farrakhan in an attempt to harm the candidacy of Jackson.(see attached article)

DID FARRAKHAN CALL JUDAISM A "GUTTER RELIGION"?

The Jews persist in their lies claiming that Farrakhan called Judaism a "gutter religion". Here is the actual statement from a speech on his return to America from Libya:

June 24, 1984 at the Arlington St. Church, Boston

"...America and England and the nations backed Israel's existence. Therfore when you aid and abett someone in criminal conspiracy. So America and England and the nations are criminals in the sight of almighty God. Now that nation called Israel, never has had any peace in forty years and she will never have any peace because ther can never be any peace structured on injustice, thievery, lying and deceit and using the name of God to shield your dirty religion under his holy and righteous name.

"...America and England and the nations, because of their backing of Israel, are being drawn into the heat of the third world war, which is called Armaggedon. Oh America, you have blundered so. And instead of recognizing the mistake you have made and make a turn for the better,you persist in your evil. And so the consequences of evil must come. You hate us because we dare to say that we are the chosen people of God and can back it up..."

Farrakhan used the term "dirty religion" to describe the practices of some ????????ioner of a true religion of God.

Farrakhan has regularly said that Muslim "big bellied sheiks that live in oppulence when their people live in squalor are participating a dirty relion." Christians that give the poor a bible a then exploit their faith and take their natural resources, in the name of God, have dirtied the religion. TV evangilists who thrive off faith of the gullibIle and the ignorant, have dirtied the religion. Farrakhan is 100/ correct and perfectly truthful in this matter.

No true religion can possibly be a "gutter" religion. These truths were revealed to bring people up out of the gutter and in this work lies the value of religion. If a person truly follows the law of Moses, he/she is a freind of the Nation of Isalm.

HYMIE, HYMIETTOWN AND JESSE

Milton Coleman, a Black Washington Post reporter, mentioned to a white post reporter in Post's office, that he heard Jesse Jackson refer to Jews as "Hymies" and to New York as "Hymietown". These remarks were uttered by Jackson in a private conversation with Coleman and other Black journalists. The White reporter then reported this in the article the next day.

Jackson apparently felt that he spoke in confidence with these reporters of the pressures of campaigning. The Jews were apparently intent on destroying Jackson, and his remark may have reflected his frustration with their persistent and baseless attacks as he was about to campaign in New York, where the Jewish population is over 3 million. Blacks, when among themselves, will regularly call themselves or each other "nigger", in a good natured way to describe a stereotypical behavior or attitude that they may exhibit. "Hymie" is a derivative of the Hebrew word "chaim"(rhymes with buy 'em)which means "life." The Jewish attacks against independent Black leaders are certainly lively. Jackson's remarks were unfortunate, as there is no need to refer to any group in a derogatory way but his statement was taken out of context. Surely, he thought that those around him could interpolate his meaning in light of the current tensions. Jackson later apologized

JEWS SPREAD EVEN MORE LIES

APRIL 1984-The Simon Wiesenthal Center, named after the Jewish Nazi, mailed a fundraising letter containing the most vicious and libelous attacks on Black people and their leaders including Andr4ew Young and Louis Farrakhan in particular. This three page letter, signed by William R. Perl, compares Farrakhan to Adolf Eichmann and Adolf Hitler and variously calls him an antisemite, a hater, a Nazi, a bigot, a tyrant , and a terrorist, among other charges.

JEWS ISSUE DEATH THREATS

The Jewish Defense League create demonstrations at Nation of Islam events, calling them "Death To Farrakhan Rallies." These public death threats are tolerated and apparently encouraged by law enforcement personnel.

IT SHOULD BE NOTED at this point that the Nation of Islam under the guidance of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad has never called for the death of any man or women. In fact, the Muslim is taught to respect all laws and persons. The public meetings of the N.O.I. are the most well attended and peaceful gatherings of Black people that can be found.

Muslims followers of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad do not paint swastikas on Synagogues or attend auctions for Nazi memorabilia. We are not the ones who would pay 10 thousand for a painting by Adolf Hitler, nor write or collect books about him. We would not secretly or overtly arrange for hundreds of Nazi war criminals come into our country giving them new identities and jobs or accept the support of such a country. Our leaders have not gone to Bitburg to lay wreaths on the graves of Nazi war criminals. We do not elect them as head of the United Nations or President of our country. We believe that these acts are abhorrent.

The Jews who make these accusations have never produced on human being who lost their life or liberty or presented even a shred of evidence proving that Minister Farrakhan advocated for such. Most telling, however, is the fact that these Jewish attackers have called Minister Farrakhan almost every name but "liar."

JEWS ATTACK 1988 JACKSON CANDIDACY

March 1988-Jesse Jackson arrived in New York for the Democratic primary with more popular votes than any other candidate.

Jewish mayor, Edward Koch, ignited racial tensions by proclaiming that "Jews would have to be crazy to vote for Jesse Jackson." The Jackson campaign amnager is Jewish. The Jewish press, daily dredged up lies up to twenty years old as if they were yesterday's news. The four year old lies about Minister Farrakhan were revived to attack Jackson once again showing a shameless character flaw in the Jewish community.

Jackson lost the primary to Gov. Dukakis who himself remained silent as the Jews practiced this character assasination.

CONCLUSION

MINISTER LOUIS FARRAKHAN is the leader of Black People in the United States and around the world. His message of self-help and self-determination has brought hope and dignity to an ailing Black world community. We fully expect that those that disagree with the philosophy of The Honorable Elijah Muhammad as taught by His National and International Representative, Minister Louis Farrakhan, will debate the matter in a civilized and intellectual fashion. We no longer accept the demagogic mentality of his opponents who seek to encourage violent dissension among our community. Our self-interest dictates that we unify with our people to solve the many problems that afflict us. Those outside the community, who persist in their vicious and unsubstantiated attacks on our leaders, have and economic interest in our disunity. We are a new Black People and we intend to be free and independent.

WE HEREBY CHALLENGE ALL JEWS AND THEIR LEADERS AND SCHOLARS TO A "WINNER TAKE ALL"PUBLIC DEBATE ON THE FACTS OF HISTORY AND RELIGION. IN FACT, WE CHALLENGE ANYONE WHO CARES TO ADDRESS THE MATTER. WHO ARE THE CHOSEN PEOPLE OF THE BIBLE? PROVE THAT MINISTER LOUIS FARRAKHAN HAS LIED AND THE NATION OF ISLAM WILL CEASE AS AN ORGANIZATION. YOU CHOOSE THE VENUE, BE IT THE ALLEY WAY OR THE BOULEVARD, AND WE WILL BE THERE. WE INTEND TO SET THE RECORD STRAIGHT ONCE AND FOR ALL.

Farrakhan: where it all began

Suzette E.B. Hunte
Nummo Staff

Muslim, Minister and Orator Louis Farrakhan was born on May 11, 1933 in New York. His mother was a native of the island of St. Kitts, his father from the island of Jamaica. In 1936, Farrakhan, his mother and his older brother moved to Roxbury section of Boston where he was raised.

Graduating with honors from Boston English High School, Farrakhan left Boston for North Carolina where he attended Winston-Salem Teacher's College. He withdrew after his junior year to pursue a career in show business as a calypso singer and dancer in order to support his wife Betsy, whom he married in September of 1953, and their new family.

In February of 1955, while headlining as "The Charmer" in a Chicago show called the "Calypso Follies", Farrakhan attended a meeting of The Nation of Islams National Saviour's Day Convention, where he entered into and accpeted the teachings of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad.

After living in New York under the apprenticeship of Black liberation leader Malcolm X, Minister Farrakhan was recommended by Malcolm to head the Boston Temple where he served as Minister from 1956-1965. In May of 1965, three months after murder of Malcolm X, The Honorable Elijah Muhammad appointed Farrakhan as the Minister of Temple Number 7, that had previously been under Malcolm X's leadership.

Due to the conscientious works of Minister Louis Farrakhan, Temple Number 7 went on to become the strongest Temple in the Nation of Islam. Under his leadership, the Temple opened 17 businesses, 3 schools, 5 mahor temples, and a host of other satellite temples scattered throughout the New York Area.

Farrakhan's command of the English language, his eloquence of the speech and his ability to make clear the Message of The Honarable Elijah Muhammad, drew thousands of people in the New York area to the nation of Islam. On May 31,1974, Farrakhan attracted the largest gathering of Black people in Harlem history when he delivered his "Black Family Day Speech" on Randall's Island.

In June of 1975, Farrakhan was removed his position as Muslim Minister of New York City. The death of The Honorable Elijah Muhammad in February of 1975, coupled with the assumption of his leadership by Imamu W.B. Muhammad, brought drastic changes within The Nation and Minister Farrakhan as well.

A few months after the move of Farrakhan to Chicago in July of 1975, he resigned his voice as a minister of The Nation of Islam.

However, in 1977, after traveling throughout the world - the Middle East, Africa, South and Central America, Europe-and witnessing the worsening condition of Black people around the globe, Farrakhan decided to resume his voice as a Minister to deliver the clear Message and Teachings of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad in order to help Black people uplift themselves and their race.

Since 1977, Minister Farrakhan has traveled throughout this country bringing the Message of the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, unity for Black people, to the Black comunity.

Minister Farrakhan, by going into the churches of the Black community and into the colleges that members of this community attend preaching and lecturing for unity of our people, has shown that Muslims, Christians, and the ability to join hands as brothers and sisters. Farrakhan used his gift of speech in order to help motivate and stimulate Black people across America to rally behind the Reverend Jesse Jackson during his 1984 and '88 campaigns for the Presidency of the United States.

In 1985, Minister Farrakhan, in one of his most memorable engagements, delivered P.O.W.E.R.(Power Working for Economic Rebirth) before a crowd of approximately 13,000 in New York's Madison Square Garden in which he called for a restoration of Black People America to their original industrial and commercial greatness.

Today Minster Farrakhan continues to perpetuate his messge of economics rebirth and self improvement through his Black Agenda, a program that calls for the true assertion of our basic human rights in order for Blacks to attain true justice and equal oppurtunity under the law.

Farrakhan and the Black-Jewish rift

By David Nyhan
(Globe Columnist)

When Minister Louis Farrakhan speaks, people listen. But what they hear is another story.

Many blacks are enthralled by the fiery Nation of Islam militant who dares to say things most blacks would not.

Many Jews are horrified by the way he tosses off observations about Hitler or Jews or US society, because they feel he is a dangerous demagogue who may exacerbate racial tensions. Many non-Jewish whites feel threatened or frightened by his rhetoric, because Farrakhan seems to say many things for shock value.

In person, he is slim, restrained, polite, rational. He is fiercely proud of his outspokenness against what he sees as racist white domination of black people. He says he's become the most controversial black in the land, solely because he will not buckle to the white power structure.

He is also the avowed enemy of the Uncle Tom. He was speaking of the black elite the day he declared: "Our preacher-politician-education class of people are the worst crop of black people that we have ever had in our history." It's not just whites who get singed by his blowtorch rhetoric.

That comment came in the same March 11 radio broadcast in Chicago in which he appeared to threaten the life of the Washington Post reporter who disclosed Reverend Jesse Jackson's "Hymie" remarks. That same speech hadis first reference to hitler. That same speech was aimed to his regular black audience, but it has become the most controversial speech of the year - among whites. Until that point, Farrakhan's audience was mainly blacks, among whom he'd built a small but loyal following.

Farrakhan has since made many statements and ignited much controversy. The qualifications he employs often evaporate when quotes are picked up by the news media. Explanations, such as his claim that he did not threaten the Post reporter's life, have been unconvincing to many.

Farrakhan insists his remarks are often taken out of context to embarrass him or Jackson, whom he supports. In Boston last week, Farrakhan claimed his original reference to Hitler was prompted by critics who, he said, had compared him to Hitler. A review of some press accounts of the original incident shows, as he claims, that he was not quoted fully.

Many politicians, such as Walter Mondale, Gary Hart and Sen. Edward Kennedy, have condemned Farrakhan's remarks about Hitler. Many Jewish leaders also have denounced the Hitler remarks.

A national Jewish organization, the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) of B'nai B'rith, issued a 24-page fact sheet on Farrakhan that characterizes his views as "violent hostility toward whites in general and Jews in particular." The ADL says his words show he appeals to "bigotry and racism."

An excerpted transcript of his March 11 speech, from the April 17 New York Times, shows that he did qualify his remarks about Hitler. Those qualifications were deleted from the ADL fact sheet. Here's the original Times version; the sentences in capital letters are those deleted from the ADL fact sheet:

"Here come the Jews don't like Farrakhan, so they call me Hitler. Well, that's a good name. Hitler was a very great man. He wasn't great for me as a black person, but he was a great German. NOW I'M NOT PROUD OF HITLER'S EVIL AGAINST JEWISH PEOPLE, BUT THAT'S A MATTER OF RECORD. He rose Germany up from nothing. Well, in a sense you could say there's similarity in that we are rising our people up from nothing. BUT DON'T COMPARE ME WITH YOUR WICKED KILLERS."

The headlines out of this affair were not along the lines that,"Farrakhan says he's not proud of Hitler's evil against Jewish people." or "Farrakhan denounces Hitler as evil."

The headlines were more like: "Farrakhan calls Hitler Great." In Boston, Farrakhan said that he distinguished between great and good, that freat can be bad as well as good. For many people, that kind of rationalization doesn't hold water. They hear "great" and they think it means that in his heart, Farrakhan thinks Hitler was right.

The ADL defends the ommissions in its fact sheet. Alan Schwartz, assistant director of research for the ADL in New York, said in a phone interview that he prepared the fact sheet.

Schwartz says that he omitted the two sentences for reasons of brevity and that he in no way twisted Farrakhan's remarks to make the Black Muslim leader seem more pro-Hitler than he is.

"I don't think it is misleading at all," he said. His omissions did not "substantially alter the import and meaning," and "clearly, he was seeking to promote the idea of a positive attitude toward Hitler." Quibbling over the omission of the two sentences is "splitting hairs," he said.

"It was a statement, at the bottom line, in praise of Hitler, which is a outrage," Schwartz maintained.

Schwarz and other ADL officials interviewed about this believe the case is open-and-shut. And many other people, some as prominent as Mondale and Kennedy, agree that Farrakhan is beyond the pale.

But the fact remains; Farrakhan originally said "I'm not proud of Hitler's evil against Jewish people,"and he asked,"Don't compare me with your wicked killers." To delete these phrases changes Farrakhan's meaning.

The issue now goes beyond whether the ADL's version of Farrakhan's words accurately conveys his meaning. The current level of black-Jewish tention is dangerously high.

Jackson's presidential campaign, a crusade to most blacks is widely feared by many Jews. The ADL's national director, Nathan Perlmutter, branded Jackson an anti-Semite. The black-Jewish split presents a major problem to the Democratic Party as it heads into a national convention with its most loyal constituencies at loggerheads.

It is the most significant rift the party faces. The rupture of the long-time civil rights alliance has ominous implications that go far beyond one political party or one political year.

EDITORIAL/ OPINION

Charles Sheffield
Editorial

Black students, mark their methods. Do witness the confusion and insults levied against the Black community. Make note of the repusively servile negros on the grounds. The act of standing up lures these creatures out of their hiding places. The act of self actualization rips the ranting of "Black Power, Black Power",off of the slimy lips of the employed Negros; or should we say "Negros for Hire'. THe potential of economic self control brings out the true nature of the racist beasts.

Anytime a Black man stands uncompromisingly for his rights, this wicked society stands equally as firm against him. When I decide to join in a struggle with or for my people, I stand uncompromisingly strong against any and all opposition. The act of smearing my name throughout the Collegian, not once but twice , was perceived by many, including myself, with malicious intent. I am curious, however, that the name of the graduate student who allegedly voted in breach of the DVP constitution has not been publicized. How I personally obtain my Mechanical Engineering degree is of little consequence to the delivery of a Black speaker. How a bunch of incompetent children, who produce the bulk of their news from police reports and AP bylines musters up the gumption to quote a quote of a quote of a Black leader is quite an insult. And how these same silly boys and girls try to publize my administrative affairs invokes a bold, hearty laugh especialily since this is my last year. Throw your mud little people. This battle gets heavier than that. Farrakhan this, Farrakhan that. You hypocritical liars don't even know who Farrahkan is. You don't even know ANY Black liberation leaders. Ignorance breeds hatred and hysteria. I welcome a policy editorial repudiating Farrakhan from the joke Collegian. I applaud the "Three Ring' senate's motion to coondemn my organization. The na-slay reactionary parade of fools and half witted clowns posing as student leaders is an inevitable calculation. We must, sadly enough, factor in the slave mellowdramatics of the Negros like Ester Terry. Indeed this could've been, proud black woman has at some point lost her dignity and cowtowed to the "All-American call to repudiation': That season when the plantation gets hot and the house Negros are summoned to put the "uppity niggras' in place . No calls to reflect on the wonderment of the world, No calls to repudiate South Africa. No calls to repudiate Ronald Wilson Reagen, Ed Meese or Oliver North. But like a mother goose tale she will come straight off the pancake box with a hankerchief head and tell the Amherst Bulletin that she is, "sad that we decided to bring him here'Why are you so sad? Are you sad to see a black man clean doped pushers, pimps, prostitutes, drug addicts, alcoholics, convicts and homeless people up? 'Who have you reformed? Are you sad that a Black man creates jobs, schools, manufacturing plants and social institutions to serve Black people? What have you and your syrup pouring self created besides bad breath? Are you jealous that a single Black man can fill every civic center in the country to capacity including Madison Square Garoen with Black men and women from all walks of life? Who wants to hear what you a have to say? In short Aunt Jemima ain't supposed to be sad, just keep mixin' batter, with⅓ less butter.

If you aren't doing something to build Black student's experience at this university then you have fundementally nothing of value to say. You don't have a comment, now do you. If singing on the campus lawn and holding hands is the universities solution then Black students must excersize their will over their portion of the wealth in the public university. We don't need any more back bending Negros, we need some revolutionary scholars like Ivan Vvan Sertima, Dr. Leonard Jeffreies, John Henrik Clark, Chancellor Williams, Asa Hillard, Maulana Karenga. When the student organizations like DVP will fund WIlliam F. BUckley at more than 13 thousand dollars and fail to sponsor a single Black speaker in five years, the administration needs to direct funds to offset the racial bias and ignorance of said organizations. How is there Civility otherwise? How else can there be multiculturalism? This university is heaped in the mnire of disguised hypocrisy. There has been no lack of white support when Black people are singing and dancing at New World THeater. So don't come out now with your lies to slander another African son. This wicked society victimized Marcus Garvey, Paul Roberson, and Malcolm X similarly. Not another Black Liberation figure will fall prey for blood thirsty whites to feed on. The Black community will never deliver up or ostracize another of our most brilliant for your Evil pleasures.

Plagued with complacency

Robin Pratts
Nummo Staff

I remember vividly sitting at the kitchen table listening to my grandmother, mother, and aunt reminiscence about their experiences in the civil rights movement. They marched, sang, sat-in, and boycotted, for the civil rights that others even killed and died for to gain, so that we, the next generation, the children, could enjoy.

In the books, poems, and folklore, passed down through generations from our forefathers, they tell us how they fought tirelessly not so much that their lives would be better, but rather so their children's lives would be better. Our great-grandparents fought and struggled for our grandparents. Our grandparents fought and struggled for our parents. Our parents fought and struggled for us. Are we fighting and struggling for ourselves and our children? What are we doing now? WHat would our ancestors who excaped from slavery so that their children, our great-grandfathers and grandmothers could grow up free, say about our productivity, or rather lack of productivity today? Too many of us are plagued with complacency. Too many of us are enjoying luxuries (and yes they are luxuries)that our ancestors killed and died for, feeling no one iota of responsibility to fight to overcome this still very racist world. WE are allowing ourselves to be plagued with the mercenary mentality of "I got mine, you get yours"syndrome, and thus allowing ourselves to be an inactive, disunified, weak body of people.

Why do so many affluent black businessmen and businesswomen move out of the black commmunities that supported them, into predominantly white suburbs to join the white businesses, instead of joining other small black businessmen to form one business that could create jobs for some fobless, and homes for some homeless? We are plagued with complacency.

There is no legitimate reason why the miniscule, miinority of blacks on this campus are not a unified body. We cannot be complacent. We cannot allow superficial,and materialistic things to break our bonds of brotherhood and sisterhood. We cannot succumb to the "I got mine, you get yours" syndrome and accept disunity, and thus accept ourselves as being a weak, and uninfluential body of people.

Dr. King said "We shall overcome," not "I shall overcome ."We must unite, we must support each other, and we must act. Do it for yourself. Do it for the ancestors. Do it for the children.

For whom the Bell Knolls

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Correspondent

Blue Bell Knoll
Cocteau Twins
4AD

There is a very fine line between what is ethereal and what is New Age. The Cocteau Twins then, are like a tightrope walker; balancing between nirvana and the vacuous abyss, between an indescribable heaven and an all too vivid hell. Sometimes they'll trip up or overbalance, like on Victorialand, but most of the time they get it right . . . instinctively.

Blue Bell Knoll gets it right. The Twins have rediscovered their history, plundered their own treasure, and have come up with new and brilliantly shining gems. On the title track, Liz Frazer's singularly remarkable voice flutters and takes wing like never before, an angel hovering above a familiar dreamscape of exquisitely over-layered guitars. She speaks a language which no one can possibly understand, yet everyone does, implicitly.

"For Phoebe Still A Baby" uses Frazer's vocal harmonizing to great effect on a song which Kate Bush would be proud of, while "The Itchy Glowbo Blow" glides on a wave of incandescent splendour, reminiscent of "Love's Easy Tears."

"Cico Buff" kicks off side two with the Cocteaus' typical "wave crashing" guitar progressions, but is rescued from ignonimity by that voice which once again demonstrates astonishing range; from the seemingly unreachable heights of "Akea Guinea", to "Song To The Siren's" tortured wail in one song.

As a whole this album is much more commercial than previous efforts; if it wasn't for the title and Frazer's voice, "Ella Megalast Burls Forever" could be an outtake from the latest Aztec Camera record. It lacks the difficult, fragmented quality that made Garlands and Head Over Heels so appealing, but it's poppiness gives Blue Bell Knoll a different kind of appeal. This is the first Cocteau Twins album that you could feasibly dance to, and that to my mind is a pretty remarkable acheivement for this, the most meditative of bands.

Hampshire's Resistible Rise presents historical metaphor of Hitler

By Kim Frisino
Collegian Correspondent

Hampshire College's presentation of The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, by Bertolt Brecht, is a treat for those interested in the events of the Adolph Hitler saga; other theater-goers interested solely in entertainment may be disappointed.

The play's setting is Chicago, 1941. Arturo Ui is an almost-has-been gangster looking for a market to corrupt and take over, to return him to the top of the mob scene. He becomes involved in the dealing of cauliflower (yes, the vegetable) through some dirty dealings. The rest of the play is one huge metaphor for Hitler's rise to power.

At one point, Ui takes lessons from an actor in a hotel room to learn how to "present himself" properly in order to convince the common people that he is for them and with them. At the end of the scene, a newsboy shines a flashlight onto the upstage wall to illuminate a headline telling of Hitler's actual acting lessons. This technique of drawing similarities between Arturo Ui's cauliflower scam and Hitler's political actions was carried on throughout the entire play. Unfortunately, this clever method became monotonous too soon, and the play seemed to bore on.

This production is part of a theater class at Hampshire College. Many of the male roles were effectively portrayed by women and vice versa. Wendy W. Lanxner faithfully convinced us of her middle-aged stogie-smoking Flake portrayal mostly by never falling out of character. Quite comically, Karl Schoonover sauntered in his bright red Charleston-style garb as the flaky girlfriend; the classic "Whatcha doin', Honey?" gum-chewing worked real well for him. Liev Schreiber (Ernesto Roma) accomplished the difficult job of making the audience feel for the bad guy, and Jonathan Garber as Ui himself clearly understood Brecht's message about Hitler right down to the little moustache under his nose.

This production is a participating entry in the American College Theater Festival.

The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui runs tonight through Nov. 20 at 8:00 p.m. in the Mainstage Theater, Emily Dickinson Hall at Hampshire College. General admission is $3; Five College students, $2.50. Special rate of $1 for admission to tonight's show.

More teenagers in Mass having sex, but condom use is up 15 percent

BOSTON (AP) — More Massachusetts teen-agers are having sex than did two years ago, but a fear of AIDS is causing them to wear condoms more often when they do and to cut back on drug use, according to a Boston University study.

A report on the study by the Boston University School of Public Health is to be presented Thursday at this week's annual meeting of the American Public Health Association.

The study's sponsor was the National Institute on Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse, which wanted to test the effectiveness of AIDS education.

The study of 1,762 adolescents reported that 61 percent of participants aged 16 to 19 reported having sexual intercourse during the past year; half said they had more than one partner.

In a 1986 study of 825 adolescents, 55 percent of those 16 to 19 said they had had sexual intercourse during the past year.

The percentage of adolescents using drugs other than marijuana and alcohol dropped from 13 percent in 1986 to 9 percent in 1988, and intravenous drug use fell from 1 percent to .1 percent.

Reported condom use among sexually active youths rose from 2 percent to 19 percent, and the percentage of those who said they changed their sex habits to avoid AIDS rose from 16 percent to 34 percent.

The percentage of youths who said they had received some education at school about acquired immune deficiency syndrome rose from 52 percent to 82 percent.

Ralph Hingson, lead author of the study, said what is needed is more one-on-one counseling from parents, doctors and other professionals who "can give adolescents realistic appraisals of the risks and allow them to avoid exposure to the virus" associated with AIDS.

The 1988 study found that 18 percent of the adolescents said they had unprotected sex with more than one partner the previous year, and 3 percent said they had intercourse with intravenous drug users.

Among the sexually active, 37 percent said they never use condoms, and 33 percent said they don't always use them.

Myths about AIDS wee less acceptable in 1988 than in 1986, the study also found. The number of young people who thought they could contract AIDS from sharing eating or drinking utensils dropped from 38 percent to 11 percent, and the number who believed they could get the disease from toilet seats dropped from 15 percent to 5 percent.

BU researchers did a separate study of 1,323 adults one year ago and found a gap in knowledge about AIDS among the 55 Hispanics in the group.

US rejects claim by PLO to West Bank and Gaza

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration yesterday rejected a PLO proclamation of an independent Palestinian state, asserting that the Arab-Israeli conflict must be settled by negotiations and not by unilateral acts.

Spokesman Charles Redman said the status of the West Bank and Gaza Strip "cannot be determined by unilateral acts of either side but only through a process of negotiations."

"A declaration of independent Palestinian statehood is such a unilateral act," Redman said. A similar statement was issued by White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Fitzwater said that despite US opposition to the proclamation of an independent Palestinian state, the administration sees "positive elements" to the Palestine National Council meeting in Algiers, most notably its support for UN Security Council resolutions 224 and 338. These lay the groundwork for a comprehensive settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Redman said the administration has not yet seen the final text of the resolution opproved by the PNC but promised it would receive serious study.

"Our objective is a comprehensive peace," Redman said. "Direct negotiations must be at heart of the negotiating process. Palestinian participation is required at every stage of negotiations. All participants in the negotiations must renounce terrorism and violence and each must agree on the accepted international basis of UN Security Council resolutions 224 and 330."

Fitzwater said it "still is not clear just how specific" the Palestine Liberation Organization has been about extending an olive branch to Israel by implicitly recognizing the Jewish state's right to exist.

Radioactivity from Savannah plant found

CHARLESTOWN, S.C. (AP) — Researchers have discovered small quantities of a radioactive substance in material dredged from Savannah Harbor about 100 miles downstream from the Savannah River Plant.

Cesium 137, a radioactive isotope, was found in material taken from the harbor and dumped on the South Carolina side of the Savannah River, which forms the border with Georgia. Tests found tiny amounts of the material, insufficient to create a health hazard, the Charleston News and Courier reported yesterday.

The tests were done for the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department by researchers at the University of Georgia. The wildlife agency is sampling dredged material for pollutants because of water quality problems believed to be caused by industrial discharges into the river, agency officials said.

Cesium 137 is produced as a by-product of nuclear fission, and is generally associated with radioactive waste. It emits beta and gamma radiation, both of which can produce a variety of ill effects, depending on the dosage.

Lou Gordell, acting director for the US Department of Energy's environmental division at the nuclear plant, said he had not been informed of the study results, but acknowledged Monday that the material probably originated at the Savannah nuclear plant.

The complex near Aiken produces the radioactive materials plutonium and tritium for nuclear weapons. The government-owned plant has been under scrutiny in recent months since it was revealed that a series of accidents at the site over the past 30 years went unreported to the public.

Compromise is possible in co-presidency issue

By GEORGE FRANCY
Colegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate has been stuck in debate on the co-presidency issue for the last several weeks, and a backlog of 21 measures confronts the senate in tonight's meeting.

At press time it was rumored that a compromise was being worked on to solve the presidency question. Several senators said the compromise would be an "omnibus" move, with concessions by both sides. They said the compromise will be announced at tonight's meeting. Senate speaker Robert Fadel said he knew nothing of the plan.

First on tonight's agenda is a move by senators W. Greg Rothman, Stephen Lutz, and Brian Darling to censure Commuter Area Government President Jay Festa for alleged "financial improprieties."

Sen. Stephen Lutz, one of the co-authors of the move, said this request for censure may be withdrawn if a solution to the presidency question can be reached. He said negotiations were still going on toward reaching a solution.

Next on the agenda is a move to endorse the building of a Convocation Center at the University of Massachusetts. The measure also calls on the athletic department for establishing hockey as a varsity sport. No mention is made of funding for this project.

On Oct. 19, the senate voted to oppose the arena because it would mean an increase in student fees.

Third on the agenda is a measure by senator Aram Hamparian and Budget Chairperson Jessica Mitchell calling for Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson to appear before the senate to justify the refunding of any professional staff paid from the Student Activities Trust Fund no less than three months before the position expires.

This move is apparently in response to a projected shortfall in the trust fund budget for fiscal year 1990. When the shortfall projections were released last month, those working on the projections said they were looking at any ways to trim the budget.

Tonight's meeting is at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 101.

Clarification

A story in yesterday's Collegian said that only Town Meeting representatives who voted against a proposal to end future Greek Area growth on North Pleasant Street could vote on a reconsideration of the motion. All representatives may vote. However, only those who voted against the proposal or those not present during the vote may move to reconsider it.

Experts say 'non-lethal' weapons can be deadly

BOSTON (AP) — The traditional methods of quelling civil disturbances, such as tear gas and clubs, are more dangerous than the public perceives and can even be lethal, said physicians speaking yesterday at the American Public Health Association's annual meeting.

"The problem we have is that in government and police and military actions, there are a variety of so-called non-lethal weapons that are used," said Jonathan Fine, president of Physicians for Human Rights.

"There's little public appreciation that some of these devices and weapons are in fact lethal."

Fine said police and military forces utilizing instruments such as tear gas or guns loaded with rubber bullets should be made aware of the potential danger of the devices.

"It really is important for police and military personnel to get a better understanding for the medical consequences so that they be used with more caution, more restraint, and in some cases be totally banned," he said.

"Tear gas is a misnomer, if ever there was one, it's actually poison gas," Fine said.

Effects of tear gas were documented from observations of the effects of tear gas used to control student demonstrators in South Korea in June 1987, Fine said. While the common symptoms of crying, coughing and nausea subside within a few hours, shopkeepers and other people living near area frequently gassed reported getting "tear gas cold", a persistent cough and sore throat for several weeks, he said.

While police and government officials say crowd control methods are vital to maintaining public security, Fine said the Physicians for Human Rights believe the instruments used should be carefully examined and their use should be limited.

Other health care professionals at the Seminar reported results of a February trip observing casualties on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Jennifer Leaning, director of emergency services for the Harvard Health Plan, said if 103 injured people interviewed, 72 percent had been injured within 24 hours of the interview. While gunshot wounds accounted for 5 percent of the recently injured, the remainder were due to rubber bullets, tear gas, and beatings by clubs, she said.

Many of the beating wounds were broken bones in the arm or hand, usually in the dominant arm, Leaning said.

Leaning said the Israeli government cooperated with the physicians' visit, but the team had difficulty interviewing Israeli soldiers injured in uprisings and spoke mainly with Palestinians. After the team reported its findings, the Israeli government responded mainly by pointing to the improved infant mortality rate on the West Bank and Gaza.

Velvl Greene, a professor of epidemiology at Ben Gurion University in Beer Sheva, Israel, said the report of injuries suffered by Palestinians on the West Bank were biased because they didn't take into account injuries inflicted by Palestinians.

"They're not demonstrations, they're attacks," he said. Greene said his colleagues are very concerned about the injuries being suffered on the West Bank. "It hurts us terribly."

US military tells stores to stop selling Hitler's book in Germany

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — US military officials have ordered a bookstore chain catering to American soldiers to stop selling Adolf Hitler's anti-Semitic book 'Mein Kampf,' an official said yesterday.

Hitler's book has been banned at the 158 Stars and Stripes bookstores in Germany, said Deane McDermott, circulation manager for the US government organization in Darmstadt.

'Mein Kampf' and other Nazi literature have been banned in Germany for decades, McDermott said, but Stars and Stripes stores had been selling about 70 copies a month of the book.

"It is against German law even to display the book," McDermott said. "We're guests in Germany and I think we should show certain respect to our hosts."

McDermott said the subject of Nazism has become increasingly sensitive in recent days following last week's 50th anniversary of Kristallnacht and former German parliament speaker Philipp Jenninger's controversial speech marking the occasion.

Kristallnacht, meaning Crystal Night, was a night of terror when Nazi sympathizers burned and looted Jewish businesses and synagogues in what is considered the beginning of the Holocaust. Under the Holocaust, 6 million Jews were systematically killed.

Jenninger was forced to resign as president of the Bundestag, or parliament, after an awkward and inflammatory explanation of Hitler's appeal to the German people. Jenninger said many Germans considered Hitler's march through Europe "triumphal" and he bluntly referred to the widespread anti-Semitism among Germans that allowed Hitler's repression of Jews.

Vandalism at Jewish cemeteries by presumed neo-Nazi groups also has been reported over the past few days in Wiesbaden, Bad Buchau and Berlin.

Rumor: Boggs to Cleveland

BOSTON (AP) — The names of five-time American League players, including the AL batting champion Wade Boggs and Cleveland slugger Joe Carter were blowing in the trade winds yesterday.

Boston Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman approached Hank Peters, his counterpart at the Indians, and asked if he would be interested in Boggs, a lefthanded-hitting third baseman with a .356 career batting average, according to a report yesterday by the Boston Herald, which said the information came from unidentified sources in Cleveland.

Gorman only confirmed that Cleveland had inquired about obtaining Red Sox shortstop Spike Owen and that there had been talk of a larger trade.

"Yes, they have an interest in Spike," Gorman is quoted as telling the Herald last Sunday during a banquet honoring manager Joe Morgan.

"Have we talked about expanding it? Yes, we have," said Gorman, who was not available yesterday to comment further.

And Peters would only confirm that he had talked to Boston, but would not reveal which players had been discussed.

"I'm not commenting on it," he said. "I won't comment on their players or our players. We've talked to a lot of clubs."

But the Herald said other players who might be involved in a swap between the two clubs included third baseman Brook Jacoby and second baseman Julio Franco of the Indians and infielder Todd Benzinger, pitcher Jeff Sellers, and second baseman Marty Barrett of the Red Sox.

UMass volleyball dropped one last night but now the Minutewomen are looking to tip the tide in their favor in the this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The lead see-sawed after UMass' early lead until the lead was knotted at 14.

"That third game was our best game of the match, obviously. Our passing didn't get much better, though. A lot of passes weren't to the target or setter," Olsen said.

UMass, however, didn't steal the match. In a very bizzarre ending to the third game Northeastern coach Mark Massey gave away the game.

The Minutewomen took a 15-14 lead when Massey was penalized for an illegal substitution. Then UMass won the game, 16-14, when Massey illegaly called a time-out after he had already used them all.

Massey had cut UMass some slack, now he wanted to take it back.

The Huskies only allowed the Minutewomen four points in the fourth and final game.

"I wouldn't say it was our worst game of the match. We had a lot of side-outs, we just couldn't get the points," Olsen said.

The Minutewomen collected only five kills in the 4th, with senior Ann Marie Larese leading the way with two.

UMass was overwhelmed as NU took the game and the match.

After starting the season by winning its first nine and 15 of its first 17 games of the season, UMass has gone stone cold. The Minutewomen have dropped seven of their last 10 games.

"Hopefully we can stop this downward momentum and implement some kind of change for the A-10s," Olsen said.

Volleyball team falls to Northeastern, 3-1

Juliet Primer (above) and the Minutewomen couldn't dig out the victory in their last regular season game last night.

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

There has been nothing "regular" about this year's University of Massachusetts volleyball team's season, so it is only fitting that the Minutewomen ended the season irregularly.

UMass lost to the Huskies of Northeastern last night 8-15, 5-15, 16-14, 4-15 but will now turn its attention to this upcoming weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament at Penn State University.

The "irregularity" has been that the Minutewomen have gone from being one of the hottest teams in the conference at the beginning of the season to stumbling their way through these past few weeks.

Last night's game failed to produce the victory that could possibly jump-start UMass' engine before Saturday's post-season play.

"Northeastern is a good team. I think they played very well [last night]. We didn't play well. We had a real hard time with passing and service receive errors," UMass assistant coach Heather Olsen said.

UMass head coach Carol Ford said before the match that it would "come down to who can get their act together."

Apparently, the Huskies were up for the challenge.

"I was kind of surprised that Northeastern came out as strong as the did in the beginning. Not as strong as they were in the second and third games, but they looked as though they had a purpose," Olsen said.

Middle-hitters Barbara Meehan, Nancy Sullivan, and outside hitter Julie Smith all had two kills in the first game but UMass still came up seven points short of NU.

"Our first game was the best in terms of service receives but we didn't put the ball away enough," Olsen said.

In the second game, UMass had problems passing and receiving some tough Huskie serves, according to Olsen.

"If you can't pass the ball, then you can't put the offense together," she said.

The offense only produced five points in the second frame but the Minutewomen were lead by senior Juliet Primer and junior Karen Ferguson who each chipped in two kills apiece.

Down two games to none, UMass was facing a sweep by the team that beaten them three straight matches last year.

But in the third game, the Minutewomen rallied and jumped out to an early lead, according to Olsen.

Why can't Buffalo just shuffle off?

The Buffalo Bills are in first place in the AFC East.

The Buffalo Bills have the best record in the NFL.

The Buffalo Bills may have the best team in the NFL.

The Buffalo Bills? The Buffalo Bills??????

I can't believe my eyes when I see the sports page.

Anthony Padovano

A friend of mine from Buffalo once had asked me why Boston sports fans act the way they do come playoff time. I gave him an answer and in so doing derided the city of Buffalo because it cannot produce a championship team in any sport. At least not until now.

The city once had a basketball team in the late '70s, the Braves, but they were so bad they moved to San Diego. They are now the Clippers. They were so bad in Buffalo, they haven't been able to recover yet.

Buffalo has never had a Major League Baseball team — although they are one of the cities in the running for an expansion team. But knowing the sport and its administration, I think we will be saved from the Buffalo Bulls for some time.

In the NHL, the Buffalo Sabres have a bunch of young talent and they will be tough. But the Bruins are in the same division. There's no way Buffalo will beat the Bruins in a five or seven game series. Not now, not ever.

But the Buffalo Bills? Where did these guys come from? Who is Shane Conlan? What do the initials CB mean? Bruce Smith? He's not in the lineup so he must have gone to Washington.

These were all questions I was asking myself before the first Buffalo-New England game. I figured we'd maul them. I was wrong.

This guy CB (Cornelius Bennett) was everywhere. This guy Conlan was everywhere. Even this old guy Smerlas was everywhere. They took the Pats, put them in a small brown bag and flushed them down the toilet.

Oh, I know the Bills didn't run over the Pats, they won on a Scott Norwood field goal in the waning moments, but the NE offense seemingly played in fear and couldn't run to the bathroom without getting hit.

I know who these men are now. The whole country knows who these men are. We also know that Jim Kelly is a good QB. Rob Riddick and Ronnie Harmon are capable running backs. The offense has racked up the big points against poor to mediocre teams and scored enough to win against the better teams.

I may end up with a tremendous case of trench mouth if they keep playing they way they are.

I hope, I pray, that New England makes it to the playoffs. This way the Pats, who have played them better than any other team this year, except for the victorious Bears, can beat them in the playoffs.

If that happens, I will pay for the long distance telephone Bill, and laugh in the ear of my friend in Buffalo. But for some reason, I feel as if I'll be picking the Desenex out from between my teeth.

For field hockey, season too short

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

There still should be one more week left for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team.

"I think teams began to play us differently, which stopped our scoring."
— UMass field hockey coach Pam Hixon

The Minutewomen wanted to play for one more week. They expected to be playing for one more week, but after Sunday's 2-1 loss to Northeastern University in the second round of the NCAA tournament, UMass' season came to an abrupt halt.

Where the Minutewomen expected to be this weekend was at the University of Pennsylvania in the Final Four.

"It was a goal we had set for the team," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We put ourselves in a position to be there [the Final Four]. We did everything but capitalize on our good scoring opportunities."

Everything looked too perfect for UMass. After breezing through most of their season with a 17-2-1 record, the Minutewomen received an invitation not just to play in the NCAA tourney but also to host it. They were also given a bye in the first round. The hard part seemed to be over.

"We were believers in ourselves from day 1 and we really thought that if we managed the regular season with a tough Division I schedule, winning against the top teams, that we would make it to the NCAA tourney and when you get to the NCAA tournament, you make your own breaks," Hixon said."

The offense made many of the breaks for the Minutewomen during the regular season. The Minutewomen had a balanced attack this season, unlike last year when junior Kathy DeAngelis had to carry the scoring load on her shoulders. Hixon had a multitude of offensive weapons that she could throw against opponents.

DeAngelis led the Minutewomen with 11 goals and three assists. Tonia Kennedy was next with 12 goals and one assist. Senior co-captain Ruth Vasapolli, who is the set up passer on penalty corners, scored four goals and seven assists.

The list goes on and on. Freshman Dawn Trumbauer, who won a starting job with the Minutewomen before the start of the season, scored seven goals, junior Mara Frattasio six, senior Julie Stuart seven, and Elise McDevitt five off the bench.

"Every individual contributed," Hixon said. "This is probably the first time in in my career as a coach that we have had balanced scoring and assists."

But something started to happen to the offense at the end of the year. The scouting reports on the Minutewomen began to get out, and teams slowed down UMass. However, the Minutewomen were still able to find a way to win most of their games.

"I think teams began to play us differently which stopped our scoring," Hixon said. "They fouled us, they packed it in against us. We had to find a way to counteract that and we did."

The Minutewomen scored 60 goals this year but they could have scored 30 and done just as well. The reason for that, is senior goaltender Cindy Cox and the defense.

Cox, a transfer from Purdue University had 13 shutouts this year and her goals-against average was a minuscule 0.52. Cox can credit much of her success to the defense that was played in front of her by sweeper Stuart, who was just moved to that position in mid-season, and senior Chris Gutheil, whose steady play in the defensive end helped limit UMass' opponents to just 156 shots total on the season. By comparison, the Minutewomen took 558 shots of their own.

The Minutewomen did gain a little bit of glory before bowing in the NCAA tournament by winning the Atlantic 10 championship last weekend. UMass dominated the A-10 this year, winning all six of its games with A-10 opponents.

More awards have come the Minutewomen's way since. Cox, Bustin, and Vasapolli will play in the North-South senior all-star game. DeAngelis, Vasapolli, Bustin, and Cox were named first team All-New England. Kennedy was selected to the second team.

More awards will come their way in the next few weeks. But the one that they worked for and might have won if had they received just a few breaks last Sunday was the one that they wanted most.

DVP tentatively agrees to sponsor Farrakhan

Minister scheduled to appear Feb. 3 if additional costs are met

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The Distinguished Visitors Program has tentatively agreed to bring controversial Minister Louis Farrakhan to the University of Massachusetts next semester.

Farrakhan will appear on the evening of Feb. 3 with the stipulation that sponsors Phi Beta Sigma and the Black Agenda can provide the additional costs of security by Dec. 15.

The fraternity is determining the lowest possible expense at which security can be obtained, according to DVP co-chairman Patrick Berkley.

Farrakhan, leader of the Chicago-based Nation of Islam, has been accused of being anti-Semetic by members of the Jewish community.

DVP had voted on Oct. 18 to sponsor Farrakhan's visit here contributing $11,000 for the speakers honorarium. The vote was deemed invalid a week later.

DVP will now front $9,000 for the visit and hopes to recoup $4,000 of that from ticket sales to students and the general public. They have set aside 500 tickets for the general public to be sold for $4 and 1,500 tickets for students at $2, Berkley said.

"We will subsidize $1,000 of the money with revenue from our endowment account," Berkley said. The final price tag for DVP will be $4,000 which, Berkley says, is the average amount given for visitors and makes the deal "much more economically feasible."

"Basically the whole committee would like to see him here. DVP is not here to judge his [Farrakhan's] values. We have no self-righteous sentiment and we're not deciding what's good or bad for you (the students)," Berkley said. "We have enough faith in the students to decide for themselves."

However, the program's offer still hinges on the paid security aspect and whether Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety, can provide security to the campus.

Hilson met last night with representatives of the Student Activities Office, Phi Beta Sigma, and the Jewish community to discuss security procedures.

Also, Berkley said DVP would have to work out additional details of the visit, but refused to comment on what they were.

The original vote to bring Farrakhan to UMass was disputed when several members of DVP were found also to be members of Phi Beta Sigma, a chief advocate of the visit. Also, a graduate student and a continuing education student voted and because they did not pay related fees the votes are invalid, according to DVP's and the Student Government Association's constitutions.

DVP Co-chairman Patrick Berkley

After DVP originally announced the coming of Farrakhan, some members of the Jewish community responded by protesting the vote and the fact that Farrakhan, whom they say as a vehement Jew hater with negative views, would be allowed to appear at UMass.

President-elect George Bush meets with celebrated Soviet human rights activist Andrei Sakharov (right) at the White House yesterday.

Bush names Gov. Sununu of NH as chief of staff

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect George Bush has tapped feisty Gov. John Sununu as his chief of staff, sources say, a signal of change after his first two top appointments went to Reagan administration veterans.

Bush yesterday attended a colorful White House ceremony welcoming British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who told reporters "I think we're all very fortunate in the Western world" that Bush will be Ronald Reagan's successor.

Their styles will be different, she said, but "for the first time we shall have continuity of policies, stretching over a second presidency ... and that gives enormous stability and confidence to the feeling of the world."

Thatcher who was paying a farewell call on President Reagan, praised his administration as "one of the greatest in American history."

With Reagan by her side at the White House ceremony filled with expressions of mutual admiration, Thatcher said the Reagan years "have restored faith in the American dream."

Reagan, in turn, praised Thatcher as a leader of "courage resolve and vision."

Later, while posing for photographers with Reagan in his office, Thatcher said her visit was aimed not only at reminiscing about past achievements, but at looking ahead to the incoming administration.

Bush did not take part in the Oval Office meeting.

Bush's transition co-chairmen, Craig Fuller and Robert Tester, announced a raft of additions to the transition team today. They also told reporters that all transition staff members would be required to sign an ethics form pledging them not to leak information and to avoiding the appearance of conflicts-of-interest.

Asked about Bush's decision to make Sununu chief of staff, Fuller said he had raised the issue with the vice president yesterday.

"Let them know [that] when I am ready to make an announcement, they'll hear it from me," Fuller quoted Bush as saying. But Fuller said he did not know whether Bush had made the decision.

In Concord, N.H., yesterday, Sununu did not deny reports that he will become cheif of staff. At a news conference, he refused to confirm the reports, saying any word would have to come from Bush.

"A request isn't a request until the tall, thin guy sings," he said.

The transition office released the names of key people who will serve under Fuller and Tester. They include Michael Farren, deputy director; Tom Collamore and Kathleen Shanahan, liaisons with the vice president's office; David Demarest, director of public affairs; Janet Mullins, congressional relations; Jim Pinkerton, policy development, and David Ryder, management.

Other top staff positions were announced earlier. They were C. Boyden Gray, counsel; Fred Fielding, director of the office of the vice president-elect; Chase Untermeyer, personnel, and Sheila Tate, spokeswoman.

Presidency compromise killed by senate speaker

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

246 days and counting. . .

A compromise designed to finally solve the controversy surrounding the Student Government Association presidency was ruled out of order by Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Robert Fadel at last night's meeting.

The compromise, which was worked out by conservative and liberal factions of the senate earlier this week, called for new elections for the presidency, in which only individual candidates would be allowed to run. In addition, the charter for the Student Center for Research and Advocacy would be approved.

Liberal senators tried to have the SCERA charter approved last fall, and were opposed by conservative senators. The issue deadlocked the senate just as the presidency issue has stalled it since Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowtiz won the March 15 presidential election.

Last night, the senate became stuck in the debate that has plagued it since the election.

At one point, the senate became so mired in debate that Senate Speaker Robert Fadel walked out of the meeting, apparently resigning his post.

"This is the most appalling thing I've ever seen," said Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, who took over the meeting briefly when Fadel left.

After cooling off, Fadel returned, and said, "I wish I was trembling because I'm upset . . . or because I just lost something. But I'm trembling because this is the Undergraduate Student Senate and we're like this."

Fadel received a standing ovation from the senate for those words, but did not prompt the senate to do anything but yell about the compromise.

The compromise was introduced by Sen. Bob McDevitt as an amendment to a move by Sen. Jay Festa to make several appointments to the senate from the Commuter Area.

Fadel ruled McDevitt's amendment out of order because it had nothing to do with Festa's appointments.

Sen. W. Greg Rothman immediately appealed Fadel's decision, which fostered more debate and eventually caused Fadel's walkout.

Rothman argued the proposal was pertinent because it involved the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee. He said since the appointment of new senators had to do with the committee, and since the new elections would also be handled by the committee, the motion was appropriate.

Sen. Aram Hamparian, also speaking against Fadel's decision, said this was a chance for senators on both sides to come to an agreement on the issue.

"This is a chance for the senate to move beyond some of the arm-waving egoism," Hamparian said.

Rabinowitz described what liberal and progressive senators saw as the problem with the proposal.

"The problem with the compromise is that it isn't a compromise, said Rabinowitz. "What they [conservative senators] want to do is give up the elections for the SCERA charter. It's not a fair trade."

Rabinowitz said liberal and progressive senators were withdrawing their names from endorsing the compromise for the same reason.

Michael D. Ross, a former senator visiting campus, remarked, "It's great to see the senate hasn't changed since I left."

Arena plan announced

The University of Massachusetts Tuesday unveiled its plans to build a $44 million convocation center on campus, scheduled to open in 1993.

The University has already received a $25 million grant from the state, as part of the capital outlay budget that was passed in July, according to Dr. David Bischoff, dean of physical education. The rest of the money will be raised from a bond issue from the University Building Authority, with funds coming from a student fee to be implemented when the building is ready for occupancy.

Plans for the center, which will be built on Commonwealth Avenue on the current site of a Food and Natural Resources barn, include a 10,000-seat arena, a 1,200-seat ice rink, offices, locker rooms and handball and racquetball courts.

The building would be home to the UMass basketball teams, which currently play in the 4,024-seat Curry Hicks Cage, and a proposed varsity hockey team.

UMass has been without varsity hockey since 1979, when the team was suspended because of a lack of an on-campus facility, as well as a lack of scholarship funds.

Radioactive water spill at Pilgrim

BOSTON (AP) — About 2,000 gallons of radioactive water spilled during a cleanup procedure at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant yesterday and one worker was slightly contaminated on the knee, said Boston Edison Co., owner of the idled plant.

The spill occurred at a low-level nuclear waste processing area of the plant, which is awaiting word from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on whether it can begin low-level power testing after a 2.5 year shutdown.

About 100 gallons of the radioactive water seeped out of the processing facility and onto an asphalt lot in the open air, Boston Edison spokeswoman Elaine Robinson said. She said water in both the processing facility and the outer asphalt area was mopped up.

State officials said elevated levels of radioactivity were detected as far away as the perimeter fence at the plant in Plymouth.

Boston Edison said it notified the NRC about the spill.

Peter Agnes, assistant secretary of public safety and Gov. Michael Dukakis' chief aide on nuclear power, said he sent a Public Health Department monitoring team to report on the cleanup effort and get information on what caused the spill.

"Since we are speaking about a substantial amount of waste water and an exposure that at least resulted in

Physicians say restoring relations may heal scars of Vietnam War

BOSTON (AP) — American and Vietnam physicians say restoring diplomatic relations between their two countries could be the first step toward healing the physical and emotional scars left by the Vietnam War.

Participants at a session of the American Public Health Association's annual meeting said the war has impacted on public health in both countries, from US veterans coping with post-traumatic stress disorder to Vietnamese trying to reclaim forests spoiled by chemical defoliants.

Former Sen. George McGovern, keynote speaker at the Tuesday session, commended the Vietnamese representatives for attending.

"I think it is in the interest of both the United States and Vietnam that the citizens as well as our leaders begin talking," he said. "That as much as anything will help heal the wounds of war."

McGovern urged President-elect George Bush to normalize relations with Vietnam, noting the international acclaim awarded to former President Richard Nixon when he opened relations to China.

Dr. Le Cao Dai, a Vietnamese physician who is studying the effects of Agent Orange in his country, echoed McGovern's calls.

"It is time to reconciliate . . . to heal the wounds of the tragedy of the war," he said.

Dai said a study of toxins found in the breast milk of new mothers in South Vietnam showed a high level in the early 1970s, which has since subsided to nearly normal levels.

He acknowledged that the studies need to be backed up with more research, but he said there is a shortage of money for that work.

Jonathan Fine, executive director of Physicians for Human Rights, said that a government-funded institute should be set up in the United States that would examine the medical consequences of wars and the weapons used to wage them.

The physicians' group has co-sponsored several presentations at the APHA's four-day meeting in Boston this week. The convention's theme is examining the affects of technology on health in both positive and negative applications.

Fine said health professionals have always played a key role in taking care of war wounded, but they have not taken an active role in preventing conflicts.

"It's time for the public health community to declare war on war," he said.

In the United States, refugees, particularly from Cambodia, are still being treated for trauma experienced during the war, said Richard Mollica of the Southeast Asian Psychiatric Clinic in Boston.

Returning US veterans also have suffered health problems. While claims of cancer, birth defects and other problems associated with exposure to Agent Orange have been disputed, the government has sponsored studies on the post-traumatic stress suffered by many veterans.

Coping with the aftermath of war in Vietnam has been complicated by natural disasters, said Nuyen Dinh Ngo, vice chairman of the Binh Tri Thien Province in central Vietnam, a site of heavy fighting during the war.

Faculty blasts road design

By JONATHAN CORSO
Collegian Correspondent

Several faculty members have criticized the $130,000 construction of a road that will lead to a new admissions building at the University of Massachusetts.

The road, which is being built in accordance with federal regulations, will lead to a new admissions building located across from the Newman Center. The building used to be a Phi Sigma Epsilon fraternity house.

The plan calls for a 24-foot-wide road, instead of the old 16-foot road, a 10-foot-wide handicap-accesible sidewalk and a 24-space parking lot.

"With the new road, Hills South is going to be unusable from mid-April to mid-October," said Profesor of Education David Evans, whose office is in Hills House South. Hills House is located next to the new building.

"Heat will radiate off the asphalt parking lot into the building making it excessively hot, and because of the low power outlets and the noise they will create, we can't put in any air conditioners," he said.

The designer of the project, landscape architect Bill Lambert cited federal regulations as to why the road is being constructed the way it is.

'They cut down upward of 40 trees, many of them large, and in some cases rare trees.'
— Education Professor David Evans

"The minimum width of a two lane road has to be at least 24 feet and because it is a public building under the federal section 504 we have to make it handicap accesible," Lambert said.

"We also had to take into account that most of the people using the building will be walking there," he said.

Evans also complained about the number of trees cut down for the project and the inability to transplant them correctly.

"They cut down upward of 40 trees, many of them large, and in some cases rare trees," he said. "Five of the rarest trees were transplanted to the playground next door, two are already dead."

Evans said the trees served as a cooling agent to the building, and they also drowned out the noise from the road in front of Hills.

President of Interfraternity Council arrested

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The President of the Interfraternity Council at the University of Massachusetts was arrested Monday morning on a warrant from a private complaint alleging assault and battery and breaking and entering.

Milind S. Bharvirkar, 20-year-old vice president of Pi Kappa Alpha, was arrested at his fraternity house on North Pleasant Street after another UMass student filed a complaint that Bharvirkar attacked him while he was visiting a friend at Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

The victim, who requested anonymity, said he received a call from a friend Friday night asking him to come over because her ex-boyfriend, Bharvirkar, had been harassing her with phone calls and had shown up at her room earlier in the evening.

Once in her room, the victim said he was assisting his friend with packing so that she could spend the night elsewhere, when Bharvirkar arrived.

"We were in her room and he (Bharvirkar) kicked the door open which hit my friend. My back was to him when he ran across the room and tackled me. It was totally unprovoked," said the victim.

He said he was able to break free and run to another room to phone the police. Bharvirkar fled the scene before police arrived.

The victim was treated by University Health Services for deep cuts from bites, bruised ribs, and other abrasions.

"I don't think someone as violent as this guy should be allowed to represent the Greek Area," he stated.

A restraining order was placed on Bharvirkar barring him from contact with either of the two people involved.

Do you have questions about SEX you wish you could ask someone?

ASK US

The University of Massachusetts peer sex educators invite you to send in your questions about contraception, AIDS, and sexual issues in general to: ASK US, Peer Sexuality Education Program, University Health Services. Responses are limited by space availablity.

Ron Birnbaum, Heidi Klein, Gretchen Krull, Brooke Norris, Sharon Russell, and Jon Snider will respond to your questions.

Q. Which is the best method of birth control?

A. The "best method" of birth control is one that is used consistently, responsibly, and correctly. The decision to use birth control methods is determined by medical concerns, cost, and ultimately; personal choice. Birth control methods for men are limited; he can use a condom or abstain from sex. Women have many birth control choices — the pill, diaphragm, IUD, cervical cap, spermicides and condoms. Abstinence from sex shouldn't be discounted, either. This is why we encourage all with this question to attend UHS contraception sessions to best answer it for themselves.

Q. Is there an obligation to have sex when you get a man excited?

A. There is never a time when an individual is obligated to have sex. It is, however, important to know your own limits as to what sexual behaviors you do and don't want to engage in ahead of time. If they are clear to you, you can make them clear to your partner and you will be less likely to find yourself in situations where sex is being pressured. You always have the right to say "no" and have the right to be respected.

Q. Is "blue balls" dangerous?

A. The myth for men that all sex must end in orgasm is the basis for men's concern that "blue balls" is a painful, almost life threatening condition.

When a man is sexually excited, the tissues of the penis become swollen with blood, making it erect. If he does not have an orgasm which relieves the swelling in the penis and the testicles (balls), he may feel discomfort such as heaviness or pain. This s a temporary situation and will resolve itself when the blood naturally flows from these areas. Although sometimes uncomfortable, "blue balls" is not a dangerous condition.

Text book dispute continues in Amherst

(AP) — A year after Amherst school officials refused to dump an eighth-grade social studies text that some parents and other residents claimed was too conservative and gave a biased view of American history, the battle continues in this college town.

School Superintendent Donald Frizzle prepared an 11-page response yesterday to a complaint filed by parents with the state Education Department, listing the supplementary materials the district teachers use to augment the book.

"The School Committee feels that with the wide variety of supplementary materials provided by the teachers, the course adequately presents a multicultural view," Frizzle said.

The residents' complaint to the state, signed by 150 people, contends the book violates the state's anti-discrimination laws, which require materials used by the public schools to be substantially free of racial, sexual, religious, and ethnic bias.

Dade Singapuri, one of the residents, said they are still unhappy with the book, but no longer feel they can get rid of it.

"We just want to make sure that they are providing adequate supplementary materials to overcome its shortcomings," she said. "And that is difficult because of the issue of teacher autonomy. The sticking point is [that] the administrators contend they can't tell the teachers what to teach."

Last year, teachers accused the group of "censorship". Over the past year, tensions have increased, not eased, Singapuri said.

"The School Committee is just getting angrier and that's the sad part of it," she said. "And as it goes along, more and more townspeople - American Indians, Asians, Blacks, Hispanics - are getting involved."

The book, the History of the American Nation, was first published in 1982 and is now in a second edition. Officials at MacMillan Press, the publisher, have described it as one of their better sellers and used by a wide variety of school districts."

UMass lab theft may be a protest

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — The University of Massachusetts Director of Public Safety said yesterday that two students accused of stealing laboratory animals may have been protesting the animals use for research.

"There has been a tendency across the country for people to protest the use of animals in laboratory research," said Arthur Hilson. "This is speculation, but it may well have been that someone was attempting to make a bold statement."

One of the students, sophomore Andrew T. Buckley, 19, of Somerset, appeared in court yesterday at a pretrial hearing. Assistant District Attorney Leslie McLellan, who is prosecuting the case, declined to comment on the hearing or the charges.

The other student, junior Benjamin S. Bennett, 20, of Northampton, was scheduled to appear in court today, also for a pretrial hearing.

The students have pleaded innocent to charges stemming from a Sept. 25 break-in in which, according to Hilson, a few mice and rabbits were taken from an undisclosed University building.

Bennett was arrested the night of the incident, and Buckley was arrested at his campus residence the following day.

Both men were charged Sept. 26 with breaking and entering in the night with intent to commit a felony and causing a false fire alarm.

Student's room robbed of $512

A student reported Tuesday her room in Wheeler Residence Hall had been broken into and a sum totaling $512.50 of cash and a checks had been stolen.

In other police reports:

- A student had the battery worth $70 stolen from his car which was parked in Stadium lot E Tuesday.
- A wall clock and books worth $49 were reported stolen from a room in Cashin Residence Hall Tuesday.
- A 21-year-old Amherst man was arrested Wednesday for driving a motor vehicle after his license had been suspended.

Moans muse on origins, music

By PETER N. PIASECKYJ
Collegian Correspondent

I stood in the Blue Wall waiting for the Lonely Moans when these three guys approached me. One of the guys was short, but he was flanked by two giants, which made me kinda nervous. "We're the band," one said, "so let's do the interview."

Collegian: Who are the Lonely Moans?

Lonely Moans: Well, Shambie plays bass, Mike plays guitar and I (Sam) play drums. Shambie and I switch off singing songs. As for the name, we had trouble picking one, so we thought of big bands like the Rolling Stones and the Ramones. Ergo, the Lonely Moans.

C: Where did you guys meet?

LM: We met at Hampshire College a few years back. We would also like to stress that we are not a Hampshire band, 'cause we don't play surf music. Yet it wasn't until February 1988, that we really became established in songwriting and playing out.

C: Where have you played, and with whom?

LM: We've played at the Rat, Greene St. Station, Katina's and — probably the best place to play around here, Sheehan's. OK, a list of bands that we have played with — Malarians, Zulus, Live Skull and Dinosaur, Jr. We would like to play around here but it's really hard.

C: Why is that?

LM: Because clubs want us to play really softly. I'm sorry we're not Lawrence Welk. Our band plays hard rock'n'roll and we have to play above a whisper. I think that has been a big factor in getting gigs here. Not only that, but it's hard to find a place to practice. People won't rent to bands. We are considering moving, but the Valley is a great place to live. Basically, we want to put out vinyl, get bookings and tour. C: Speaking of vinyl, do you have anything out?

continued below

The Lonely Moans

LM: Well, we just recorded a single, which should be out anytime soon. I guess you can get a copy at Main St. Records. It's being put out by Amphetamine Reptile Records in Minnesota. For the record, Tom Hayzelmyer from Halo of Flies is the bigwig at the studio. It's a great label because it has great distribution, which is key to getting recognition.

C: What's the single?

LM: It's called "Rocking Nerd." It's about a girl Sam knew in school. She was a physics major who overnight became a film major and got a leather wardrobe and horn-rimmed glasses. She even attempted to dance at one of our shows. It's basically about the pseudo-nerd craze in America. It's not our best song, but it shows what we're all about.

C: How would you describe your music?

LM: That's really hard, um . . . I guess it's a combination of 60s music, punk rock, surf, disco and remnants of a raging Latino beat. It's intense dance music.

C: So what's next?

LM: We're recording an album in December at Fort Apache Studios in Boston. The album will be released sometime next year.

C: I always wanted to emulate the finest interviewer, Barbara Walters. If you could be any tree what would you be?

LM: Shambie: I'd be a bush where dogs would visit me regularly. Sam: A Duraflame log. Mike: Dead.

Don't forget to catch these musicians on Friday, Nov. 18, at 9:30 p.m. at the Hampshire College Tavern. A must see, so don't miss it.

Poet probes into the production of all forms of art

Rilke's revelations prove fascinating

By ERIC DAVIS
Collegian Correspondent

Letters to Cezanne
By Rainer Maria Rilke
Translated by Joel Agee
From International Publishers

Poet Rainer Maria Rilke is one of the most eloquent writers on the subject of art and the life of the artist. If you are an artist or a fan of any kind of art — be it poetry, painting, music, whatever — read Letters On Cezanne. It is an inquiry into both the practice and the idea of art — and it's fascinating.

The book is a collection of Rilke's letters to his wife, based on descriptions of his daily agendas, his changing perceptions of Cezanne's works, and the effect these works have on his own work. Most of it is very accessible, for what we learn is grounded in events, not abstract ideas.

The poet emulates the great painter in both artistic pursuits — such as the quest for objectivity (destroying notions of "beautiful" and ugly") — and in habitual activities. The letters are filled with descriptions of both men taking great walks, in which they absorb some kind of truth from their environment. As Rilke writes, "...The 'ultimate intuitions and insights' will only approach one who lives in his work and stays there."

Rilke's descriptions of Cezanne's paintings, while tools for his own growth, are passionate and moving in their own right: "In the brightness of face, the proximity of all these colors has been exploited for a simple modeling of form and features . . . It's as if every place were aware of all the other places . . . that's how each daub plays its part in maintaining equilibrium and producing it."

If you get this book, find a copy of Cezanne's works for reference. And, whatever you do, if you are someone who reads introductions, like myself, don't read this one until you've finished the letters. As Rilke himself once wrote, "Works of art are of infinite loneliness and with nothing so little to be reached as with criticism." Of course that also makes me a hypocrite for criticizing and reviewing this book in the first place, but trust me — read the introduction last.

If the idea of production of art interests you at all, read this book. What could be more perfect that a poet writing about a painter? Before ending, I feel the need to plug another collection of Rilke's letters, Letters to a Young Poet. These are equally strong in their content, and are more explicit in their expression. Letters A Young Poet — along with Letters On Cezanne — are two books we all should have.

Northampton's newest nightclub, the Universal Joint: Downstairs at Pearl Street is making every effort possible to bring new music to the area. During it's five years of existence, Pearl Street has tried to appeal to an older crowd by bringing in more blues, soul, and R&B than anyone in the area. But now that this type of music is more than common throughout the valley, a place like the U-Joint is a fantastic way to ensure that all types of bands, young and old, have a chance to play the area.

To prove this, the U-Joint have booked Dumptruck tonight, with an all ages early show at 7:30. And tomorrow night, O Positive are playing with The Headless Horsemsen, again with an all ages show at 7 p.m. and a 21+ show at 9:00. On Saturday night, Lucky Seven, the zydeco-rock-a-billy regular Lone Star house-band, play a show at 9:30. The U-Joint is surfacing as a regular NoHo night spot. Support it!

All other venues this weekend are flourishing with opportunity as well. For their second Valley visit, Mambo-X plays the Iron Horse tonight. Professor Harp & His Showmen, a mysterious blues/R&B band play for the first time at Sheehan's tonight. It seems that there hasn't been a blues band that hasn't played at Sheehan's.

Tomorrow night Hampshire college presents The Lonely Moans and Gidget Goes to Hell at the Tavern (located in Prescott — Note: No free beer at this show) for free. This should be a good show, but if that doesn't satisfy you, Loudon Wainwright plays at the Iron Horse with The Holiday Clocks, or you can see The Malarians at Sheehan's with Eastern Wind.

For Bangles, Everything goes back to group's roots

The Bangles
Everything
Columbia Records

Some people argue that the Bangles' last album Different Light was a sell out. The same group that had put out such brilliant songs as "Hero Takes A Fall"and "Going Down To Liverpool" were lowered to crooning about manic mondays and walking like Egyptians. In their third release Everything, the Bangles seem to have found a way to bring the artistic merit back to their music without sacrificing popular appeal.

Chris De Burgh's Colours fly higher than ever before

Flying Colours
Chris De Burgh

Chris De Burgh's new album Flying Colours has me favorite new song on it. "Just a Word Away" is a beautiful song that De Burgh dedicated to his young son Hubie. Just De Burgh and an acoustic guitar, this song is a far cry from "The Lady in Red." It's better. The song has an almost Simon and Garfunkel quality to it; it's simple sound contrasts the drum machines used on other songs from the album. "Just A Word Away," along with 11 other songs, give the album a cohesive structure that draws your attention at the end of a listen to that quality of completeness which impresses.

"I'm Not Scared Anymore," a song about the encouraging and galvanizing power of love, has a simple structure; the guitar work and the steady, almost silent-until-the-end drums have an inspiring quality. The very gently sung refrain "you are near, you are here" sounds reassuring, hymnlike. Two songs, "The Risen Lord" and "The Last Time I Cried" deal with mysterious visions: vague, obscured glimpses of a runaway Messiah. In fact, the first chorus of "The Last Time" is: "Eli, Eli, Lama, Oh Lord, You have forsaken me," a reference to Christ's plea from the cross. De Burgh fans know that he has dealt with religious themes and has used references to mythological figures often in the past, primarily in his lyrics from "The Spanish Train" and "Don't Pay the Ferryman."

"A Night on the River" is a funny look at a man's dilemma after a fight with his love: "naked and frozen at the side of a lake/I think I've gone and made my big mistake/I took her swimming, we had a fight/ Now my clothes and my lady are well out of sight." De Burgh has lent this type of humor to a song before, namely "Patricia The Stripper." De Burgh fans, I think, should have this album. It stands well on it's own, and against past works.

I'm a biased fan of five years, I admit it. I love the album. If you're not a fan this album is an excellent introduction to his music, and it has many merits to stand on; some mentioned here, some you'll have to listen for and Flying Colours is definitely worth a listen.

■ Bangles

The album kicks in with the first single release "In Your Room," a hard-edged return to psychedelic folk rock. The quartet's famous harmonizing is in peak condition as is their ability to revive the 60s through music. Susanna Hoffs' distinctive voice set against the driving guitar of Vicki Peterson is pure ecstasy.

One asset of the Bangles compared to ordinary groups is their possession of not one lead singer, but four. Susanna Hoffs is most often associated with the task, but on Everything the vocal burden is divided equally. Hoffs sings the popier material, while Micheal Steele sings the gloomy material and sisters Vicki and Debi Peterson do whatever is left over.

The songs on Everything reveal some inconsistencies. The writing on some songs is exceptional while others are customary album filler tracks. These songs aren't dreadful, in fact they're better than what most groups release as singles, they just stand out against the superior songs. Fortunately they're the exception and not the rule.

Although the music of the Bangles glorifies counter culture days, the song "Glitter Years" makes a strong statement against the era. Telling of the neglect of a child due to his parent's infatuation with drugs states the point very effectively. Of course the album also contains the typical difficult love songs ("Complicated Girl," "Waiting For You") but with the skilled vocals of the Bangles they're a pleasure to hear.

Everything seems to deliver just what the title says. From tough rock to smooth ballads and everything in between, there's even a song co-written by former Kiss member Vinnie Vincent. The talented instrumentation combined with the skillful arrangements raises the Bangles' brand of stylized psychedelia to great new heights.

I want to kill that . . . sweet, dear brother of mine

Jordache jeans, rollerskating, and Nikes were probably the top three items on my "likes and dislikes" list my 7th grade Home Economics teacher made our class compile. I have no doubt as to the top three DISLIKES, however. I read them aloud in class — ". . . AC/DC, liver and I HATE my brother Jay."

Emphatic I was at age 12.

But one had to be, living in close quarters with a sibling 4 1/2 years older. Surviving was an uninterrupted, daily episode of hell. HE would turn the clock back on Tuesday nights so I'd miss Happy Days, expect calls from ED while I was trying to piece together General Hospital, eat all the GOOD groceries (i.e. Devil Dogs, chocolate pudding) before I even knew of their purchase, shove the empty box in my face . . . then burp.

"You pig! I'm tellin'!" (My most common sentence.)

"Go ahead, PIG NOSE."

Ahh, pig nose. The name he created just for that feature that hasn't changed despite his every effort to minimize its size . . . by FLICKING it. Only at opportune moments (when parents were out) would his fingers bounce off my nose in an attempt to knock off its excess flesh. It never worked.

But I got back. Being the youngest in the family, not to mention the only girl, I had an edge. When the parents weren't looking during dinner, I'd say he hit me, sprout a few crocodile tears, rub an arm in an effort to quell the "pain," sniffle, and he'd get it. Oh yeah, the clincher: be sure to smile in his general direction as he trudged to his room.

Alise Harfield

But I wasn't always successful. Like the time we tried plopping alka-seltzers into a cup of ginger ale just to see what would happen. We watched in awe as bubbles of ginger-ale danced like fireworks above the cup and into the air. Then he suggested I drop some tablets in the two-liter bottle. I readily agreed, because it was one of the few times he let me play with him. (Somehow his ideas were always more creative than mine, I guess because he was older.) Needless to say that while I rushed to find a towel to clean up the overflowing soda, he told on me. When he later used my chalk (without asking) to draw a strike zone on the side of the house so he and ED could practice whiffle ball, I had to tell . . . it was my turn.

This went on for a seemingly never-ending adolescence. Then he left for college. I readily helped him pack.

For the first two months I lived as an only child in utter bliss. Then I got lonely. In short, I missed the misery. I couldn't very well flick the bathroom lights on and off while running hot water in the kitchen while DAD was taking a shower, could I? I thought of picking fights with brothers of friends, but realized I'd hate it if someone else ever called my brother a name. Such areas were my territory only.

Then something miraculous happened when my mother made me call to wish him a happy 20th birthday. I was just about to go back to reading his leftover Sports Illustrated when he said, without hesitation, "I love you, Alise."

"GeeJayIloveyoutooheresmombyebye."

What happened? Did he draw some tacit armistice ending our lifelong sibling rivalry? Or was he just acting big because he was 20?

To this day I can't answer that one. All I know is that when he was home for vacations, he didn't feel like playing whiffle ball anymore, even if I said I'd pitch to him the whole time. He even ASKED to borrow my OXY-10. The phone calls when I went to college a few years later were even worse. (For some odd reason I liked calling him just for the heck of it). We wouldn't fight; instead we asked genuine, caring questions about the other's well-being. No hate involved whatsoever.

Oh, and he doesn't call me THAT NAME anymore. And I don't unplug his razor when he's trying to charge it.

I think hating him was more fun.

Kinder, gentler nation? First a kinder, gentler stomach

I walked into a friend's room last Wednesday to see him sitting there with a pale, blank expression on his face. On his desk in front of him sat five bottles of Maximum Strength Pepto-Bismol, two packages of Sudafed Plus, three bottles of Formula 44D, six Alka-Seltzer tablets, and a bottle of Bayer aspirin.

Bob Bobala

"What are you doing?" I asked him.

"Bush is president. Life as we know it is going to continue for the next four years. Add 'em up. That's 12 years of Reaganism. I'm not gonna live through it a day longer."

"Suicide?" Don't you think you'd be better off using a hardcore prescription drug?"

Yeah, but I don't have any, and this is all that the munchy store had." He popped an Alka-Seltzer tablet into his mouth and chewed it, his face grimacing as he swallowed.

"Come on. It won't be so bad," I said. "The Democrats still have control of Congress. They even picked up a seat in the Senate and five in the House. Bush won't be able to do a thing. Don't you read the papers? He's not even gonna get a honeymoon — unless you believe someone like Rep. Richard Durbin of Illinois who conceded that he 'he may get a 15-minute honeymoon after he takes his hand off the Bible.' So chill out, man."

His blank expression turned to one of lunacy as he stared at me. "Humphrey, McGovern, Carter, Mondale, and now Dukakis. We've lost five out of the last six elections!"

I cracked open one of the bottles of Pepto-Bismol and took a swig. "Hey, at least Carter won in '76."

"But this was our election. We were supposed to win. Dukakis had a 17-point lead this summer. But he sat on it while Bush cut him apart on non-issues like the ACLU, the Pledge of Allegiance, and the furlough program."

"Don't you think the Democrats in Congress know that? They're not gonna let him off the hook for his negative campaigning. He's got no mandate. He only won by eight percent of the vote. Congress knows that."

He washed a couple of aspirins down with some cough syrup and gazed at the wall, saying nothing. I continued, "The Democrats are gonna have burning matches under his feet wherever he steps. He has to deal with the budget deficit, but he pledged not to raise taxes. Congress isn't going to let him slash social programs. They're gonna hold him to his promise of a "kinder, gentler nation." Besides, he's got more to worry about than the Democrats. Don't forget about Bob Dole."

Mike Luckovich Times Picayune
Our plan for winning the White House in '92 is based on the premise that between now and then, the South Secedes....
SOUTH SOLID AGAIN FOR GOP
Democrats

Now he swallowed some Sudafed, following it up by chugging a half a bottle of Pepto-Bismol. "But I want a president that's a leader, not a clerk. I want a president to be somebody I can look up to and admire."

"Then give Bush a chance," I said.

He tilted his head at me in disgust. "George Bush?!"

"Well, then stick around until '92. Think of Cuomo, Bradley, or Nunn. The Democrats will win again."

His face had become even whiter now. He held the cough medicine in his hand and stared at the floor for a while. Finally, he picked his head up. "But what about Vice President Qua-" His body tensed and he launched a thick stream of pink puke across his desk. The force knocked over the aspirin bottle and pills rolled off the desk's edge, bouncing on the floor.

"I'm glad you didn't even say it," I said. "Enough's been said about him already."

Just my opinion

Some senators forget — we elected Shari and Jason

Angry, resentful, irritated, annoyed, disturbed, troubled, bothered, pestered, deceived, betrayed. . .

These are few adjectives to describe how I feel about the Undergraduate Student Senate and the way it has been conducting business.

First let's clarify things. A) All SATF paying undergraduate students are members of the Student Government Association. B) We elect other students to represent us in the Senate. C) Their job is to help keep this campus running by giving the RSOs and area governments funds to do stuff, such as sponsor movies and trips to Montreal. They are also supposed to represent us to the administration. D) Some senators aren't doing their job.

Now there once was a time that I would just point to the conservative faction of the Senate and say they were responsible for all the bad happenings and childishness that goes on during a senate meeting. Alas, no longer is this possible. The Senate today has people in it who are of the moderate and liberal mindset who are disrupting business, all in order to build their own power base. Kind of pathetic to think that people want to lead small power groups in a Student Senate. But, remember please, most of the senators are trying to do the best job they can.

Where is this all going you might wonder. I'm leading up to of course the most haggard and admittedly absurd issue of the past two semesters: the ratification of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as co-presidents.

Why is it absurd? Because elections were last March, today is Nov. 17. Don't you think our wise and intelligent representatives could have settled the issue by now?

Now the senators against ratification say it is against the SGA constitution to have co-presidents. Why? Because the constitution does not specifically say there can be co-presidents. This is an age old conservative belief — if it ain't etched in stone or stained on a dead tree, it don't count.

Peter Leon

I was always taught the US Constitution was vague. If something wasn't specifically written it didn't mean the Congress and Supreme Court couldn't assume the federal government could do that something. Isn't the SGA constitution modeled on the US Constitution?

People who are going against ratification also say Shari and Jason didn't win really because if Aram Hamparian and Guy Glodis (the two single candidates of the election) had run together they would have won because together they got more votes than Shari and Jason.

Well, in the spirit of George Bush, our president-elect, READ MY WORDS PEOPLE: The point is moot. It's moot because Aram and Guy didn't run together and the election is over. It may be news to certain senators but elections on this campus are decided solely on which candidate(s) get the most votes.

Now last Tuesday night on that trendy show I know y'all listen to — SGA Today (WMUA 91.1, 8:30 to 9:30) — Greg Rothman and Brian Darling, who are leading the fight against co-presidents, and Jason and Shari met to debate the issue of the co-presidency. Now beyond the fact that I believe Shari and Jason should hold office, I believe I can analyze the debate.

First Shari and Jason did win, not because their argument for co-presidency was more clearly stated, both sides were clear and consistent (Rothman and Darling are just misreading the constitution and will of the students).

What won the debate for Shari and Jason was Rothman and Darling. Rothman referred to the people who showed up at the Nov. 9 SGA meeting to support ratification as "goons." Later Darling referred to a student who called in to ask a question as ignorant because he (in Darling's opinion) had not read the SGA constitution. Shari immediately pointed out both as being rude and condescending to Rothman and Darling's respective constituents.

This to me shows how the people who are against ratification believe they know what WE, THE STUDENTS, think. Thing is we have already spoken. We want Shari and Jason.

Getting pizza should never cost that much

I'm not going to write about the mistake we made on Nov. 8, or how we must be cursed to have some of the biggest human hot-air balloons on the Undergraduate Student Senate. This week, I'm going to tell you a story. It goes like this:

One night about six years ago, a man was watching TV with his wife. They were hungry, so he ordered out for a pizza. He left to go get it about 20 minutes later (this was before Domino's came to town). It was about 10 p.m.

Pamela McCarthy

By 10:30, his wife was worried. By 11 p.m. she was frantic. She dialing the number to the town's hospital at 11:30. Her worst fears were confirmed when the person she spoke with said, "Oh, we were just about to call you."

The man had been on his way to get the pizza when something smashed into his tiny Pinto hatchback's rear at 90 miles an hour. The car took a dive through a chain-link fence and down a thirty-foot factory embankment. He somehow managed to crawl out before he slipped into unconsciousness.

The 'something' that hit his car was a Cadillac. The maggot driving it was being chased by the cops for setting off firecrackers in front of the police station. She was 15, and smashed out of her mind. She and her 19-year-old married boyfriend were having the time of their lives, being chased by three cruisers for their atrocious and heinous crime. (The police in that town never have cars to patrol the streets with, but humorously enough, they had three lying around on that particular night.) They were having fun, fun, fun, in daddy's caddy until they hit the man in the rear.

The caddy and the cruisers just passed by.

The man had a broken collarbone, broken leg, several broken ribs, a concussion, serious internal bleeding, and the bruises and minor lacerations you always get from a high-impact crash and broken glass.

His wife had the dubious honor of telling their two daughters the news the next morning. They didn't take it very well. In fact, his mother, his brother's family, and his sister's family weren't particularly receptive to the news either. They were all pretty vocal about their discontent. The only exception was his older daughter, who decided that the last thing everyone needed to deal with was an upset teenager. Besides, the fact that her father was in serious trouble hadn't hit her yet.

His daughters wanted to visit him, but he and his wife decided it would be best to wait until he looked better. His wife told them they'd get upset if they saw how bad their dad looked. This didn't particularly sit well with his older daughter, who thought she could stomach anything, and then worried about how badly hurt he was.

The man was finally released from the hospital. He came home on crutches for his broken leg. He was about 20 pounds lighter. The bruises and cuts on his face, neck and arms were faded, but still painfully obvious. He was in a lot of pain.

His older daughter learned the fine art of hate within the next few weeks. She saw a picture of the car after the accident. It was no longer a car. It was a pile of metal toothpicks. She heard that the sentence for the girl who did this was a stay at the Y without pool privliges until they could find her a foster home. She was a poor, misunderstood victim of society, you know. She needed help, even if she did sentence that man and his family to undeserved pain.

That family is my family.

My father is fine now. Even the scars from the operations he got in the hospital are faded. He's philosophical about the whole thing.

"Maybe she'll straighten up. If she does, all the power to her. If she doesn't, she'll get what she deserves."

I wish I could be that forgiving.

God is more important than blindly following religion

First of all, let me say that I agree with Bob Bobala in that one must hold fast to one's convictions - whether they be religious or pertaining to any matters of consequence. However, I feel that his article ("Changing Your Religion Isn't Like Changing Your Shoes," Nov. 10) is a little judgmental.

My belief is that religion today falls short of how God intended it to be. the church has evolved into an organized system of various denominations which only function as barriers to the true teachings of Christianity.

Today, as in the past, there has been too much emphasis placed on "religion" consisting of following rules, rituals, etc. and not enough significance given to the message of Christ which calls us to love God above all and our neighbor as ourselves. If people would only worry about their personal relationship with God first, then the rest would fall into place. Instead there is division and strife among Christians who believe that their denomination or way of worshipping God is the right way.

As Bobala mentioned in his article, these controversies have often led to war. A perfect example today is the war in Ireland between Protestants and Catholics. I am completely disgusted when I see such an example of hypocracy as this. No wonder so many people are confused about religion and what Christianity means. Christians should be united in Christ — not killing each other over differences of opinion. My mother is Roman Catholic and my father is Protestant. They are now divorced. I am Roman Catholic, but enjoy attending Protestant Church on occasion. I see good and bad qualities on both sides, and don't consider myself less of a Catholic because I sometimes attend Protestant services. I worship God — the only God — God of all faiths.

No, Bob, I don't think you take this "religion stuff" too seriously — I think more people should. Perhaps by raising questions like these Christians (and non-Christians alike) will be able to arrive at a greater truth and stop judging each other.

Black-Jewish relations won't be hurt by Farrakhan

I feel that the issue of Minister Louis Farrakhan will not deteriorate Jewish and black friendship on this campus.

The issue of Farrakhan's anti-Semitism is a nationwide issue. But, are we going to drag it here, on this campus? The administration of the University of Massachusetts is already searching for means to avoid ethnic tensions on campus. I have been reading it in the Collegian. The issue should be dealt with to satisfy both ethnic groups.

The term Semites does not only apply to Israel but to other nations. So, Farrakhan is coming to a backyard of disgrace, if I am not misinterpreting his anti-Semitism. Because this university has people of all nations, including Moslems, whom I suppose he is one of them. Also, I wonder if someone is anti-Semitic must be called Imam, reverend or a rabbi. The Semite race are people who are not only Jews, but includes Christian and Moslems.

If Farrakhan is anti-Semitic, then he has insulted the Islamic world, including Jews. So, those who are willing for his present on campus must judge it carefully before he is invited to give his speech.

Maybe in the United States the term Semitic only refers to people from Israel, but maybe we've misinterpreted the word Semitic.

I wonder if for someone to be anti-Semitic, that person should be considered a Moslem or a Christian. I know Farrakhan is not a Jew. What about Hitler? So, if Farrakhan is anti-Semitic, for what I've been reading from the media, then he is not only against Israel, but against all people of the Semitic race.

Semitic religions are, Judaism, Christianity and Islamic. Semites are from North Africa, West and North of West Africa, the Middle East, Asia Minor, and North of East Africa.

Jews and blacks will live together in this free lovable country with peace and democracy which America gives to her citizens. Jews and blacks have lived together before with harmony, they enjoyed love in the Arabian peninsula until the last journey to Canaan. Peace must prevail among Jews and blacks in the name of Yahweh.

If Farrakhan comes, he should know that our University is of different nationalities who may or may not welcome his presence.

Praising Farrakhan encourages hate toward Jews

Putting aside the question of gross insensitivity and bias, Thomas Mambande's article on Minister Louis Farrakhan's proposed visit to UMass is venomous, contradictory and ultimately accusatory toward the Jewish community. In addition, it's just plain wrong. How can Mambande assert that Farrakhan is not an anti-Semite when he later quotes the Minister as saying Judaism is a "dirty religion", and that Adolf Hitler was a "very great man" who made Germany a "great fighting machine"? Since when is a great fighting machine a country that murders over nine million people? Since when is a great man one who orchestrates this destruction? I can assure Mambande that Hitler would have also killed the blacks if he had a chance. That Farrakhan welcomes the comparison is the first hint at something gone awry.

Farrakhan's visit, furthermore, is not "imminent." The Distinguished Visitors Program took the first step in rightly withdrawing its sponsorship. If a Jewish speaker (with a Jewish Agenda) who hated blacks spoke on campus, people would protest, Jews included. And if Farrakhan and his propaganda come from every person who is thoughtful enough to realize that in the Minister we have hate personified — and admired. Farrakhan's speech alone won't be divisive of the black, white and Jewish communities, but the assertion that he is worthy of our praise, the we should all lap up his anti-Semitic visions, will be the ultimate test of UMass as a "civil" campus.

It's Buffalo Bisons, not Bulls

Anthony Padovano, if you are going to be so cynical in condemning Buffalo's sports teams ("Why can't Buffalo just shuffle off?" Nov. 16) please try to include correct information in your article.

You were correct in saying that Buffalo has never had a major league baseball team and that we are trying desperately to achieve this status. However, you were blatantly incorrect in stating that "we will be saved from the Buffalo Bulls for some time." You will be saved from the "Buffalo Bulls" forever because Buffalo's present (and most likely all-time) baseball team is the Buffalo Bisons.

"We intend to plant trees along the road. If anything, there will be more shade. The road itself will not be heavily used, employees will use Butterfield Terrace," he said.

Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning Professor Dennis Ryan III, who also has an office in Hills South, said he is unimpressed with the design.

"It was totally unnecessary to cut down all those trees. They had to raise the grade 5 to 6 feet, which will overlap existing vegitation, killing it," Ryan said.

"Water will run down towards Hills South into the building. I feel the whole thing could have been done in a much more professional manner," he said.

Lambert said, "We did have to raise the grade considerably, but the catch basin and 6-inch curbs will stop the water from hitting the building. I don't see any problems with the design."

Evans said because of the width of the road and sidewalk, the University must be expecting a large number of people to use the building on a daily basis.

"What do they expect, thousands of people marching into admissions? The entrance will look like the entrance to a royal palace," Evans said.

Director of Admissions Timm Rinehart said the University does not expect a large amount of people to use the building.

"On any given week, we don't excpect more than 40 people," Rinehart said.

"Most of the people will park by the new Visitor's Center or in the Campus Center Parking Garage, not in front of the admissions building," he said.

Smokeout today

It's once again that time of year when many individuals will take a test. It's not a test of knowledge but rather a 24-hour test of self-control. Today is the Great American Smokeout.

This event is held each year on the third Thursday of November and today is the 11th anniversary.

The on-campus sponsors are the University Health Services and peer health class students.

"We are an extension of the nation-wide event. We are trying to make UMass students quit smoking," said Judi Kohn, a peer health class student and senior economics major.

Among the group's strategy is sending postcards to prospective quitters. They can be purchased at Health Services and the 26th floor of the Tower Library.

Another part of the plan is having smoke survival kits available on the Campus Center concourse from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. today.

Dukakis reception mixed at Statehouse in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — State legislators gave Gov. Michael S. Dukakis a mixed reception as he returned to the Massachusetts House chamber a week after losing his presidential bid. He thanked them for their support and addressed the state's budget problems.

"It was just a pleasant stop to say hello and to thank the people here who worked very hard for his candidacy. It was not a substantive speech, and he cleary did not address the issues. I don't think that was his intention," democrat State Rep. Richard Voke said after the address Tuesday.

The influential chairman of the House Ways and Means committee added that Dukakis was received as a "sincere and honest and dedicated public servant."

Members of the House, Senate, Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, and a gallery full of supporters gave Dukakis a three minute standing ovation as the governor walked from his Statehouse office into a packed House chamber.

The public show of support aside, however, many legislators said later in private that they found the speach lacking in particulars and predicted that Dukakis will face a restive Legislature in coming months.

"I think what we saw here was a welcome back, a historic moment," said House Republican Leader Steven Pierce. But he quickly added a warning.

"Members are very unhappy not only with the outcome of the election but also with the problems we face in Massachusetts. Democratic members needed to be thanked ... as they face these real tough challenges," said Peirce.

The Republican leader credited Dukakis with acknowledging the seriousness of the fiscal situation.

"I don't for one minute underestimate the seriousness of the problem," Dukakis said, once again stopping short of describing the situation as a "crisis," as many legislators insist.

"And no one should doubt our commitment to deal with it," the governor said. "We will have to make some tough choices while we protect the most vulnerable of our citizens."

Aside from a call to action, Dukakis offered no program to deal with a shortfall in the state budget that ranges form a low of $282 million, acknowledged by governor's top budget aid on Monday, to estimates as high as $1 billion.

"This is an emotional moment for me," Dukakis said at the start of his 11-minute address to the special joint session, joking about his legendary reserve and sharing his feelings of nostalgia, sorrow and pride.

elevated readings as far out as the perimeter, it's a significant event," Agnes said.

The 9:50 a.m. the accident occurred in a waste processing area during preparations for shipping a container of waste from the plant.

The water was being filtered through diatomaceous earth to remove radioactivity. The earth then was to be shipped to a storage facility in Barnwell, S.C., Robinson said.

She said the water "overflowed the area where it was to be collected."

The spill was discovered by a plant operator making a tour of the plant who immediately cut off the flow of water, she said.

Edison spokesman John Fodler said the worker's knee touched some water during the spill cleanup and was washed with soap and water. "The level of contamination on his knee was just barely above the minimum level where we say something is contaminated instead of clean," he said.

He said the plant has roped off and is testing the area around the spill.

Agnes said he wanted to know whether the accident was "based on human error or was the result of some faulty procedure."

"If it's a problem with the procedure, that may be more serious," he said.

Insurance regulations for testing of AIDS thrown out by state court

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts regulations limiting AIDS testing for insurance purposes were thrown out by the state Supreme Court yesterday on grounds that the insurance commissioner lacked authority to issue the rules.

"We conclude that the commissioner had no authority, express or implied, to adapt the regulations challenged in this case," Justice Herbert P. Wilkins wrote for a unanimous court.

Insurance Commissioner Roger Singer issued the regulations on Sept. 11, 1987, making Massachusetts only the second state (behind New York) to ban, by regulations, health insurance testing for antibodies associated with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Under the regulations, AIDS testing would be banned for all health insurance and any group life or disability insurance. Testing would be allowed under controlled conditions for individual life and non-cancellable disability insurance.

The regulations said that insurance companies who wish to test must offer a no-test $100,000 policy with an AIDS exclusion. Companies could also offer any policy with a no-test AIDS exclusion which could be removed later if the individual policyholder furnished proof of a negative test for the AIDS antibody.

The Life Insurance Association of Massachusetts and several insurance companies sued to block the regulations. On June 7, 1988, superior court Judge Elbert Tuttle granted a summary judgment in favor of the insurance commissioner. But the regulations have been held up pending the appeal.

The high court's ruling today focused only on the industry's contention that Singer lacked authority to issue the regulations. The justices did not consider other industry concerns that the rules were arbitrary, denied equal protection to people not infected with AIDS, and interfered with the insurer's common law right not to enter into contracts.

Singer, with Attorney General James Shannon supporting him, based his authority to issue the regulations on a 1924 law generally outlining his administration and enforcement duties.

But the court said, "It is doubtful that the 1924 Legislature intended by implication to authorize the commissioner to issue regulations dictating underwriting practices of insurance companies."

The court went on to note that "when the Legislature has wanted the commissioner to have the authority to issue regulations, it has said so expressly."

The justices added that their decision "has nothing to do with the substantive merits of the (AIDS-testing) regulations or with the need for their adoption."

"The commissioner has sought in good faith to deal with one aspect of an important public health problem," the court said.

However, the justices said, "Even if we were to agree that the challenged regulations are desirable, or at least that the commissioner was well justified in his decision in thinking so, this court lacks the power to provide the authority for their promulgation."

Estonia declares self a "sovereign" nation

TALLINN, USSR (AP) — The Estonian parliament yesterday declared the tiny Baltic republic "sovereign" with the right to veto Soviet laws.

Before the vote, deputies from the Communist Party and government of Estonia held a debate in which they detailed the republic's need to control land, factories, and laws, saying centralized control from Moscow had been ruinous for both the economy and environment.

The vote on the "declaration of sovereignty" was 258 to 1, with five abstentions. It came after a vote on related amendments to the Estonian Constitution that passed 254 to 7.

The amendments include one declaring that Soviet laws will take effect in Estonia "upon their registration by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Estonian Soviet Socialist Republic in a way regulated by it." That somewhat vague wording was apparently the result of a last-minute compromise.

The other four amendments add human and civil rights guarantees, claim the land and natural resources of the republic as the property of Estonia rather than of the "state", and guarantee the right to hold private property.

The declaration of sovereignty stopped short of calling for complete independence, but demanded a treaty be negotiated with Moscow to "determine the further status of Estonia in the composition of the Soviet Union."

The passage of such measures by a government body is an unprecendented act of defiance toward central authorities in a country still feeling its way through Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost" or openness.

The pill temporarily increases heart disease

BOSTON (AP) — Women who take birth control pills face double the usual chance of heart disease, but their increased risk goes away as soon as they stop taking the pill, a news study conference concluded.

Although the link between heart trouble and current pill use is well known, experts were unsure whether this increased risk lingered after women stopped taking the pill.

The latest study, based on the long-running Nurses' Health Study at Harvard Medical School, concludes that former pill takers have no more than the usual risk of heart trouble.

The study found that current pill users are 2.5 times more likely than non-users the same age to have heart attacks and strokes. However, their risk was still extremely low.

The adverse affects of the pill could be potentially more important if they continue after women stop using this form of birth control. Former users are older and are already at higher risk of heart trouble. Even a moderate increase in this hazard could be insignificant.

"Women who have used oral contraceptives in the past do not have to be concerned that this will raise their risk of cardiovascular disease," said Dr. Neil J. Stampfer.

Stampfer's study, published in last Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, was based on an eight-year follow-up of 119,061 female nurses. They ranged in age from 30 to 55 when the study began. Of these, 7,074 were current pill users, and 49,269 had taken it in their past.

Overall, there were 380 non-fatal heart attacks, 205 non-fatal strokes and 230 cardiovascular deaths.

While the risks among current users were higher than among non-users the same age, heart trouble was still rare among pill users. Only 10 current pill users suffered major coronary heart disease, and seven of them were cigarette smokers.

Cigarettes clearly increase the risk of heart disease, and Stampfer said "there definitely is an interaction" between the pill and smoking.

"Current users would have about double the risk of heart attack," Stampfer said, "But it's double a number that's almost next to nothing. The risk of heart attack in young women is very low, as long as they don't smoke. In fact, smoking is the cause of about half of all heart attacks in young to middle-aged women."

Vietnamese immigrant earns 7th degree from MIT

BOSTON (AP) — Tue Nguyen did more than nibble from the tree of knowlege, he made a feast of it.

Just nine years after arriving in this country with thousands of other Vietnamese boat people, Nguyen, 26, has earned his seventh degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a doctorate in nuclear engineering. The school says it thinks that is a record for MIT.

Nguyen told the MIT public relations office that he earned multiple degrees "to get the most out of my time at MIT and out of my tuition."

He also said he isn't a party-goer.

The super scholar was in Burlington, Vt., this week preparing to start a job at IBM designing technology for the manufacture of semiconductor devices. He did not return telephone calls from the Associated Press. But one of his fans back in Cambridge was happy to crow about him.

"You're not likely to find another person like this very often," said nuclear engineering professor Sidney Yip, Nuygen's doctoral adviser.

"He's a very quiet guy, very laid back," said Yip. "But, as you can imagine, deep down he has a lot of will power."

Nguyen entered MIT in 1981. By taking up to 12 courses a semester instead of the normal MIT student load of four, he earned his first undergraduate degree in three years and finished up four more bachelor's degrees in one more year.

Judge's sentencing called illegal

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The saga of John Roma and his family, who fought with Orlando police at the airport in February, continues to play out in the courts despite their sentencing two weeks ago.

The prosecutor now says a judge's sentences of unsupervised probation and "judicial warnings" were illegal, and he is appealing to a higher court.

He wants the Romas to come back to Orlando from Massachusetts for resentencing.

Circuit Judge James Byrd sentenced Roma, 44, of Staunton, Mass., to two years of unsupervised probation. Roma's wife Diane and his 18-year-old daughter Deenah-Jean were given judicial warnings.

The family entered guilty pleas to a charge of battery on a law enforcement officer in connection with their highly publicized battle with police, a fight that stemmed from the Roma's argument with employees of a rental car firm at the airport.

Assistant State Attorney Jeff Ashton said Tuesday there's no provision in state law for either unsupervised probation or a judicial warning.

"I have no objection to the judge exercising his discretion anywhere within lawful bounds," said Ashton.

Police chiefs discuss training

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — The head of the Western Massachusetts Chiefs of Police Association says the CPA doesn't like Pittsfield mayor Anne Wojtkowski's idea of turning police training over to community colleges.

Agawam Police Chief Stanley Chemielewski also said the chiefs want a bigger role in fashioning training policies for the regional police academies run by the state.

"We are the experts," Chemielewski said following a meeting of the chief's association here Tuesday to discuss the mayor's proposal and the state attorney general's investigation of the regional police academy in Agawam. One of the 16 cadets who were hospitalized in the first week of training died Nov. 3 of complications from heat stroke.

Wojtkowski has said that Berkshire Community College officials have drafted a curriculum for police training and she plans to discuss it with the mayors of Chicopee, Holyoke, North Adams and Westfield. The mayors, who all had recruits at the Agawam academy, were scheduled to meet in Pittsfield on Thursday..

Meanwhile, the head of one legislative committee investigating the training said Wojtkowski could remain impartial even though she received campaign contributions for top staffers and obtained jobs for constituents at the Agawam academy. The head of another legislative committee called the training program a hotbed of patronage and urged that the entire 42-member staff be abolished.

"People contribute to my campaigns ... and that doesn't make me influenced or jaded in any way shape or form," said state Sen. Linda Melconian, D-Springfield. The state Senate panel, which she heads held its first meeting Tuesday.

The Boston Herald reported earlier this week that Melconian has helped three people, including her mother-in-law, get jobs at the Agawam academy and has received campaign contributions of $100 from former council director Gary Eagan and his top aide, plus varying amounts form other staffers

State Rep. Christopher Hogkins, who heads the House inquiry into the training scandal, accused the Dukakis administration of backing off from a total house cleaning in order to "protect the status quo" and the jobs of the training council's staff.

Peter Agnes, assistant state secretary of public safety, has vowed to totally revise the curriculum by month's end.

Bones spurs force Bird to the bench

BOSTON (AP) — Boston superstar Larry Bird, hurting from Achilles tendinitis, was restricted to the bench last night for the start of the Celtics' NBA game with the Golden State Warriors

Bird, who faces possible surgery for removal of bone spurs on both heels, took his usual solo shooting practice before the gates were opened at Boston Garden.

A short time later, coach Jimmy Rodgers reported that Bird, a 10-year veteran, would be in uniform but would not play.

"That's based on his performance [Tuesday] night in Miami," Rodgers said.

Bird played only 16 minutes and scored just six points as the Celtics ended a four-game losing streak Tuesday with an 84-65 victory over the expansion Heat.

Rodgers, off to a 2-4 start in his first year as head coach, said no decision has been reached on whether Bird should undergo surgery.

"There will be no final decision for at least another day," he said. "He has another medical examination scheduled for [today]."

Bird, who has been taking medication and has been on a special therapy program, denied reports in Miami Tuesday night that he had decided to have the surgery which would sideline him for 10-12 weeks.

"I don't know, I have to wait and see," he said, admitting his trouble "just hasn't eased up any."

Bird's six points against Miami represented the lowest total since he scored just two before being ejected for fighting early in a game with Milwaukee two years ago.

The former Indiana State All-American has been held to under 10 points just 16 times since joining the Celtics in 1979.

defeated by only Yale and B.C. in the first meet of the season."But the season ends on a bitter sweet note, with the departure of team captain Peers.

"She did a great job as captain and will certainly be missed," LaFreniere said. "She's a nice influence for the team. She's a good leader and her teammates look up to her. She is an example of someone who puts everyting on the line with a desire to be good.

"When such a dedicated atmosphere surrounds a team, the women are motivated to keep pushing even when they're tired. They know everyone else will do the same," LaFreniere said.

Problems run heavy for Celtics

Something is wrong with those Celtics. Something is definitely wrong.

The Men in Green headed south to Miami (Miami?) with a four-game losing streak and struggled for awhile against what is certainly one of the lamest teams ever to disgrace the NBA.

The C's have already lost two games at hallowed Boston Garden. It's supposed to take months for something like that to happen, not days. Something is wrong here.

The team looks like it aged about five years in the offseason. Is this an oldtimers squad or what? Now they say that God's gift to basketball may need surgery? Out 10, 12, maybe 24 weeks? Something is clearly wrong.

Steve Richards

And who is that big guy wearing No. 45? The one with the gut hanging over his shorts and usually riding the pine. Where did we get him from?

Wait a minute. He looks familiar. Yeah, now I remember.

It was two college hoop seasons ago. Some friends and I headed down to the Cage (after warming up with a few pre-game libations) to watch the Minutemen play highly-touted Atlantic-10 foe Temple.

The place was packed, filled with that famed Curry Hicks electricity. As we found some seats, in the balcony right behind one of the hoops, we got set for a night of hootin', hollerin' and hecklin'. That's what the Cage is famous for isn't it?

The game went pretty well for the local five. The crowd was getting into it and the Maroon and White stayed within striking distance most of the way. Although UMass lost it in the last few minutes, it put up a helluva fight against what was reported to be one of the top teams in the land.

But our group of Minutefans couldn't help but notice something that seemed very un-Top-20ish about Temple. Namely their center.

The man showed no signs of any offensive skills or the ability to jump. And he looked like a condominium in a tanktop. A glance at the program showed he was from Puerto Rico, not exactly known as a factory of basketball talent. Everytime the Owls brought the ball downcourt, Mr. 747 would be lagging behind with his tongue wagging. He stood out around the top of the key, a la Manute Bol, seemingly totally out of place.

This was all we had to see. We had found a target, a very large target, on which to unleash some verbal bombs.

"Hey buddy, you want a little oxygen? How about another Twinkie? What have you got, lead in your sneakers? Come on, Twinkie the Kid, let's see if you can jump?"

At first, our shouting was looked upon as the ramblings of fools. But the people around us seemed to take notice of the big guy and began to recognize his oaflike play.

Then came the good stuff. In the tradition of the great fans of Fenway Park (Daaaaa-ryl), we started up the chant of RIIIII-VAAAS, RIIIII-VAAAS, RIIIII-VAAAS.

Like The Wave on a sunny summer day, it caught on quickly and soon the Tub of Goo's name echoed around the Cage everytime he put up a brick (RIIIII-VAAAS), missed a free throw (RIIIII-VAAAS) or got outjumped for a rebound (RIIIII-VAAAS). It is safe to say that most of the folks in attendance that night went home with a sore throat.

There is no way Temple is going to make it to the Final Four with that stiff playing center, we thought after the game. The Owls did not disappoint, despite carrying the No. 1 ranking for most of the next season.

Granted that was only one game in the man's career and he is surely a better player than he showed that night at the Cage.

But now, Ramon Rivas is a member of the Boston Celtics.

Something is wrong. Very wrong.

Minutemen 10th at IC4A meet

Milette runs sixth overall; team hampered by illness

Joe Milette (right) placed sixth overall in the IC4A meet last Saturday. The Minutemen finished 10th.

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts cross country team ended its season last Saturday with a 10th place finish at the Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association meet at Wivany Park in New Canaan, Conn.

Dartmouth College won the meet with 71 points, followed by Providence College (130), Penn State University (133), the Naval Academy (214) and Northeastern University (226). UMass finished with 330 points in the meet, which consisted of 70 teams and 459 runners.

"As far as my pre-meet expectations, we finished a little low," said coach Ken O'Brien. "Over the past two weeks we've had some poor breaks which didn't help us."

Those breaks that O'Brien alluded to were the health status of both Art Smith and Kerry Boyle. Smith had been sick with bronchitis, while Boyle came down with strep throat a day before the race.

"Losing your two and three men will make you slide down," O'Brien said.

The bright spot for UMass was the performance of Joe Milette, who finished in sixth place overall. "This was the best individual race he's had since he's been here," O'Brien said. "He took command early on and went to the front."

Because of his outstanding effort, Milette has earned a chance to go to the NCAA meet at Iowa State University as a Region 1 participant.

Following Milette for the Minutemen were Smith and Boyle, who finished in the 63rd and 68th positions, respectively. "Had they been healthy, they could have moved us into fourth or fifth place," O'Brien said.

"We gave it our best shot," he said. "The injuries hampered us, but we did the best we could."

Women's cross country 16th in ECACs

Freshman Hill places 24th as Minutewomen finish on good note

By MEG QUINN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's cross country team competed in the ECAC Championships last Saturday at Brown University, the final meet of their successful season.

The Minutewomen placed 16th in a field of over 50 teams, a significant improvement over the 22nd placing from last year's meet. Although a bit disappointed with the team's finish, UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said that the team learned from its mistakes.

"There are no regrets after Saturday. They had a chance to redeem themselves and they did," LaFreniere said.

Running in a pack of 350 competitors, the Minutewomen had to get out quick. Precious Hill placed 24th overall in a time of 17:56, which was phenomenal for a freshman, according to LaFreniere. "She ran very poised and competitively. She was not afraid of the competition," she said.

Hill blew by many runners who had dominated her in previous meets, including top women from Boston College and Yale.

Shana Smith, running second for UMass, finished 72nd in 18:39 in what LaFreniere called a great job. Laura Lavallee, not far behind Smith, received equal praise for her 98th placing in 18:56.

The meet also marked the last race for senior Kristen Peers. She turned in a good performance as well, finishing 143rd in 19:21. Amy St. Pierre fell victim to the competition, literally, as she fell over a runner in front of her at the half-mile point. She wound up finishing 164th in 19:32.

"She had to play catch-up the rest of the course, but ended the season with a good race," LaFreniere said.

Cathy Crocker ran an impressive race as well, placing 195th with a time of 19:56, after sitting out the last two meets because of an injury. Lynn Kirchoff, who also suffered the brutality of her competitors, ran the whole race in pain after falling twice and then hitting an unavoidable obstacle. She finished 235th in 20:35.

Although the position numbers seem high, they really don't reflect the performance of the Minutewomen. What are more important are the finishing times in a race as large as this one. With so many runners competing for position, two or three runners often cross the finish line at the same time. LaFreniere was pleased with the results.

"The team ran well. They were not intimidated by the numbers," she said. "It's not unusual to choke at this type of meet but they weren't overwhelmed. They were competitive and physical. They used their elbows a lot and I think they liked it.

"The women saw the challenge and they stepped right up to it," LaFreniere said. "With only two years of collegiate experience, the team performed well. We've got a great dual meet record, finishing 6-2

Men's swimming set to open Saturday

B.C. first opponent; Minutemen enter with 41-meet win streak

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Are you a UMass sports fan? Are you not satisfied with the season the football team is having? Are you torn by the unexpected early exits of the women's soccer and field hockey teams? Are you weary of this year's dismal predictions for the basketball team? Are you unwilling to wait for the lacrosse season to watch a championship-caliber Minuteman team?

If you answered "yes" to any or all of the above questions, then stop your anxiety attack, because relief is here. Saturday at 1 p.m., the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team kicks off what promises to be another successful season against Boston College at Boyden Pool.

Just how successful, you ask? Well, over the last three and a half years, UMass coach Russ Yarworth has led the team to victory in 41 consecutive dual meets (a string that is still alive) and two consecutive New England championships. In 1987-88, the Minutemen were 12-0 and this year are looking forward to another undefeated season and another New England title.

This is a goal that is not unreasonable. Though they've lost several of their big guns from last year, like Jim Kuhns, Dan Hansen and Eric Bebchick among others, they have a large number of returning front-line swimmers and several promising newcomers.

"We have less depth than last year," Yarworth said, "[and] this was not our best recruiting year." But he still has plenty of talent to work with.

The junior class is thick with talent, including three returning New England individual champions. Last year, G.T. Ladd took first in the 100-meter butterfly, Brian McIver took first in the 50, 100 and 200 freestyle races, and Dave Ehle got top honors in the 100 and 200 meter backstroke.

Roger Kennedy placed second and holds the school record for the 200 individual medley. The New England medley relay champs return intact along with sophomores Evan Gwilliam (second in 100 butterfly and fourth in the 200 fly), Peter Reich and Jim Robertson, both top 10 finishers in last year's finals.

The most promising newcomers to the team include three freshmen and a transfer. Freshman Mike Yunker is a strong sprinter and possible middle distance swimmer. Bill Chouinard is top-notch in the breaststroke and, Yarworth predicted, "if he can show me some dedication, he should be a big contributor to the team."

Frank Sampson, the transfer, should "set New England on their ears," according to Yarworth. He is an excellent all-around swimmer and should finish in the top five regionally. Another swimmer to watch is freshman Sean Rutherford, a great natural sprinter and butterflier. "He should surprise a lot of people, myself included," Yarworth said.

And the lost goes on. The Minutemen are solid, only needing a little support to put them over the top.

Town Meeting examines arena, polling place

By LISA JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

An article before the Amherst Town Meeting to find a polling place closer to the Southwest Residential Area was referred to the Board of Selectmen, while another article to find alternate funding for the proposed hockey arena was passed last night.

Student Government Association Public Policy Committee Chairman Michael Greiner said the purpose behind Article 1 was to help find a polling place for Precinct 10 that would be more accessible to students than the current polling place at Bangs Community Center.

"I'm looking for a philosophical statement that the town opposes [having polling sites so far from campus]," he said, adding that he wanted the University administration to become more involved in the selection process. The article has been referred to the Board of Selectmen, which does not meet again until mid-December.

On Article 1, Greiner said its referral back to the selectmen would do little to speed up the selection of a new polling place.

He said the downtown location made accessibility difficult for students, and he argued in earlier meetings with selectmen that it could produce a lower voter turnout.

Opponents of the bill said the voter turnout was not affected by the polling location.

In Precinct 10, which includes part of Southwest, town figures show that of 2,613 students, only 370 had registered to vote in Amherst.

Opponents said almost all of the registered students voted, meaning accessibility wasn't a factor.

"It's not that the students are apathetic," said one woman.

"Most of the students vote by absentee ballot from their home towns."

Alternative funding for hockey arena urged

Greiner's luck changed for the better with Article 7, a request for the University to not use student fees for the proposed hockey arena, and instead work toward finding alternative sources of funding.

Town meeting members passed the article by a vote of 83-75 a request that the university look into funding and traffic problems that could be caused by the William D. Mullins Memorial Center, the official name of the proposed hockey arena.

The Mullins Center article is non-binding and does not have to be followed by the University.

"This is a mandate from the town," said Greiner. "It will mean a battle for us but we have a group behind us that the university won't easily ignore."

Proponents of Article 7 said students and the town were left out of the decision-making process, and the money needed to build the arena could be better spent on teachers, teaching assistants, and classroom buildings.

The proposed arena will cost about $50 million to build;

ATG alumni irate over fraternity shutdown

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts was unfair in revoking the charter of Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity, several ATG alumni said yesterday at an informal meeting at the Newman Center.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson last week stripped the fraternity of official recognition in response to reports of alleged hazing activities.

"We really don't feel that [the University's actions] is proper," said Jim Mulcahy, class of 1960. "We want to let the University see us reopen in September with the freshmen."

Mulcahy said the alumni have talked about initiating the pledges in September and starting anew.

However, Madson said he met with the alumni later yesterday afternoon and told them that would not be possible.

"These alumni care about this fraternity," he said. "They feel violated, and I respect their caring, but I couldn't debate whether they could be reopened in September."

Associate Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development James Langley said the alumni's proposal sounds a lot like a suspension.

"You don't revoke the charter and reopen next fall," Langley said. "It is a serious incident and it goes beyond suspension."

Langley said a fraternity can petition for reconsideration after about two years, although that does not mean they would definitely reopen.

"It's like saying someone is up for parole in two years," he said. "That doesn't mean they are going to get it."

Sean Maloney, president of the ATG Corporation, class of 1975, also said it was unfair for the University to punish the whole ATG Corporation for the acts of the few.

"To think that all this has been jeopardized by a couple of bad apples in our bushel," Maloney said, shaking his head in dismay.

John Davis, class of 1956, said he is especially disappointed with the present members of the fraternity since hazing was the topic of an Oct. 15 meeting the alumni had with the brothers.

"We told them there would be no more hazing and now something like this happens, it really hurts," Davis said.

"This has affected all of us really deeply," he said. "It's broken the trust with us and broken the trust with the University."

Davis, along with the other alumni, said

Duffey announces several million to be cut from 1988 fiscal budget

The University of Massachusetts will have to cut its budget for the current fiscal year from $5 million to $8 million, Chancellor Joseph Duffey announced yesterday at a Faculty Senate meeting.

The University's only action so far is a freeze on all state funded hirings, Duffey said. All hirings done before yesterday will not be affected by the freeze, he said.

"We have to figure where we could take the cuts," Duffey said. "We'll be doing that in the next two weeks." As of now, no layoffs are expected, he said, adding that a full report of the situation will hopefully be done by mid-December.

A University spokesperson said one of the actions being considered is cutting the size of the spring semester class by about 100 students and cutting the size of next fall semester's class by about 300 to 400 students.

Duffey said the Board of Regents of Higher Education notified him of the cuts yesterday afternoon.

The University's budget is worked out about two to three years in advance.

Justice Dept. postpones defense fraud charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Justice Department officials have postponed initial indictments in the massive Pentagon purchasing fraud scandal while they debate whom to charge first.

"We expect acting in the very near future but not this week and probably not next week," said Sharon Dibbley, spokeswoman for US Attorney Henry Hudson in suburban Alexandria, Va., where the more than 2-year-old investigation is headquartered.

Last month, Hudson and Justice sources predicted that the first indictments would be brought by mid-November, but now the best estimates are that the grand jury will vote on charges either very late in November or en early December.

A source at Justice Department headquarters said Wednesday, "It's still being reviewed here, over legal issues."

Another government source added, "It was anticipated that something would happen tomorrow and it will not happen tomorrow."

Justice Department spokesman John Russell said Assistant Attorney General Edward Dennis, head of the criminal division, "has never set a timetable. He's told them to take their time and go when the Soviet driving not a safe proposition

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet drivers are so reckless and roads are so bad that the annual Soviet traffic death toll is almost as high as in the United States, a country that has 10 times as many cars, the Communist Party daily Pravda said Wednesday.

About 49,000 people are killed in traffic accidents each year in the Soviet Union, Pravda reported.

"There is a lack of elementary ethics on the road, with drivers behaving rudely and without any respect towards each other," the paper said. "The Soviet road and high speed are not compatible."

The 1986 traffic death toll in the United States was 47,900, according to the 1988 World Almanac.

Pravda said in an article Oct. 30 that the Soviet Union has about 50 cars per 1,000 people, compared to 560 per 1,000 in the United States.

Two hydrogen bomb 'fathers' disagree sharply on 'Star Wars'

WASHINGTON (AP) — An unprecedented joint appearance by two men frequently described as the respective 'fathers' of the Soviet and American Hydrogen bombs featured sharp disagreement on whether space-based defenses would bring world harmony or nuclear war.

Andrei Sakharov, the Soviet scientist who has become his nation's foremost human rights activist, said deploying such a defense system would 'destabilize the world' and could trigger nuclear war between the superpowers.

Edward Teller, one of the principal American advocates of deploying the Star Wars defense system, said it could lead to a "world neighborhood" of cooperation and peace.

The two scientists aired their views Wednesday evening at a banquet honoring Teller as a pioneer in the field of nuclear physics and for his advocacy of the Strategic Defense Initiative, SDI. It was sponsored by the Ethics and Public Policy Center, a conservative research group.

Sakharov, 67, winner of the Nobel and Albert Einstein peace prizes, attended the dinner as part of his first trip outside his native land. He and Teller held a private 20-minute conversation, the first time the two had met.

In a speech at the beginning of the banquet, Sakharov praised Teller as a man of principle and conviction but said deploying the Strategic Defense Initiative, as the Star Wars plan is formally known, would be "a great error."

"I feel it would destabilize the world," Sakharov said.

He cited the 'enormous cost' involved in paying for the deployment of a defense system by the United States and for the Soviet Union to field new offensive weapons to defeat it.

Disabled citizens learn food services

By DEBORAH RITTER
Collegian Correspondent

"Ma'am, would you like some more coffee?"

"Yes, thanks," the woman responded, and the waitress who has just served lunch positions herself carefully to my right side and reaches down unobtrusively to pour, just as she has been taught.

The waitress is a participant in Integrated Approaches to Training in Food Service, a program run by the Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration Department to prepare developmentally disabled citizens for jobs in the restaurant industry.

According to Frank Latucca, coordinator of the program and HRTA professor, the ten students in the two-semester program are learning, within the bounds of her own capabilities, as many aspects of the food service industry as they can. Students are trained by HRTA undergraduates, and together they operate a small dining room in Room 220 of Skinner Hall on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. From 9:30 to 11:00 a.m. coffee and homebaked pastry are served and from 11:30 to 12:30 there is a set menu lunch. The menu changes weekly.

A typical main course of a baby shrimp salad plate, served with homemade bread, and hot apple pie, costs $2.75.

The program, in its third year of operation, has been extremely successful, Latucca said.

"Ninety percent of our first year students are still employed. That's impressive because food service is an industry with a very high turnover," he said.

Graduates of the program are working at the UMass Faculty Club, Amherst College, Herm's Restarant, as well as fast-food chains like MacDonalds's, Burger King, and Friendly's, Latucca said.

In addition to helping to man an industry that is chronically short of help, the program is the cutting edge of the restaurant management's new attitude toward its employees.

"We educate HRTA majors to be leaders and policy makers in the hospitality industry," Latucca said. "Through this program they get the exposure they need to an invaluable employee resource."

"They are learning that if they take the time to train someone properly, they will get in return an employee for life," he said.

The program is the only one of its kind in the HRTA department, Latucca said, adding that he is currently looking for ways to expand it.

"Eventually I'd like our students to offer breakfast, lunch and dinner five days a week, and have more variety in the menu," he said. "If we expand, we can accept more students."

The students are selected by Incentive Community Enterprises, a private agency funded by the state. Due Keenan-Jabori, ICE's Vice President of Employment and Training, said that she would like to see more students from high school special education programs participate.

"We still have clients that need to be employed, and employers that need them," she said. "Of all the programs we sponsor, this one has the highest success rate. The consistent, standardized routine of some kinds of restaurant work is especially appropriate for the developmentally disabled."

In most cases, the program's alumni are paid competitive wages, Keenan-Jabori said. Some employers are given a additional incentive with a Federal provision called the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit.

"An employer hires one of ICE's clients, with the assumption that the worker's productivity will be about the same as other employees," she said. "At the end of the year, there is a tax break.

"Generally speaking, we don't make arrangements with employers who want to pay less," Keenan-Jabori said. "And we don't make arrangements with employers who want to pay less. And we don't have to. When there were less jobs, employers had more bargaining power."

Five College program relieves pre-reg angst

By JACK TRAINOR
Collegian Correspondent

Pre-registration for many University of Massachusetts courses can be miserable, but in spite of that few take advantage of the relative ease of registering for courses at one of the other area colleges, according to a student working in the Five College Interchange Program.

Located in Machmer Hall, Five College Inc. allows students to enrich their studies by choosing courses at Hampshire, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Amherst colleges.

Currently 331 students, less than two percent of the UMass student body, are enrolled in the program.

According to Sheila Brennan, a graduate student who works in the UMass chapter of Five College Inc., the low percentage may be because students feel it is difficult to take a class at another school. To facilitate the process Five Colleges Inc. provides free bus transportation, a meal interchange program, and a direct borrowing policy among libraries.

"Our main goal is not to get as many students as we can to register. It is to expand the registration selection and provide students with variety," she said.

"Registering (in the Five College Interchange Program) during pre-registration will save students a lot of hassle because they won't need their instructor's signature," said Brennan. "(Something) which they will need in January."

Brennan said other colleges offer a great deal of courses to a small number of students so UMass students have a very good chance of getting the course they want, she said. The philosophy is there will always be room for a Five College Interchange student, she added.

Any degree seeking UMass undergraduate, graduate, or continuing education student, with the exception of first semester freshmen, may register in a Five College course.

Most UMass students participate in the program to see what it is like to take courses at a small liberal arts school, Brennan said.

But students like Kristin Cuilwik, a senior psychology major at Smith College, currently enrolled in a psychology class at UMass, wanted just the opposite. "I live near Ohio State back home, and I wanted to see what it was like to take a class at a big university," she said.

Cuilwik said she finds the class and the professor interesting and funny, and she noted that "the UMass students I have met seem more relaxed and less stressed out."

Since it was founded in 1965, Five College Inc. has seen the development of the Five College Astronomy Department and the Five College Dance Department as well as numerous other Five College programs and fields.

"I've noticed that a lot of business students have taken advantage of the Japanese and international relations courses at the other schools," Brennan said.

Brennan said animosity can arise between students attending so many schools so close to one another. "Through this program students meet with people from the different schools and possibly develop friendships."

Students rarely use the program to fulfill their requirements, she said.

"They diversify in order to get a feeling of what it is like to take courses at another university with a different atmosphere and educational philosophy," she said.

BOG decides not to replace committee members

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors last night defeated a proposal to remove all current members of the board's Space Committee because of the poor attendance of some governors.

Although the proposal failed, it showed governors that there is a problem with the committee, which has been hampered by poor attendance.

"It's my feeling that the intent of the [proposal] is to impress upon the members of the committee the work we need to get done and the very real responsibility the governors have," said Chairperson Eric Nakajima.

Zohar Porat, Space Committee coordinator, said, "We never get quorum, and we couldn't make any decisions. We couldn't make any progress in any way." She would not comment on whether she was disappointed on the failure of the motion.

The committee is important because it annually allocates office space in the Campus Center/Student Union complex. Each year there is a scramble for office space, which is in short supply. As a result, there have been some bitter fights for the available space.

Allocations were to be completed immediately after Thanksgiving, but they will not be completed on time because of the attendance problem.

Several seats on the committee were open because some governors have been dropped from the board after excessive absences. As a result, nominations to the committee were opened, and several new members were elected to the committee.

Porat said she hoped the new members of the committee would show up for the meetings, which would allow the committee to make the office space allocations.

"The committee needs to get going," said BOG Treasurer Joe Casali. "What I've been seeing is [Space Coordinator Zohar Porat] having meetings, and one or two people showing up."

Traci Davis, one of the members of the committee who Porat said has been regularly attending the meetings said, "There are 14 Registered Student Organizations that have asked for space that do not have it." She said she and Gov. John Raj had done most of the investigations on the RSOs to evaluate their need for office space.

Officer injured while at home

An 11-year-veteran of the University of Massachusetts Public Safety department was seriously injured last Friday while doing yardwork at his Hadley home.

Officer Jerome Yezierski, 34, had been working in his yard removing an old tree when a large branch became dislodged from it and struck him on the head.

Yezierski was taken to Holyoke Hospital and then transported to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield where he underwent surgery. He is listed in critical condition.

"We're all praying for him, and we hope the entire community will," said Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety.

Yezierski joined the the force in January of 1977.

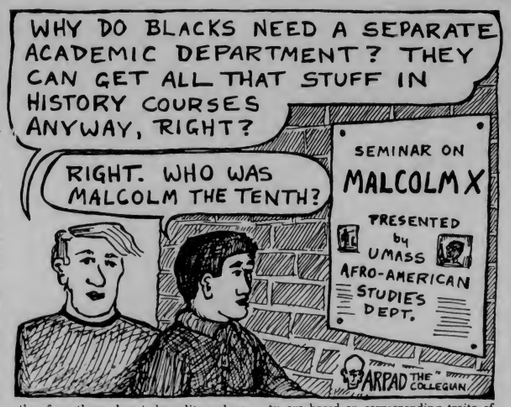
Racism is an attitude with a thousand disguises

Racism. Why is it that ever time I hear that word, I feel as if someone has pressed the panic button? I get jittery, and knots form in the pit of my stomach. Why? After all, it is just a word is it not? It really doesn't exist after all these years now, does it? Martin Luther King, Malcolm X and the fight for equality era ended a long time ago, right? Pffft! Hardly.

Scott Green



WHY DO BLACKS NEED A SEPARATE ACADEMIC DEPARTMENT? THEY CAN GET ALL THAT STUFF IN HISTORY COURSES ANYWAY, RIGHT?
RIGHT. WHO WAS MALCOLM THE TENTH?
SEMINAR ON MALCOLM X
PRESENTED by UMASS AFRO-AMERICAN STUDIES DEPT.
ARPAD THE COLLEGIAN

Last semester, some of my professors devoted class time to discuss racial issues. I must say, I was both shocked and dismayed at what was said. I heard such statement as, "I don't think there is a racial problem here at UMass," "I've never seen any oppression here," and "The blacks are receiving preferential treatment."

Racism. There, I've said it again. What is it? How can you identify it? Just who is racist and who is not?

Racism is defined as the belief in the superiority of one's own racial group, and there are two types of racism, dominative and aversive. The dominative racist acts out bigoted beliefs. He/She openly shows his/her race hatred. These are the Adolph Hitlers of society. These are the people who join the Ku Klux Klan, attack interracial couples, and yell racial slurs. Then there is the aversive racist. This is the individual that believes in white race superiority and is more or less aware of it, but does nothing overt about it. They avoid contact with black people and try to ignore their existence, but when faced with a situation, they force themselves to be polite and act accordingly. They may speak of equality or of open goodwill, but at the same time stand behind the institution they create to ensure that their goodwill is not challenged.

We must remember that institutional patterns of racism are extensions of individual racism. Judgements of superiority are based on corresponding traits of white people as norms of comparison. People tend to evaluate white expressions positively and black expressions negatively. I have often heard from fellow students that they think that blacks segregate themselves. They all eat together, go to and sit at sports events together, and so on. 'Why don't they spread themselves out?" is a common reaction to this belief. What are the implications here? Well, there is a universal human tendency to divide the world into "us" and "them." Bonds of "us" and barriers of "them" are established as a consequence of the ability to recognize another's interests, values and beliefs as opposing or converging with one's own. By asking them to spread out, one asks, "Why don't they become more like us?" Turn it around, and one will find that we are guilty of the same criticism. We surround ourselves with white people who are like us. We surround ourselves with our family members and our friends. We do not see our behavior as objectionable, yet we would not consider dispersing ourselves throughout a community of black people. We think of "us" as the societal norm and "them" as being stubborn or deviant. This differentiation brings any "us" together. It creates solidarity and strength among any group.

The reason a lot of people are not aware of racial problems is because we are so absorbed in "us." We must create social conditions which cause the bonds of "we" to prevail over the barriers of "they." By being more open and honest, and by developing a healthy attitude toward change, we have started to do just that, here at UMass. "Hands across UMass" is a good indicator of progression along the continuum that eventually will lead to the day when everyone will co-exist. And to achieve such an evolution, we cannot and must not remain apathetic.

Scott Green is a UMass student

Notes from the Campus Center basement

A two-cent education and a million-dollar building

I'd like to thank the editors and publishers of the Dictionary of Cultural Literacy for waiting until I was a senior in college to come out with their book, helpfully subtitled "What Every American Needs To Know."

Gee, thanks. Here I thought it was worth my time, money and energy to listen to scholars and read books to get an education, and it turns out I could have gotten it out of one book. That's a few hundred pages, versus the thousands I have read in three and a half years as an undergraduate, not to mention elementary and secondary schools.

Nancy Klingener

I think this book should be required reading for everyone who wants to call herself or himself an American. They should put stacks of them on the Mexican border and the shores of South Florida. Educators can cease fighting over the canon or curriculum in literature, history, or the social sciences. It's easy: just one book. No problem.

It's cheaper, too. All that money I spent on texts and notebooks and paperbacks could have been used to further my understanding of what every American needs to know. For instance, how to take any subject to its most superficial level, and market it.

Next week, a lot of professors are going to pretend their students will be in class Wednesday. It's not their fault — it's a University mandate, because of something called the Calendar Committee in the Faculty Senate. And they're just following this state rule that we have to have the same number of each day of the week during the semester.

Why not give some other day a Wednesday schedule, or tell the legislature to stick it (as they do to us often enough)? With fifteen percent of our students coming from out-of-state, expecting them to hang around until after their last class on the day before a national holiday, and the top traveling day of the year, is ludicrous, unfair, and downright mean. Which is, of course, the reason most people just take off and make a farce out of the whole requirement anyway.

A question (just a simple one): We're getting a new convocation/conference center/arena. The new admissions building behind Gorman is looking spiffier every day. We already have the Campus Center for conferences and functions. Why do we need this new Visitors Center across from Whitmore? Who is going to go there? Why, in a time of incredible need for teaching assistants, classroom space, and financial aid, did we decide to build a million-dollar information booth? Just a question.

Speaking of conferences, it's fun to check out what people are gathering to discuss in this concrete haven on any given day. This week, Raytheon is sponsoring a "Microwave Convention." I haven't seen any little ovens running around getting drunk yet, but you never know. Maybe it's just a bunch of people sitting around trying to figure out how to defrost those little frozen pizzas without them getting all soggy.

In other news. . .

After near extinction in the 1960s and '70s, ballroom dancing has waltzed back into fashion. "Almost every romantic comedy movie I've seen lately has a ballroom-dance scene," observes Hilary Ginsberg, co-owner of New York City's Roseland, with one of the largest dance floors in the world. Across the land, nightclubs are revising their programs to meet the demand for a place to swing, mambo, tango or waltz. Business at private dance studios is booming, with an estimated 600,000 students signing up for lessons this year.

Macero's column myopic

After reading Cosmo Macero, Jr.'s article ("Core requirements make headaches, not education" Nov. 14), we are convinced that not only does Cosmo lack the ability to learn another language but he also lacks the motivation for being a communications major.

Mr. Macero says," I know nothing about biology, oceanography, or geology. Nor do I wish to find out." We would like to send a copy of this myopic article to his prospective employers. It says a lot about his personality and his potential for growth in their company.

Cosmo makes the point that, "Sure it's my own fault for not satisfying these stupid requirements when I was an underclassman." He also states that he is "doing things (he) should have had the foresight to complete these courses beforehand." Isn't that why we have two weeks for pre-registration?

This apathetic attitude towards learning and personal growth perhaps provides a little insight into the current US decline as an educational bastion. We suggest that Mr. Macero rethink his priorities and reasons for coming to college. Does he think that by paying his tuition it entitles him to sit back in his easy chair while his professors bestow his degree upon him?

We are sure that out of the fifty-percent of college applicants rejected at UMass, we can find at least one sensible and motivated individual to take his place. Besides, with the grades Cosmo is proud to disclose to the world, we are sure he won't last here much longer.

Two good leaders treated unfairly

Having been at UMass for two and a half months as a visiting student, I have taken note of the problems with the SGA presidency. I think I can say with the objectivity of an "outsider," that time has proven the path that the senate should take in this matter. I have seen Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz rallying for students to register to vote for the national election, arranging the successful "Hands Across UMass," and proving their commitment to student concerns.

I have seen W. Greg Rothman condescend to and attack his fellow students in public oration, read about his and his people's antics at Mt. Holyoke college, and noticed the crude political bumper stickers they choose to display on the door of the Minuteman office in the Student Union. From simple observation it's clear to me what each side's motivations are. W. Greg's suggestion that "if Rabinowitz's and Silkoff's blatant disregard for anything they dislike is any indication of the type of student leaders they hope to be, the students have a lot to worry about" ("Silkoff and Rabinowitz disregard Constitution, Nov. 16) seems like alarmist pandering to me; from what I've seen, these student leaders incite less worry that Mr. Rothman himself. Silkoff and Rabinowitz are already student leaders, and by their natures, will continue to be — with or without the title of SGA co-presidents.

POW-MIA flag offensive

On Thursday, Nov. 10, I noticed a POW-MIA flag flying under the US flag over the Haigis Mall. The POW-MIA flag symbolizes the lie that there are still US prisoners in Vietnam. It stirs up anti-communist fervor in order to provide the CIA with an excuse to continue terrorist action against the people of southeast Asia.

I demand that the offending flag be removed and in its place the administration give progressive groups equal flagpole time, such as the Afro-American flag, the Sandinista flag, and the Viet-Cong flag.

he could not comment on the specifics of the allegations because a grand jury indictment is possible in the near future.

"We don't really know what went on anyways," Davis said.

Davis and Mulcahy said when they were in the fraternity they were hazed, but that was before there were any laws against hazing.

"It was mostly stupid things, like carrying a roll of toilet paper to every class or wearing a toilet seat around the neck around the house," Davis said.

"Our biggest thing was to make our fraternity raise the most money for the campus chest," he said.

Davis said the corporation has not yet decided what actions to take against the fraternity members.

The Amherst police and the University are conducting investigations into the allegations. Both have declined to comment on the specifics of their investigations. The fraternity members have also declined to comment.

$25 million will come from the state and the rest from fundraising and the imposition of a one-time student fee, according to Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor for administration and finance.

Students will be charged $100 in 1992 — $50 both in the fall and spring semesters — the year the arena is slated to open.

Greiner predicted additional fees would be imposed on students to keep the arena on its feet.

"The building will not generate money, they will still have to charge extra money to students to maintain the arena," Greiner said.

Gerry Grady, coordinator of Community and Alumni Relations for the University, spoke against the article.

He said years of planning went into the arena, giving student groups and the town plenty of opportunities to voice their opposition.

Grady also said the arena would be used for more than just hockey and basketball. Several additional rooms were part of the complex that would also hold graduation ceremonies.

Reagans honor Thatcher during final state dinner

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the final state dinner of their eight-year White House reign, President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, were hosts of a nostalgic night of song and dance to honor their conservative friend, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Breaking protocol, the Thatchers dallied Wednesday after the evening's entertainment and took a turn with the Reagans about the marbled Grand Foyer to the tune of "Shall We Dance?"

Usually, the honored guests depart posthaste, but the Thatchers and the Reagans even switched partners as they smiled for the cameras.

"I wanted this to be special — it's very sentimental," said Mrs. Reagan, who said she got 'a little teary' during the effusive round of toasts that the president and prime minister offered each other earlier in the evening.

The president, asked about his 'last dance' with his first lady, quipped, "You don't mean that Nancy and I are breaking up, do you?"

With their 55th state dinner, the Reagans closed the book on one of their favorite White House events. Their elaborate celebrations recalled a tradition of glitz and glamour dating to the first White House social event, when John Adams greeted New Year's Day revelers in 1801.

Although many presidents made the White House a stage for some of the nation's most elaborate and exclusive entertainment, the Reagans brought a Hollywood party style to an executive mansion shorn of hard liquor and dancing during the Carter years.

The black-tie tribute to Mrs. Thatcher and her husband Denis was an apt finale to a glittering series in which Reagan, now 77, never seemed to tire.

As he has on every such evening, the president regaled his guests with anecdotes, both at the dinner table and among the demitasse sipping guests in the Blue Room.

White supremacist charged with killing South African blacks

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — A self-proclaimed white supremacist smiled in court today as he was charged with murdering six blacks during a casual walk through Pretoria, and was ordered to a psychiatric hospital.

"I do not have any interest in appearing before this court under the current state of government," Barend Strydom, 23, told Magistrate P. Johnson when he appeared in khaki clothes and leg irons.

Strydom, a former policeman, smiled throughout the hearing as he did on Tuesday when, according to prosecutors, he sauntered through downtown on Tuesday taking shots at black people.

He was charged with killing six blacks and attempting to murder 17 others.

Speaking in the Afrikaans vernacular, Strydom told the court, "If communists such as (Anglican Archbishop) Desmond Tutu and (former South African ambassador to the United Kingdom) Dennis Worrall are arrested, then I will cooperate."

He was sent to Weskoppies Hospital for 30 days of observation and ordered to reappear in court Dec. 19.

Court-appointed psychiatrist Dr. Willem Pietersen testified that Strydom frequently turned to wave at his family in the courtroom, which was packed and guarded by policemen with shotguns. In an unusual move, photographers were allowed inside.

Strydom's mother raised her fist and shouted, 'Strength,' in Afrikaans.

No members of the Afrikaaner Resistance Movement, the white supremacist organization Strydom claims to be a member of, apparently were in the courtroom, except for Strydom's father.

case in in shape."

Prosecutors say they have evidence that consultants – including some former high-level Reagan administration officials and former high-ranking military men who work for the nation's largest defense contractors – bribed Pentagon officials for information vital to winning contracts worth billions of dollars.

Two corporations and three individuals were identified this week by government and defense sources as among the potential targets of the first charges.

These sources said consultants William Parkin and Fred Lakner had been offered plea bargains by prosecutors, but the pair had declined to plead guilty to the charges offered. Those charges included conspiracy and bribery, the sources said.

The sources also said prosecutors were weighing charges against Teledyne, Inc., and Hazeltine Corp., both of which were searched in FBI raids last June.

The sources also suggested that charges were being contemplated against Stuart Berlin, a procurement specialist with the Naval Air Systems Command. Berlin and four other Pentagon employees have been transferred away form contract work.

Other sources, however, had said earlier that no government employee would be among the first group charged.

Parkin has said he paid Lakner $15,000 to 18,000 in late 1986 for information on a pending Navy contract for equipment to distinguish hostile and friendly aircraft. Parkin said he then turned the information over to Hazeltine on Long Island, N.Y.

Parkin said he concluded the information came form Berlin but that it was no secret.

Parkin also has said he split fees with Lakner form Teledyne Electronics of Newbury Park, Calif., which was seeking an Air Force contract. But Parkin said they did not have to do any work in that case.

ARTS/LIVING

Canadian dance troupe at FAC

The Toronto-based Desrosiers Dance Theater will perform at the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center on Saturday, Nov.19 at 8 p.m.

Incorporating dance, mime, tai chi, theater and acrobatics with film, video, magic and special effects, Derosiers Dance Theater continues to astonish audiences of all ages with its unique and highly imaginative blend of dance-theater.

Founded in 1980 by artistic director Robert Derosiers, the company has performed at the Jacob's Pillow Festival, the American Dance Festival, the Hong Kong Arts Festival, the Singapore Arts Festival and the Caracas International Festival. Though they have toured throughout Canada, Australia and Venezuela, this is the company's first tour of the United States. They performed a theater/magic dance show entitled "Incognito" at the Olympic Arts Festival last season.

Two top terrors

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

There are two above-average horror films playing in the area: Child's Play and They Live. Both are a cut above the usual seasonal slasher fare. Director John (Halloween, Prince of Darkness) Carpenter's They Live is notable for its worthy stabs at intelligent social commentary. Tom (Fright Night) Holland's Child's Play can make no such claim - it's just shock cinema - but it does the job. It shocks. And at times it is strangely, darkly fascinating.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Child's Play is basically an extended, unauthorized remake of the excellent Twilight Zone episode, "Living Doll." The film has none of Rod Serling's trademark wit, but it does boast a frighteningly candid and energetic performance by Chucky the Devil Doll. Catherine Hicks, whom you may remember as the compassionate marine biologist from Star Trek IV, plays the unsuspecting mother of a young boy who lives for TV in general, and the Good Guys cartoon show in particular. Naturally, he wants a "Good Guy" of his own, and gets it. The irony in the doll's name is, of course, intentional. Guess the rest. Child's Play's only real problem is in its excessive use of gore, but you can't make a horror film these days and not expect to set aside at least a quarter of the budget for red food dye.

They Live is a great concept executed only fairly well. "Rowdy" Roddy Piper, in his dramatic debut, is Carpenter's absentee Kurt Russell - the loner, the outsider, the tough-guy with poor articulation and long hair. It is through his eyes that we share in the revelation that our beloved America is, and has long since been, run entirely by supremely unattractive space-aliens. The first 30 minutes is funny and fascinating. The last 60 or so is riddled with problems, the most outstanding of which is a really strange account of male-bonding in which real-life wrestler Piper slugs it out with his buddy in a friendly little battle of brawn, blood and spit.

Answer to trivia question from two weeks ago: Willow's General Kael was named after film critic Pauline Kael.

Answer to last week's question: Daniel Stern played Cyril in Breaking Away.

This week's: What was the original title of Alfred Hitchcock's North by Northwest?

Film fixes on the thin line of truth

By ANDRE BUSI
Collegian Correspondent

The Thin Blue Line is the kind of movie that will wrap you up in its eerie plot as it stretches your belief, but the movie is true, true, true. The story of the hitchhiker Randall Adams and the amazing string of events that led him to a life sentence in jail seems to come right out of one of those film noir where everything that could go wrong, does so. The director Errol Morris has a talent for sear-

Local artist to hold studio sale

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

There are a few new shows in store for this short week and for the beginning of December. Starting out with something from off-campus, for a change, artist Michael Cohen is holding his 15th annual studio sale of his works on Saturday, Dec. 10 from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. at 107 Amherst Road in Pelham. Along with pottery, Cohen will also be selling unusual clocks inspired by the Holyoke Range. If you're looking for an alternative to the usual holiday gifts, you may want to check this out.

In other news, Student Union Art Gallery is presenting Softwares, a collection of books, prints and other artwork by performance artist Marcos Kurtycz. It will run from Nov. 21-Dec.2, with a reception to be held on Nov. 21 from 5-7 p.m. At the reception Kurtycz is expected to perform a new piece, titled "Organikwars." The exhibit features a display titled "Big Swarm of Hockers," a colorful celebration of the froglike creatures found on Aztec and Toltec ceramic stamps. The Gallery's hours are Monday-Friday, 11 a.m.-4 p.m.

Next up, at Wheeler Gallery, Karen J. Axtell is showing a collection of her work until Nov.23. The major aspect of her work is the texture of the surface. Canvas, paper, linen and gauze are layered, torn, pasted and fastened in ways which make these pieces unique. Wheeler Gallery's hours are Monday-Thursday, 4-8 p.m., Sunday, 2-5 p.m.

Finally, if you're going by the Tower Library sometime during the day, why not check out the ongoing sculpture exhibit at the library's Sculpture Courtyard. Featuring works by Wendy Jackson, Bryan T. Lashway and John Pohanka, this show will be on campus until March 31, 1989. However, the exhibition will be closing for the winter, so if you want to see it before the snow flies, go see it soon. Have a nice holiday.

ching out the unlikely and bizarre, like in this "stranger than fiction" film.

This is a documentary, composed of interviews, document blow ups, clips from vintage films and re-enactments of the murder of one unlucky cop, all underscored with music by Philip Glass. The true account is how Adams, a long-haired drifter was picked up outside of Dallas in 1976 by a 16-year old named David Harris who happened to be in the middle of his own private crime spree. The kid showed off his gun to the bewildered Adams; they shared some beer and some pot at a drive-in and then Adams got dropped off at a motel just in time to catch the end of the Carol Burnett Show. The kid, however, drove on and murdered a policeman who had pulled him over on a whim. Days later when the police nabbed him, the friendly, clean-cut Harris pointed his finger at the hippie drifter Adams. Who do you suppose the Dallas police department and Justice courts believed as they thirsted for the blood of a cop killer?

"At the center of the story is the element of the miscarriage of justice," said Morris, "but it's also a story about the self-deception, error and greed. It's about the enormous gulf between belief and reality, when people do evil things thinking they're doing good. An innocent man is almost executed, a killer is set loose so he can kill again, and a prosecutor goes on to fame and fortune."

Morris had no doubts about the innocence of Adams, who's been in jail for 12 years now, or of Harris' guilt, who is now also in jail on another murder rap, despite the best efforts of Texas' justice system to keep him at large, ". . . and here they prosecution is the most culpable. The broke rules in order to get a conviction. We talk about the truth as something obvious, something that hits us over the head," Morris explained, "but it's often quite elusive." The Thin Blue Line does it's best to expose the truth, and it will entertain and revolt you as porky Texas cops chuckle and nod their way through the movie, as a wasted alcoholic, paid off to fake an eyewitness, reveals her childhood fantasies of marrying detective and busting gangsters; as a deranged psychiatrist known as "Doctor Death" goes over his senseless notes and confidently assures the jury that a man with no prior record of violence such as Randall Adams is as dangerous as Charles Manson or Adolph Hitler. And through it all a balding Adams sits in his cell and insists, against an entire country who doesn't believe him, that he didn't do it.

The Thin Blue Line is playing at the Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton through Tuesday, Nov. 22.

"The key to West Virginia is shutting down those two players," something UMass is confident it can do, according to Ford.

The winner of the UMass/West Virginia match will meet Penn State, the 19th ranked team in the nation, in Saturday's last match.

The Lady Lions, undefeated in the A-10 in five years of conference play and this year's overwhelming favorite, has won four consecutive A-10 titles.

Although UMass has never even taken PSU to five games, Ford is optimistic.

"If we play Penn State, we have to pass well, that is our only hope," she said. "We have to serve tough and play court defense . . . they're just a great team."

"The problem we had with Penn State, the first time [Oct. 8] was our height. They're outside hitters hit right over the top of our blocks."

If the Minutewomen are fortunate enough to survive that examination, they would play in the finals on Sunday. The second team in the championship game would come out of the lower bracket which consists of the University of Rhode Island, George Washington University, and Rutgers University.

"I think it will be an outstanding tourney — anything can happen," Ford said.

This weekend's action will be the final collegiate competition for five UMass seniors: Juliet Primer, Julie Smith, Christine McEnroe, Ann Marie Larese, and Barbara Meehan.

"I just hope the seniors are going to turn it on," Ford said.

Although she is a senior, Ann Marie Larese will get a chance to play in her first Atlantic 10 Championships. Because of an injury and missed action, this weekend's performance will be Larese's first tourney play.

"Relatively speaking, there is still some inexperience," on the team, Ford said.

Atlantic 10 Notes: UMass improved its ranking from 5th last year to 4th this year.

■ an unusually early finish for UMass

"We were really weak with finishing this year," Rudy said. In part, that did them in against Wisconsin. The chances were there, but the goals just didn't come at the right times. In games in which they gave up more than one goal, they were 1-3.

There were other factors. The Minutewomen faced a typically tough schedule, one which had them on the road for four games in seven days at one point. The team had to live with the loss of six seniors from last year's team, and many players playing in unfamiliar positions. And, with a new coach, things could have easily been worse.

But they weren't. The Minutewomen hung together, never conceding that the Final Four wasn't still well within their grasp. They hoped to be there, and they almost made it there, despite all the sidetracks.

Nonetheless, a 14-3-1 record and a ranking among the top five in country should be nothing to scoff at. This year, or any year.

And a solid UNH defense is on Reid's mind as well.

"Last year [in a 17-10 UNH win], their secondary won them the game and they're back," Reid said. "Their defensive back stripped the ball from our guy at their 1-yard line and then they intercepted a pass at their 4 with :45 left."

Last year, the Minutemen gave up those kinds of plays. This year, it is making them. And as the results have shown, that can make a world of difference.

Extra points: In a team meeting Sunday night, the Minutemen elected Bill Buttler, Nick Salmon and John McKeown as this year's team captains.

For the first time, Reid chose this year to go with game captains, who were selected based on recent performances in games and practice. Reid was happy with the results.

"As long as I'm head coach, we never do it any other way," Reid said. "It gives the opportunity to a lot of people to experience being a leader.

"Just about all of the seniors received votes but these three stood far above the rest in terms of votes. And they're very lucky guys because they have their names associated with the 1988 UMass football team."

In addition to being the captains for tomorrow's game, Buttler, Salmon and McKeown will go in the record books as the captains of this year's team.

Buttler is a guard from Middletown, NJ, Salmon is an offensive tackle from Fall River MA, and McKeown is a linebacker from Biddeford, ME.

Minutemen to take on New Hampshire

Playoffs at stake

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

It may be a cliche, but the phrase "what a difference a year makes" is the best possible description of the University of Massachusetts football team.

Last year, the Minutemen went 3-8 to tie the school record for most losses. With a win over the University of New Hampshire tomorrow, UMass would be 8-3 and tie the school record for most regular season wins.

But when the Minutemen take the field at 1 p.m. against UNH, they will be playing for a lot more than that. A win would give UMass at least a tie for the Yankee Conference championship.

And if Delaware loses to Boston University, the Minutemen would win the conference title outright and gain an automatic bid in the NCAA Division 1-AA playoffs.

Even if Delaware wins, UMass, which is ranked 11th in the nation, would have a good shot at the playoffs, provided it beats New Hampshire.

The Minutemen, 7-3, are ready. As a matter of fact, UMass head coach Jim Reid is hoping they're not "overready."

"We learned a big lesson against Connecticut [in a 35-14 loss]," Reid said. "We were so fired up, we weren't ourselves. We displayed tenseness, and we turned the ball over and gave up the big plays."

The loss to UConn was the first conference defeat for the Minutemen and it was followed by a loss to Delaware. Since then, UMass has won three games in a row and climbed back into a tie with Delaware for first in the conference at 5-2.

"You can't work any harder than this team has worked," Reid said. "You can't work harder in practice, with the weights, or running. You can't watch more film and you can't meet anymore, because there would be no time to go to class."

Reid and the team hope all the commitment will pay off tomorrow, but despite the game's importance, they will approach it as any other.

"We'll prepare for this game like we have for the previous 10, minus the things we learned against Connecticut," Reid said. "The bottom line is that we're gonna have fun, because we've earned it."

But the Wildcats, 6-4 overall and 4-3 in the conference, are capable of making life miserable for the Minutemen.

UMass tailback Kevin Smellie will be in action against the University of New Hampshire tomorrow but split end Chip Mitchell (23) is listed as doubtful.

Senior quarterback Bob Jean has completed 218 of 397 yards for 2,583 yards, 14 interceptions and 5 touchdowns.

"When he's hot, he's perhaps the best quarterback in the nation," Reid said. "And that's not an overexaggeration."

Jean's UMass counterpart, Dave Palazzi, hasn't been bad either. The senior quarterback is 131-of-240 passes for 1764 yards, 16 interceptions and 10 touchdowns. Palazzi could break his own record for single season passing (1,868) tomorrow.

The leading receiver has been split end Chip Mitchell, who has contributed 538 yards and 5 touchdowns. But Mitchell injured an ankle and a groin muscle two weeks ago at Richmond and is doubtful for tomorrow.

But the story for UMass lately has been the defense, not the offense. The Minuteman defense has allowed an average of under 10 points a game in its last four games. Last week against Villanova, UMass stopped the visitors twice on fourth-and-1 plays, and another time on a fourth-and-2.

"I've never been in a situation where its fourth and inches and I hope the other team goes for it rather than kick a field goal, because we know we can stop them," Reid said.

After 114 games, 33 matches in five different states, the University of Massachusetts volleyball team's season has come to it's final weekend.

Desination: Penn State University for the 1988 Atlantic 10 Championships.

The Minutewomen have carved themselves a 19-10 record and a 4th place ranking in the A-10s, but an ominous black cloud has hung over UMass for the past three weeks. UMass has lost seven of its last 10 games, only scrounging out three wins after its last A-10 match on Oct. 29.

"I'm not real happy with how much we have been struggling in the last three weeks," UMass head coach Carol Ford said, attributing the weakness to a lack of depth.

"For this weekend, I know that if they put their minds to it, they can do very well," Ford said.

The Minutewomen will have their work cut out for them.

UMass' first opponent will be fifth ranked West Virginia University. The Lady Mountaineers lost to UMass in a grueling five game match earlier in the year but they have played so erratic all season, Ford said she doesn't know which West Virginia team will show.

"West Virginia is still a very strong team and I'm expecting a tough match from them," Ford said.

"They will be coming at us full force. They didn't like us beating them," four weeks ago, she said. "It will be a real grudge match."

Mark Massey, coach of Northeatern University, which UMasslost to Tuesday, told Ford that WVU has had some problems lately.

The Lady Mountaineers have sat their two star players, Lisa Scott and Michelle Miller, recently, but Ford said she thinks that will make Scott and Miller that much more dangerous.

For UMass, not finishing contributed to an early finish

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When a team is of championship caliber, it often will settle for nothing less than the ultimate goal.

Sunday, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team walked off Boyden Field, drenched and dejected, having just been beaten in an NCAA quarterfinal game by the University of Wisconsin-Madison, 2-1. The loss marked the end of a successful 14-3-1 campaign. But, with the team's past history of Final Four fidelity (five straight seasons), such a premature departure from the rigors of postseason play was a disappointment.

Also, six seniors saw their careers end in the rain that afternoon. For Michelle Powers, Beth Roundtree, Carla DeSantis, Cathy Cassady, Sue Montagne and Sue Cooper, this was the last time in the spotlight.

First-year coach Jim Rudy laments the fact that he had just one year to work with this talented group.

"I only wish that I could have gotten them back to the Final Four one last time," Rudy said.

Like the previous years, that was the goal of this team. But this season was unlike any other before it.

The team was coming off of last season's near-miss, a 1-0 loss in the national championship game against North Carolina. Then, in mid-winter, came the news that coach Kalekeni Banda was stepping down to take a position across town at Amherst College. Suddenly, the future of a national power was in doubt.

In late summer, Rudy was summoned to come north from the University of Central Florida. Rudy proved his worth right away, as the Minutewomen won their first eight games, backed in part by a strong defense, which allowed just two goals through that point.

But something was noticably missing. A team that had scored 71 goals in 1987 dropped down to just 31 in '88. Powers (7 goals, 6 assists) and sophomore April Kater (8, 4) led the team with 20 points each, while freshman Michele Woodside added 17 points (6, 5) and Roundtree 14 (3, 8).

It wasn't that UMass was unable to create the scoring chances, it just couldn't convert. Just as a hoop coach cringes when a player blows a lay-up, it is frustrating to see a good play go for naught because of a missed shot.

Football gets berth in playoffs

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — For the first time in a decade, the University of Massachusetts football team is in the playoffs.

Saturday's 64-42 win over the University of New Hampshire helped the Minutemen clinch their first Division 1-AA post-season appearance since 1978.

UMass will play Eastern Kentucky State University at 7 p.m. Saturday in Richmond, Kentucky.

Saturday's win also gave UMass a share of the Yankee Conference title for the second time in three years.

The Minutemen and Delaware both finished with conference records of 6-2, but since the Blue Hens beat UMass, they get the automatic conference bid.

But for the Minutemen, who were ranked 11th in the nation last week, an 8-3 overall record was enough to clinch an at-large berth.

"It wasn't a big surprise that we got in, since we were 11th last week," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "It was just a question of where we'd play."

Eastern Kentucky, under head coach Roy Kidd, is 9-2 overall and won the Ohio Valley Conference with a 6-0 record.

"All I know about Eastern Kentucky is that they have a legend for a head coach and they're consistently in the top 10," Reid said. "We're just happy to be in the playoffs."

The Minutemen had a good chance at the playoffs two seasons ago before losing the final regular season game to the University of Connecticut.

"Coach Reid told us not to think about the playoffs," senior quarterback Dave Palazzi said. "But in '86 we blew it and I don't think we were gonna let it slip away this time."

For the first time in 10 years, they didn't.

Minutemen roll over UNH, 64-42

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — Two weeks ago, the bulletin board in Jim Reid's office was covered with papers: notes, letters and phone numbers.

But he's cleaned it and now it is almost bare. Only the important things are left, says Reid. Over his left shoulder there is a sign, small yet prominent, that reads: No guts, no glory.

That phrase, which Reid says sums up the attitude of his University of Massachusetts football team, is exactly the way the Minutemen played Saturday.

And that reckless style allowed UMass to beat the University of New Hampshire in a 64-42 shootout at Cowell Stadium, to clinch a playoff appearance in the Division 1-AA tournament.

UMass will play Eastern Kentucky State University at 7 p.m. Saturday in Richmond, Kentucky.

Saturday's win also gave the Minutemen, 8-3, a share of the Yankee Conference championship with Delaware. Both teams are 6-2.

"It was not a game for the faint of heart," Reid said. "It was a no-holds-barred game."

And although there were a number of heroes Saturday, none stood out quite as much as Dave Palazzi. The senior quarterback completed 13 of 21 passes for 279 yards, four touchdowns and no interceptions. He also rushed for 128 yards and a touchdown.

The performance earned him the Gold Helmet Award, the Yankee Conference Player of the Week Award, and the Bill Knight Award as the game's most valuable player.

"David was really on the money," Reid said. "His play was the difference in our season. There's not a question about it."

The Minutemen trailed 28-17 at halftime, but outscored UNH 33-14 in the third quarter to take control.

Students protest rates charged for investigation

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

A group of students investigating grants for defense-related research at the University of Massachusetts have complained that they are being charged unfairly by the Office of Grants and Contract Administration for their investigations.

The students have been charged 10 cents per page they wish to copy, and $3 per hour for "office time," to have a member of the office present with them to oversee them while they look at the files. They said the $3 per hour is also charged for time office workers spend copying documents.

The students say they have been charged nearly $100 by the office, which they have paid out of their own pocket. They said this has made it difficult for them to do the research they want.

"By charging us the money they're making the documents inaccesible to us as students," said Rachel Maiore, a junior Social Thought and Political Economy major and one of the students doing research into University grants.

Meanwhile, members of the grant and contract office and Chancellor Joseph Duffey have said the charges have been reduced for the students below the $6-per-hour-fee the state says is acceptable.

Last April, Maiore, Joe Rubin, a senior STPEC major, and about six other students began looking into what research the University was doing. They said they intend to issue a report on their findings.

Initially, they were not charged to look at the documents they wanted to see, but have since been charged fees they feel are exorbitant. They asked Lee Beatty, director of the office, to wave the fees because, they say, the research is in the public interest.

State law says: "Every custodian, unless otherwise required by law, is encouraged to wave fees where disclosure would benefit the public interest."

Beatty said he felt their research would not benefit the public interest, and refused to waive the fee. As a reason for denying a waiver of the fee, Beatty said he thought the students had "pre-judged" the University. He said the students had started out with the assumption that public funds were being misused, and had looked for information to back up that theory.

Budget cuts may cause layoffs, fewer classes

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

To comply with the state's recent call for education budget cuts, the University of Massachusetts will have to slash the number and sizes of classes for the spring semester and lay off employees, Chancellor Joseph Duffey said yesterday.

"These possibilities look unavoidable," Duffey said.

The Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education informed the University Thursday afternoon that the school will have to slice its current budget by about $5 million to $8 million.

This year's $170 million budget is already $6.2 million less than last year's, Duffey said.

This is the third time in two years that a UMass budget, appropriated by the legislature, has been cut.

The only action the administration has taken so far is a hiring freeze on all state-paid positions until January.

The cuts will be drastic since it is already five months into the fiscal year, he said. If the cuts were going to be made in the beginning of the year, they could be appropriated over a longer period of time and the impact would not be as great, Duffey said.

"We will now sit down and look at all of our different options," Duffey said. "We will have to find money that hasn't been spent yet and where we can cut."

Program cuts and a reduction in funds for equipment are also a "very real possibility," Duffey said. "These are the present options as to what the impact [on the school] will be."

Duffey said during the next week he and Provost Richard O'Brien will work on a report assessing exactly how the cuts would affect UMass.

The report will then go to the Board of Regents, who, in turn, will pass it on to the state's Office of Administration and Finance, Duffey said.

The school now needs much public support, Duffey said.

"The people of this state will have to decide whether they want to deal with the state's fiscal problems by making further cuts in public higher education," he said.

"My hope is that our students go home and talk with their families about this around the Thanksgiving table," and parents make their feelings known to the legislature, Duffey said.

"I don't know whether this is going to change the situation, but this might make a difference," he said.

"How the public, particularly parents, will react to the situation will affect how the cuts are going to be made this year and how the budget will be affected next year," Duffey said.

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan to Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Rally held to protest loss of support program

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The elimination of a support program for older students who return to school to complete their education gave rise to protests from community activists Friday outside the Whitmore Administration building.

Almost 20 women assembled on the building's east side to protest the end of the Women's Administrative and General Education Support program at the Everywoman's Center.

The program, which provides admissions and counseling assistance to re-entry students, was slated to end next semester to meet University budget cuts, but the appointment of a counseling coordinator forced the program into early removal.

Holding signs reading, "Keep WAGES Here," the protesters said their goal was to alert Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson of their situation.

"We are very outraged by this [the program's elimination]," said protester and WAGES student Nancy Bishop.

Marie DeCristo, a former WAGES student who graduated last May, said, "Women in this age and income group need access to UMass."

"I know the University had to cut back," she said. "But the amount of money that had gone into [WAGES] is insignificant compared to what goes into football."

DeCristo said WAGES helps re-entry students avoid competition from traditional students for University admission.

"We're a minority. We can't compete with the admission of an 18-year-old," she said. But, "It doesn't mean we don't deserve to be college students."

There is not enough advocacy for re-entry students on this campus, DeCristo said. "There needs to be an agency specifically for that," she said. "WAGES was that agency."

Nancy Rios, 32, doctoral candidate for 1990 and WAGES student, said she is a prime example of the program's success.

"I came [to UMass] four years ago through the WAGES program as a single mom who couldn't speak the language at all," Rios said. "They gave me the opportunity to fulfill my need to be a student."

"I might be one person, but there are thousands of women like me looking for this support," she said.

Women stand Friday in protest of the ending of the WAGES program, which provided financial assistance to non-traditional students.

"As women, we have never had the opportunity within this society to play a role, and now we're asking to be educated," Rios said. "The University is not giving equal access to education."

Protester Cindy Montoya said she withdrew from the University of Connecticut this semester because there is no program there to help non-traditional students access resources.

"There is a gross insensitivity to our issues there," she said. "UConn's not moving forward and [UMass] wants to move back there."

"They figure we'll be too busy to wage a war," Montoya said. "A lot of people who are here today aren't in school right now."

Melodye Serino, a Smith College student who re-entered college aided by the Ada Comstock scholarship program, said the WAGES elimination is "another way to keep women away from the things they need to have to make their steps into society."

"A community has a responsibility to educate everyone, not a certain age group," Serino said.

Corky Robinson, a Smith College student, warned younger students to prepare today because many will experience similar situations in the future.

"There is a population of students here at UMass who are going to be leaving and coming back in a few years," she said. "They're going to need a program like this."

The protest was the result of the combined efforts of the Alliance for Economic Justice and the Association of Low Income Students.

Lakota Indians in need of food, clothing for winter

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Correspondent

A representative of the Lakota Elders of the Black Hills in South Dakota is urging people to donate blankets, clothing, and money to prevent this group of Native Americans from starving or freezing to death this winter.

Richard Kastl, an Osage Indian who has spent the last 25 years trying to assist the Lakota tribe, spoke on the subject Friday in Herter Hall.

The Lakota Elders of the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservations, Kastl said, have been actively resisting the sale and exploitation of what they consider their sacred land. This fight cannot continue unless their struggle for actual survival is addressed, he said.

"The situation in the Black Hills," Kastl said, "is coming to a boiling point. We have a natural land base with its native people on it, and we're about to see it destroyed and these people removed. We intend to resist consciously and peacefully as long as we can. Right now it is important that we give them the strength to survive this winter."

The causes of the Indians' poverty, he said, are complex and involve the corruption of funds at every level, from the tribal council to the US Department of the Interior. "The tribal council," he charged, "is a puppet government. It does what the federal government tells it to do."

Because the elderly people stand in the way of accepting money for land, Kastl said, they are not being taken care of properly by either government.

Last winter, Kastl said, some of the Elder people froze to death. This year, he added, some of the remaining Elders still do not have any warm blankets.

Indians on the reservations are not allowed to have wood burning stoves in their government homes, yet they often cannot afford propane with their social security checks, he said.

Nellie Red Owl, one of the Elders fighting against the sale of reservation lands, addressed the audience through a video tape: "A long time ago, we lived a better life, and at that time we were free. And now we are not free. [The government] pushes us around too much. They give us a hard time.'

"If we lose these people," Kastl said, "and we lose these Black Hills to more exploitive measures, then we will be giving up the very last of something that has existed."

Red Owl, Kastl said, is barely surviving. Government regulations force her to travel 23 miles every Tuesday and report to Pine Ridge's central office in order to receive her social security check at the end of the month, he said.

Because she has no car and no public transportation is available, Red Owl, 81, must walk or hitchhike the 23 mile distance to pick up her $31 monthly check.

Red Owl said, "It's getting colder and pretty soon it's going to snow. We're getting older and we can't all walk.

Kastl said he has personally delivered all donations he has collected in the past to those most in need in the Black Hills. He expects to return to South Dakota in mid-December to bring back the latest collections.

Donations of warm blankets and clothing will be collected at the STPEC office in room E-27 of Machmer Hall until Dec. 7.

Checks for food and heat should be made out to the Elder Fund and sent to RD 2, Baker Road, Amherst, 01002.

■ students probe research grants

Beatty cited a recent mock "wedding" uniting the University to the defense industry as an example of this. He also cited a letter they sent to Samuel Conti, vice chancellor for research and graduate studies, and a flier distributed by the students, both of which made assumptions that the University was doing something wrong.

"With the data available to me, such as the letter to Conti, the wedding, and their attempt to prejudice the students of the University, I feel that their research is not in the public interest," Beatty said.

He said this decision was discussed with several members of the University administration, who agreed with him.

Rubin and Maiore, however, say they made no assumptions. They said their research is in the public interest simply because public funds are involved at a state university.

Rubin said, "It's in the public interest because the University receives about $13 million dollars a year in Department of Defense grants, and it's in the public interest to find out what that research is.

"It's easy to focus on the DOD because it's obvious what they're into," Rubin said, but he added that the group was looking at grants from other sources, such as private corporations, to see what research the University is doing.

Maiore stated the reason for their research. "It's because we wanted to see how an educational institution is being utilized. The focus of the University is becoming more research-oriented." She said the University could not remain autonomous with this kind of influence.

She said they are not opposed to anything yet because they are still conducting research.

After Beatty's denial, they asked professors to write to Duffey to waive the fee, and professors from the STEPC, economics, linguistics, legal studies, and other departments wrote or called Duffey to ask for the waiver. In total, they said, about 20 professors contacted Duffey.

Duffey then agreed to a partial waiver. He said these documents are public information, but anyone wishing to see them would be charged $6 per hour, and 20 cents per page to copy.

"That's what the state law suggests as a price," Duffey said. "I wouldn't say their research is not in the public interest," he said, "but that's beside the point."

He said the office had given the students free access initially, but when they requested more files, the fee was imposed. He said the office could not be at the "beck and call" of the students.

Beatty said the rationale behind the fee was to charge the students for professional staff time to supervise them while they went through the documents. He said someone was needed to supervise the students for "security reasons," to protect the files.

"It's in the realm of possibility that someone could try to tear a page out," Beatty said. "It would be the same for someone outside the University or faculty requests for public documents."

Rubin said of the fees, "We shouldn't be asked to pay for it because they don't trust us." He used the example of a library, where there is usually no supervision when documents are viewed.

Leanne Every, database manager for the grant and contract office, was asked to oversee the students while they went through the files.

She said her role was "mostly to make sure they didn't in any way deface the files. In no case did I look over their shoulder and say 'pass over that page, please.'"

Rubin had praise for office staff. He said, "We looked at all the papers, and all of the people in the office were very nice".

In turn, Every said the students she dealt with were polite, and had treated her with respect, but they did exhibit some "interesting" behavior.

"While I was sitting there they would point things out to each other and whisper things. It seemed as though they were trying to keep their intent secretive. I thought that was interesting."

To the best of her knowledge, Every said, there is nothing in the files the students should not be allowed to see.

She said she sympathizes with the students for having to pay the fee out of their pocket, but said the fee was fair.

"My feeling is that we shouldn't have to pay for their research," she said. She added the $3 per hour charged to the students does not cover what she is paid.

She agreed with Beatty that the students had "prejudged" the University, and said, "Why should we pay the cost if they're going to try to bring the University down."

Rubin said they have obtained about 400 pages of files so far. He said his group was still sifting through the files to see what research the University is doing.

Dean to be honored today

A special illuminated globe is scheduled to be dedicated in honor of Albert W. Purvis, the first dean of the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts, at 10:30 a.m. today at the Mark's Meadow Elementary School Library.

Purvis was dean from 1961-67, and helped plan the School of Education's multi-million dollar building complex and Mark's Meadow Laboratory School. Purvis designed the first curriculum for students to work as teachers called the Block Program.

Master of ceremonies for the dedication is Mark's Meadow Principal Michael Greenbaum, and scheduled to deliver short speeches are John Lederle, former president of UMass, Marilyn Haring-Hidore, newly appointed dean of the School of Education, Donald Frizzle, superintendent of the Amherst-Pelham Schools, and Raymond Wyman, professor emeritus in the School of Education.

Convocation for new dean today

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

A convocation marking the appointment of Marilyn Haring-Hidore as the new School of Education Dean at the University of Massachusetts is scheduled to be held at 4 p.m. today in Bowker Auditorium.

Haring-Hidore will be one of the few women to serve as a dean at the University, and will replace acting Dean George Urch who has filled the position since the spring of 1987.

Urch had been appointed when former Dean Mario Fantini resigned to return to teaching.

Dr. David Berliner, a psychology professor at Arizona State University, will deliver the keynote address and will be presented with an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree during the ceremony.

Haring-Hidore served as associate dean of education and associate professor of counseling and specialized educational development at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, before leaving in August. She was also a senior research associate at their Center for Research and Evaluation. Haring-Hidore earned her doctorate in educational psychology, her master's in education, specializing in counseling and student personnel, and her bachelor of arts in education, all from Arizona State University.

Berliner was formerly an associate laboratory director for research at Far West Laboratory for Educational Research and Development and a lecturer in educational psychology at Stanford University.

He is a past president of the American Educational Research Association.

Point/Counterpoint: Farrakhan

Message of hatred intolerable

The more I become involved with this whole Farrakhan issue, the more uncomfortable I feel.

As a Jewish student opposed to Minister Louis Farrakhan being sponsored with student funds, I am constantly being put on the defensive.

The possibility of hosting such a vehemently anti-Semitic speaker on this campus, though, has scared me into action.

Alisa Berkowitz

His message to the black community is so positive that I don't see why he has to taint it with bigotry and hatred.

Ultimately, though, he symbolizes his most salient comments, and half the people I've talked to agree that by making him a "Distinguished Visitor," the University of Massachusetts would be endorsing those ideas, too.

The other half of the people, though (including Jews, non-Jews, blacks, Asians and whites), accuse me of blocking free speech and the First Amendment.

The first time I heard this I felt guilty for opposing Farrakhan. Then I remembered Civility Week, one short month ago.

To promote harmony, students held hands across campus and signed the Covenant Against Racism. Now that so many groups are endorsing the Farrakhan speech, I wonder at the hypocrisy.

What would happen if a well-respected speaker, known for saying positive things about one minority, also happened to proclaim, constantly and unashamedly, that blacks are dirty, lazy and uneducated? No one would invoke the First Amendment?

No students would want their money to pay for a speaker like that. Not only would Civility Week supporters protest, but the entire campus would revolt.

Everyone, white, Asian or black, would be rightly offended, and work to assure that the speaker was prohibited from coming to campus. This scenario would never take place, though, because no one would ever consider inviting a racist lecturer.

Why, then, is an anti-Semitic lecturer invited to campus? Because racism is in the forefront of the UMass mind, not anti-Semitism, though it is just as destructive.

Farrakhan has compared himself to Hitler and the Nation of Islam to Germany under Hitler's regime: "A great fighting machine," he calls it.

It scares me that there are people on campus who admire him, and I shouldn't have to be scared because I am Jew at UMass. It scares me that I'm told I am wrong for being offended, that I'm wrong to take action.

But why must we inflict pain on others to hear something positive about ourselves?

Would people extend the First Amendment, knowing what we know, to Hitler? Farrakhan, remember, welcomes that comparison.

It's ironic, too, that during Civility Week many students signed a petition, claiming: "We sign this covenant as a pledge to speak out when we hear prejudicial words in the community, in the classrooms, and in ourselves. We sign this covenant as a pledge to action — recognizing that words are often not enough — to recommit ourselves to active pursuit of our vision for a peaceful and equal world."

This is not just a Jewish issue. Why is it that only some people who signed the covenant are working to follow it? Why are we made to feel that we're disturbing UMass unity when it's the sponsors of the Farrakhan speech that are causing the rift? Most of all, why isn't UMass acting "civil" about this issue?

Biases hide the truth

I've listened, listened and listened more, and I have decided that I want Minister Louis Farrakhan to visit our campus.

Up until as late as Nov. 15, I was one of a very few minorities adamantly speaking out against his proposed visit.

I fervently argued that his presence would disrupt and destruct all that we have tried to achieve in terms of civility since the New Africa House takeover.

Renai R. Culpepper

I viewed it as a slap in the face to the Jewish community, a catalyst that would serve to divide the Afro-American and Jewish communities even further.

I argued that the timing was not right, that maybe we should wait, or get a more moderate speaker.

I was wrong.

I sat down and watched three videotapes and listened to two audio tapes of Farrakhan. I kept my mind open.

Yes, Farrakhan says some strong things that may startle those who are not used to bluntness, but then we live in turbulent times, and we don't need another docile leader.

Farrakhan isn't preaching anything that a person of color hasn't thought about already.

He just has the gumption to stand up and voice the feelings and views that many of us repress. We need him here. Afro-Americans on this campus need to hear what he has to say, because we need to focus our goals and get a clear direction for the future. We need vision. Farrakhan can open our eyes.

The non-minorities on this campus need to hear him — especially the Jewish community. They need to sit down with open minds and listen to what he is saying.

He has never said anything about Judaism being a dirty religion, nor has he ever praised Hitler as a human being.

I was mislead also. I listened to a biased media, and allowed them to warp my mind without a clear viewing of the facts.

Now that I allowed myself to question my own position, I can see that I was in effect, painting a picture without paint brushes; trying to use my hands instead.

The time will never be absolutely right for Farrakhan to come. It wasn't time to free the slaves, it wasn't time to end Jim Crow, nor was it time for Afro-Americans to get equality. Black folk then, just as I am now, are deciding that our watches are a few hours ahead of everyone else's and we have decided that it is time.

People, look at all the angles before you say no. Start thinking with your head, and not your hearts.

Farrakhan may step on some toes and hurt some feelings, but then maybe in the future those people will keep their feet out of the way.

As he so eloquently states: "I say what I believe in my heart — no one controls what I say, I will not back down from what I say and let you mold me into what you want me to be."

Don't believe the hype. Deal with facts, and bring Farrakhan to our community.

Dover telephone users should take what they get

There are a lot of things in this world that I just don't understand. This one is a classic. Has anyone been following the story of Dover and the area code crisis?

For those of you who aren't familiar with it, Dover is a town in eastern Massachusetts with one of the highest per capita incomes in the state. When New England Telephone switched many of the towns in the 617 area to 508, Dover was one of those towns with "border syndrome." They got stuck with 508, while they bordered on towns with 617.

A fair-sized group of people are putting out a petition to the state legislature to force NET to change Dover's area code back to 617. As one of the leaders stated, "We're getting sick of having to dial four extra numbers every time we call Boston."

OK, hold the phone. 508 is a pain, agreed. I happen to come from a town that is in this new area code. But what makes these Dover residents think that they deserve special treatment? They're not the only ones with a problem, but they do seem to be the only ones raising such a fuss about it. If they had to pay long-distance charges for calling the next town over, I could understand it. However, it is still billed as a local call.

As I look at this I just see a bunch of lazy people who aren't willing to punch four extra numbers. Why should they get put back to 617, and not the other towns which also have "border syndrome?" NET spent a lot of time deciding just where to draw the line, and the people inside 508 have to learn to live with it. Even those with high per capita incomes.

I do have a solution. If you people hate 508 so much, build your own phone company. Otherwise you play by NET's rules. Oh, and leave the legislature out of it. They have enough to do right now.

Officials find no risk in Pilgrim plant spill

BOSTON (AP) — State health officials investigating an accidental spill of 2,000 gallons of radioactive water at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant found no risk of danger to public or plant employees.

In the meantime, officials at Pilgrim nuclear plant reviewed the spill but said Thursday they would not be ready to make recommendations for several days.

The water overflowed a collection area during a cleanup at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant Wednesday, slightly contaminating one worker, according to the plant's owner, Boston Edison Co.

The spill occurred at a low-level nuclear waste processing area at the plant, which is awaiting word from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on whether it can begin low-level power testing after a two and a half year shutdown.

Choir sings songs of success

By JOSEPH L. HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

The Boys Choir of Harlem performed last night at the Fine Arts Center in front of an audience of approximately 75 people. The Boys Choir is a major performing arts institution of international reputation.

Their repertoire ranged from classical music to contemporary songs, with special emphasis given to the works of Black composers. The choir presented pieces that utilized the baritone and bass ranges, including treble voices traditionally found in European choirs.

Dressed in black robes with white sashes, these young men (apprx 30) sang songs of eloquent praises. According Ernie McClinton stage director, although the young men looked like angels he could "guarantee with every grey hair that they weren't."

The boys are accustomed to travel, with most of them travelling to Europe three to four times before they turn 15. The choir stresses academics as well as vocal success. Tutoring in for several subjects including mathematics and english, is available six days a week. Choir members must maintain a "B" average in their studies.

The Boys Choir of Harlem is a outstanding example of hard work and dedication. 98' of it's members graduate high school and go on to college.

During the second part of the show, dressed in brown slacks and burgundy blazers, the boys performed a stunning series of spirituals that culminated with smiles that displayed the tremendous pride they had in themselves.

The choir has performed in concert halls, art centers, schools and churches throughout the United States. The Boys Choir of Harlem is celebrating its 20 anniversary with a European tour through France and Yugoslavia. This group was the subject of the Emmy Award-winning documentary From Harlem to Harleem: The Story of A Choirboy.

They have appeared on all major television networks, and are currently involved in a number of recording projects, including a jazz album for Atlantic records.

The Boys Choir of Harlem seeks to provide a positive alternative for children in metropolitan New York. It is both an artistic and a humanitarian institute. The choir strives to make a significant difference in the larger community as well as the individual lives of its members.

Tillis directs center to diversity

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Correspondent

As the main cultural voice of the university, the Fine Arts Center shoulders a great responsibility in promoting black music and theatre; but Director Fred Tillis believes that the center's purpose is to go beyond society's established cultural barriers.

"I believe in promoting cultural diversity in the broadest possible sense. Historically, the center's spectrum has ranged from European classical music, to non-western traditions such as Chinese and Indian."

So the upcoming performance by the highly acclaimed South African vocal group, Ladysmith Black Mambozo isn't part of any special program designed to highlight black cultural awareness in particular, but rather represents just another facet of the cultural diversity which Tillis advocates.

"Ladysmith came about because they were touring the country anyway; I think that American interest in South Africa has increased due to all the press it has been getting recently; people are more curious than they were before."

Although it would seem that the Ladysmith show has great potential political significance, Tillis is quick to stress that he is not a politician.

"I'm too much of an artist to get involved with politics. I believe that art can transcend all political barriers; it has the power to move and unite people of all creeds."

This may be so, but Tillis still faces an enormous problem in getting people to expose themselves to different cultures.

"It's not easy, but I believe it's something that has to be done. Even if what we're doing only affects a few people, I think it's worth it; I'm an optimist by nature, and I find it very gratifying that we're beginning to see people from all walks of life coming to our shows, especially the New World Theater productions."

Certainly, N.W.T's staging of James Baldwin's "Blues For Mr Charlie" and the acclaimed South African play, "You Strike The Woman, You Strike The Rock," proved to be very successful in this respect, and in increasing general awareness of racial issues, although Tillis' own view is that the art must come first.

"I believe that the arts have their own way of communicating. I like to think of the Fine Arts Center as being like a library. People can use our resources to learn about the world's various cultures and art forms in the same way they would use the university library to study academic subjects. It's something which is available to everyone."

Finally Tillis wishes to thank Roberta Uno Thelwell, director of Third World Programs for her "deep committment" to the Center's aims.

"She's done a marvellous job."

Book Review...

By THOMAS MAMBANDE
Collegian Staff

Your logic frightens me , Mandela
Your logic frightens me. Those years
Of dreams, of time accelerated in
Visionary hopes, of savoring the task anew,
The call, the tempo primed
To burst in supernovae round a "brave new world"
Then stillness. Silence. The world closes round
Your sole reality; the rest is...dreams?

- from Your Logic Frightens Me, Mandela, by Wole Soyinka.

" Mandela's Earth and Other Poems" marks the return to fresh print of Wole Soyinka, winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1986. It is the first book published by Soyinka since his winning of the Nobel, and is written with a sense of great urgency. Honoring the everlasting perseverance of Nelson Mandela, imprisoned South African human rights leader and undisputed symbol of anti-apartheid struggle, "Mandela's Earth" offers a vivid, honest portrayal of our world yet maintains a mood of heroism and optimism necessary for the continuation of the battle for freedom and human dignity. It is a photograph depicting the horrors of oppression and torment juxtaposed against care-free complacency and indifference. "Mandela's Earth" is a message;loud and clear,earmarked for all perpetrators and beneficiaries of exploitation.

The first section of the book,"Mandela's Earth", is the namesake of the title and pays homage to Nelson Mandela. Poems such as "Your Logic Frightens Me","Like Rudolf Hess,The Man Said!", and " So They Burn The Roof Above Her Head", indict the henchmen of apartheid for their brutality and race-hatred. Soyinka portrays well the paranoia inherent in the Afrikaner mentality, states boldly the weakness of thought and moral fiber displayed.

So now they burn the roof above her head?

Well, what's new? Retarded minds,like infants,

Play with fire. Bright things attract them.

Color obsessed, did not these mewling agents once arrest your bedspread?

"After The Deluge",the second section of Soyinka's book, points an accusing finger at the corruption of African dictators. In condemning the bad seed among Africa's leaders Soyinka has come full circle, excoriating Africa's opponents from without as well as from within.

In "New York, U.S.A." and "Dragonfly At My Windowpane", the third and fourth sections, Soyinka contrasts the fast-moving technology and decadence of the West and the traditions of his peoples within Nigeria. Soyinka fears for the longevity of the traditional world of his country and Africa , his fears reinforced by the example of the U.S.A. and its speeding erosion.

The New York Times Book Review has called Wole Soyinka "Unquestionably Africa's most versatile writer and arguably her finest". "Mandela's Earth and Other Poems" is a brilliant example of Soyinka's mastery of the poetic form. Random House is distributing the book for a price of 13.95. This most recent of Soyinka's works is well worth the price.

But the Minutemen slipped again in the 200-yard butterfly with Kennedy getting the only top four finish, taking second. The Minutemen appeared to be getting back on track again as Ladd, McIver and Mike Yunker grabbed first, third and fifth, respectively in the 100 free.

However, the Eagles stormed back, taking first and third in the 200 backstroke and the 500 free. Top UMass finishers in these events were Ehle (second) and Sampson (fourth) in the backstroke, while Robertson took second and John Gardiner fourth in the 500 free.

Chesnicka picked up his second win off the three-meter board while teammate David Wells took fourth.

At this point, the Minutemen needed big finishes in the final two events to preserve the streak. It was not to be, however, as UMass would only manage second and fourth in each of the last two races. In the 200-yard breastatroke, Kennedy took second and Sampson fourth, while the team of Ladd, Peter Reich, Yunker and McIver grabbed second in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

Despite the loss, Yarworth remained confident.

"We couldn't have swam any better," he said. "Yarworth is certain of a different result come New England championship time.

"We'll get them next time," he said.

In the third game, West Virginia slammed out to a 4-0 lead before upping the ante to 8-2. UMass, however, came around for one last breath of air.

The Minutewomen caught and tied the Lady Mountaineers at 10. They tied at 13 and UMass' offense finally began to click. It's tough to wait until you're down to the last two points though, and West Virginia wasn't going to give UMass any chance for redemption.

An WVU ace made it 14-13. The best point of the entire match was the last one. A breath-taking rally for game point finally fell to end the match. 15-13, as West Virginia took UMass in three straight games.

"I was real happy with the way we played in the third game. We had some great hits," Ford said. "We just didn't play well enough to get those two extra points."

A-10 Wrap-up: On a brighter note, two UMass Players, senior Barbara Meehan and junior Karen Ferguson both made second team All-Conference. It was the third straight time Fergoson received the honor and the second consecutive time for Meehan. . . On a not so bright note, UMass had a hitting efficiency of only .028 percent for the tournament. . . Finally, on an ending note, Saturday's game marked the last collegiate game for five UMass seniors: Meehan, Juliet Primer, Christine McEnroe, Ann Marie Larese, and Julie Smith.

UMass explodes for 64-42 victory

"That's the way we've been all year," Palazzi said. "If the offense isn't on, the defense comes through and if the defense isn't there, the offense comes around. If the defense did this all the time, I think we'd score as much as this every time."

The UMass offense looked the way it had in the first half of the season. Palazzi got good blocking and the Minutemen ran the option play almost to perfection, helping tailback Kevin Smellie to gain 106 yards and a touchdown.

"The option is a funny play because it's hard to scout," Smellie said. "And its a play that either gets a lot of yards or nothing."

AP photo

New Hampshire wide receiver Curtis Olds runs for a touchdown in Saturday's game, with UMass defender Jerome Bledsoe giving chase. UMass won the game, 64-42 and will go on to the NCAA I-AA playoffs next Saturday at Eastern Kentucky.

The Minutemen had no problem getting a lot of yards Saturday, and they did it against a team that came in rated first in the conference defensively.

"The were first in the conference, but [UMass offensive line coach Doug] Berry told us they were seventh in interconference games," offensive tackle Nick Salmon said.

"Plus, their linemen were 230," Salmon said. "I go 260 and [UMass offensive tackle] Mike Barrette goes 270. When force meets force, something's going to move."

More often then not, it was the Wildcat defensive line. Fullback Jim Pastorick scored twice in the third period, fullback David Mitchell added a 9-yard run, and Palazzi connected with Chip Mitchell for a 47-yard touchdown and Ron Blauvelt for a 73-yard score.

"Defensively, we got our butts handed to us," UNH head coach Bill Bowes said. "I have no reasons. I have no idea how we could play so poorly on defense.

"I didn't expect [what happened in the third quarter]," Bowes said. "I can't remember anyone scoring that many points against us that quickly and that easily. Once that happened, we had to reach offensively and get out of our game plan. We felt every time we had the ball, we had to score."

The Wildcats scored the very first time they had the ball, when Norm Ford scored on a 1-yard run. The touchdown was set up by a 44-yard pass from quarterback Bob Jean to Curtis Olds on the first play from scrimmage.

Later in the first quarter, Jean connected with Olds for a 16-yard score and suddenly UMass trailed by 14.

"In the first half, we just didn't do the things we had to," UMass linebacker John McKeown said. "It wasn't pretty."

Reid said, "Our team didn't quit. We got pushed around and kept playing. UNH did a terrific job of moving the ball against us. They got about 70 trillion yards against us but we got 70 trillion and 1."

To be exact, 649 yards. And most of them came in the third quarter, when the Minutemen did their damage.

But meanwhile, Jean threw for two touchdowns in the quarter to keep his team in it.

"It was getting kind of ridiculous in the third quarter," Palazzi said. "But Jean is a great quarterback. I knew they'd score a lot of points."

Jean finished with 28 completions in 51 attempts for 452 yards and four touchdowns. But Palazzi and the UMass offense were better.

"It was suicide offense," Reid said. "We went for fourth down after fourth down after fourth down. We just had to go to work. It had to be done today."

And by showing their guts Saturday, the Minutemen gave themselves at least one more chance for glory.

Volleyball swept out of A-10 tournament

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

STATE COLLEGE, Penn. — Thud.

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team ended its season this weekend at the Atlantic 10 Tournament with a performance about as sharp as butter knife — not very.

As a continuim to UMass' downward fall in its past three weeks, the Minutewomen fell in just one hour to the Lady Mountaineers of West Virginia 10-15, 15-4, 15-13.

Gathered with the elite of the conference, the fourth-ranked Minutewomen were hoping for a repeat performance of the Oct. 4 match in which UMass outplayed and outlasted WVU in a five game marathon. That same weekend, UMass pounded Duquesne— it was UMass' finest weekend, unfortunately. Ever since, the Minutewomen haven't been able to reproduce that intensity— "we did peak around that time," UMass coach Carol Ford said.

The obvious question is what didn't UMass do at the A-10s which it did do six weeks ago.

West Virginia coach Veronica Hammersmith said "There was a revenge factor. We wanted to show we were a better team than showed in Amherst.

"We were having some of our own internal problems then. Today I think we mended some of that stuff," she said.

Ford pointed to the past three weeks as the reason for the fall.

"Three weeks of inconsistent play. That was the difference," she said.

"We just had such high hopes," Ford said. "In the beginning, we were winning a lot of games, dominating our opponents but once our bubble was burst, we had a hard time getting it back."

While most of the attention at Penn State University was focused on the PSU/ Notre Dame football game, a crowd of about 150 found their way into Rec Hall for the 2 p.m. match between the fifth-ranked Mountaineers and UMass.

The Lady Mountaineers raced out to leads of 3-1 and 8-4 before UMass called timeout and gathered its breath. West Virginia had to be taken for real right from the start. UMass regrouped and pulled within two at 10-8.

WVU senior Lisa Scott (9 kills overall) made sure UMass didn't bridge the gap. Scott led the West Virginia attack in the first game which finally brought UMass to its knees at 15-10.

The second game started strong for UMass but ended in disaster. UMass setter Karen Ferguson started the second with both barrels blazing. Ferguson creamed two jump serves at the WVU defense, one a service winner, one a service ace.

UMass led 2-0 and it looked as though the Minutewomen were going to teach the Mountaineers a lesson. But then it all stopped. UMass could only win two of the next 17 points.

"In the second game, I could see UMass was really down," Hammersmith said.

Now UMass had really dug itself into a hole, and was only one game away from being swept under the rug and out of the tournament.

The third game was Miller Time. West Virginia senior utility player Michelle Miller single-handedly handcuffed the Minutewomen.

Miller (10 kills and 15 digs overall) was all over the court, continually digging UMass' toughest kills or pounding some of her own.

"[Miller] is an incredible player," UMass assistant coach Heather Olsen said.

The Lady Mountaineers had UMass on a leash— pull to the left and hit to the open court on the right, etc. It was like a good puppetier pulling all the right strings.

West Virginia had the playbook on the Minutewomen. The entire match it either tipped over or hit around the UMass defense.

"We knew where we could hit the ball against them," Hammersmith said. "We could tip to the middle or hit to the corners."

Ford said she expected that strategy from WVU but the Minutewomen were helpless.

"Our defensive players were cheating in about six feet. I think that was a mistake we didn't have to make," she said.

Men's swimming team falls to Boston College

41-meet win streak ends in season opener

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

"Well, it had to end sometime."

The words of University of Massachusetts men's swimming coach Russ Yarworth pretty much summed up the feelings of the Minutemen in regard to the ending of their 41-meet winning streak Saturday afternoon at Boyden Pool. UMass lost a tough one to the Eagles of Boston College, 140-103.

"B.C. treated this as their championship meet," Yarworth said. "They surprised us."

The Eagles, who were swimming in their third meet of the season, as opposed to the Minutemen's first, found it easy to get up for the two-time defending New England champions. Unlike the Minutemen, who had practiced all week, B.C. was well-rested and had even shaved off to gain an extra edge.

UMass didn't think of this as important enough a match to go to all the trouble, and it cost them several races. Even so, UMass didn't want to take anything away from B.C.'s victory.

"They earned the meet," Yarworth said.

"They took it from us," admitted UMass swimmer Peter Koback.

Trouble started early as the Eagles took three of the top four places, including first, in the opening event, the 400-yard medley relay. The UMass team of David Ehle, Koback, Evan Gwilliam and Jim Robertson swam about as well as it could unshaven, ringing up a 3:38.48 time, but could manage only a second against a psyched-up Boston College club.

The bad news continued in the 1000- and 200-yard freestyles as B.C. took first and second in the 1000 and first and third in the 200. Leading the Minutemen were Will Riddell taking third in the 1000 and Robertson second in the 200.

UMass made a bit of a comeback in the next two events, the 50-yard freestyle and 200-yard individual medley. Minutemen G.T. Ladd and Brian McIver placed 1-2 in the 50 followed by a first and third showing from Roger Kennedy and Frank Sampson.

UMass continued its winning ways in the one-meter diving competition with Dan Chesnicka racking up 280.2 points for a first place finish.

New School of Ed dean named at convocation

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Marilyn Haring-Hidore was officially named the new dean of the School of Education yesterday at a special convocation held in Bowker Auditorium.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey invoked images of John F. Kennedy and his commitment to education yesterday before appointing Haring-Hidore as the new dean, and recounted the spirit of idealism and hope the president gave to the nation.

About 150 faculty, students, trustees and supporters attended the 4 p.m. event, marking the replacement of acting Dean George Urch, who had filled the position since the spring of 1987.

Duffey, in his opening remarks, said the United States had been inspired by JFK to emphasize education early in the president's term. The momentum he caused receded after his assassination 25 years ago, while the country's military involvement in Southeast Asia increased, Duffey said.

"The nation is now challenged to compete and cooperate and to understand its role in the global market. Education is once again the top priority," the chancellor said, noting ironically that funding for higher education in Massachusetts had been cut three times in the past two years.

Handing the podium over to Dr. David Berliner, a psychology professor at Arizona State University who delivered the keynote address titled "The Transformation of the Teaching Profession," Duffey reminded his audience that Kennedy had called education the "Fiber of our national life."

Berliner, formerly an associate laboratory director for research at Far West Laboratory, received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree during the ceremony.

Taking his audience for a walk through history, Berliner told the crowd that in the 1870's, there were three disreputable professions that lacked standards, ethics and competence. They were medicine, law and education.

Berliner said each of the professions had been marred by poor standards, and cited that entrance criteria for medical school historically required only the ability to pay fees, and did not count literacy as a pre-requisite.

But, Berliner noted, two of the professions — medicine and law — were able to create a knowledge base from which to work and in doing so climbed in the social hierarchy to respected and trusted positions.

"Teaching is and always will be an art. We are creating an extensive and scholarly knowledge base to underline it. We may be years behind other professions, but it is now our turn to change," Berliner said.

Haring-Hidore, who left education department of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in August, accepted the position saying, "Together we can do it. Let us continue."

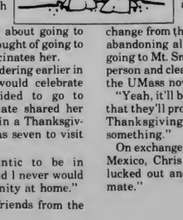
Thanksgiving in historic Plymouth:

Exchange students find ways to celebrate holiday

By ERIN ABBEY
Collegian Staff

While Thanksgiving Day is traditionally a time to huddle with family and friends, some out-of-state students at the University of Massachusetts will be celebrating through adventurous plans.

Andrea Hagan, 19, a National Exchange Student from Humboldt State University in California, has decided to go to Plymouth, where the Pilgrim's landed, to attend the 367th annual dinner sponsored by the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce.



"I hadn't even thought about going to Plymouth, but just the thought of going to Plymouth," she says, fascinates her.

Hagan said she was wondering earlier in the semester how she would celebrate Thanksgiving, and decided to go to Plymouth after a floormate shared her memories of dressing up in a Thanksgiving costume when she was seven to visit the South Shore town.

"I hadn't even thought about going to Plymouth, but just the thought of going to Plymouth," she says, fascinates her.

Hagan said she was wondering earlier in the semester how she would celebrate Thanksgiving, and decided to go to Plymouth after a floormate shared her memories of dressing up in a Thanksgiving costume when she was seven to visit the South Shore town.

"It sounded so romantic to be in Plymouth," she said, " and I never would have gotten that opportunity at home."

But many of her new friends from the surrounding area do not share her excitement for visiting Plymouth Rock.

"Nobody else wanted to go," she said, adding that instead everyone complained about already having seen Plymouth.

So Hagan, who drove to UMass this fall from California, will be staying in her reserved hotel room alone.

"I'm definitely a people-person, but I also need time to myself," she said. "While I'm here I have to do everything. You don't come 3,000 miles to sit on your butt."

But another exchange student from Chico State University in California, Suzanne Geri, 22, has made plans to celebrate in the traditional family manner, substituting her roommate's family for her own family.

"When people hear you're not from here, everyone invitee you and she was the first person, so I went by that," Geri said. "She has a million plans for us. Last time I went [to her house], her father took me for drives all over the place."

Mark Wilkins, on exchange from the University of Alabama, is abandoning all tradition this year. He is going to Mt. Snow to work as a ticket-sales person and cleaner with some friends from the UMass novice crew team.

"Yeah, it'll be different," he said, adding that they'll probably be eating burgers for Thanksgiving but at least "it'll be something."

On exchange from the University of New Mexico, Chris Dineen said, "Basically I lucked out and got a really great roommate."

Court clerk: election SGA's only option

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

As the Student Government Association presidency approaches its tenth month of uncertainty, the Student Judiciary Clerk of Courts said yesterday the only solution is a new election.

Clerk of Courts Chris McClellan, speaking for the justices of the Student Judiciary, said that ratification of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as co-presidents of the SGA is impossible and new elections are the only solution to the conflict.

"Ratification is out of the question because the election was declared unconstitutional by the court that heard the case," McClellan said.

Rabinowitz did not agree. "That guy is living in fantasyland," Rabinowitz said yesterday, referring to McClellan's comments. "There can't be new elections

Bush retains Thornburgh, Cavasos for cabinet posts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush reached again into the Reagan Cabinet yesterday to retain Dick Thornburgh as attorney general and Lauro F. Cavazos as secretary of education. He also named former White House aide Richard G. Darman for "perhaps the most difficult job", budget director.

Thornburgh and Cavazos, like Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, were late additions to the Reagan team. Bush told a news conference that "in all likelihood" those three will be the only direct holdovers.

They join James a. Baker III, the former treasury secretary whom Bush has chosen to be secretary of state, as cornerstone members of Bush's new cabinet. The president-elect said yesterday, "I will keep my committment to bring in lots of new faces."

Bush swore in Cavazos, 61, the first Hispanic-American to serve in a Cabinet, in September as successor to William Bennett at the Department of Education. Bush had promised to appoint a Hispanic to his own Cabinet if elected.

Thornburgh, 56, former governor of Pennsylvania and one-time head of the Department of Justice's criminal division, replaced the embattled Edwin Meese III in August. Bush said Thornburgh's priority as the nation's chief law enforcement officer will be "combatting the scourge of drugs".

"Drugs are Public Enemy No. 1. A major part of Dick's mission will be to stop them from damaging our society and our country," said the president-elect.

Darman, 45, was deputy White House chief of staff and then deputy treasury secretary under Baker before taking a job with an investment firm last year. He has worked in six Cabinet agencies: Defense, Justice, Commerce, State, Treasury and Health, Education and Welfare.

Bush also got some private advice yesterday from former Presidents Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford, who headed a commission that has made recommendations for the next administration.

He later telephoned the man he defeated in the Nov. 8 election, Democratic Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts. Dukakis aides said the two men spoke briefly about getting together, but no date was set.

"I don't want to have a lot of show business. I want to hold out my hand and say, 'Look, the campaign is behind us,' " Bush said at a brief news conference following his appointment announcements.

At the news conference, Bush rejected a General Accounting Office report that dismissed his "flexible freeze" proposal for cutting the budget deficit. The report said that tax increases as well as military and Social Security cuts would have to be considered.

"I'm not going to change my view as to how we get this deficit down," Bush said. "I don't remember and Republicans or Democrats running on a please-raise-my-taxes program."

Darman, named to take over at the Office of Management and Budget, defended the flexible freeze, saying only Social Security was exempt from its stringencies. He singled out medical programs as a prime target for savings in the Bush administration.

Bush flies to Houston, Texas for two hours of meetings with President-elect Carlos Salinas de Gortari of Mexico, who takes office Dec. 1. The vice president will stop on the way in Point Clear, Ala., at a Republican governors conference.

Afghanistan says 27 killed when Pakistan shot down plane

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghanistan's state-run radio yesterday said all 27 passengers and crew members aboard an Afghan transport plane died when it was shot down by Pakistani forces over the weekend.

A Pakistani Foreign Ministry spokesman said the plane was flying several miles inside Pakistani airspace when it was attacked Saturday evening near the border town of Parachinar.

The spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity said it was not clear how many people were aboard the plane.

The Radio Kabul broadcast, monitored in Islamabad, said the An-26 plane was en route to the eastern city of Jalalabad from the Afghan capital when technical trouble developed.

The pilot put out a call for assistance, but was ignored by Pakistan authorities, the radio said.

"Instead of helping, Pakistan shelled surface-to-air rockets at the plane against all international laws and norms," said the radio broadcast.

The Pakistani spokesman said:"The plane was asked to identify itself and it didn't. It was going deeper into Pakistan's territory when it was shot down."

He did not say how contact had been made with the plane.

Prof says freedoms violated by University

By JENNIFER McKINNEY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts administration is forcing students to comply with increasingly strict policies that violate their freedoms guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, according to a professor in the comparative literature department.

Professor David Lenson, speaking to a predominately student audience of about 60, compared major differences between past and present University policies in a lecture last week in the Campus Center.

"The policy in the 'old days' was for the University to act 'in loco parentis,' or as surrogate parents," Lenson said. "It was a friendlier relationship between students and the administration, with the administration looking out for the students' best interests."

During the counterculture of the 1960's, this relationship changed through student activism, he said. One result of this activism is the lowering of the drinking age, he said.

Although the administration's attitude toward students was friendly, "before the 60's, the University authorities had the right to barge into a student's room to see if they had members of the opposite sex or alcohol present," Lenson said. He said this was a direct violation of the Fourth Amendment.

The amendment says no one's body or home shall be subjected to search and seizure without probable cause or warrant.

Lenson cited the Vietnam War as the cause for the drinking age being lowered to 18. "Kids were seeing their friends being drafted and going off to war, while they still weren't allowed to have a beer if they wanted to," he said.

He said the "outlash of resentment" of not being allowed to drink is not that students "have this heathenistic lust for beer," but that when they turn 18, they are legally adults and should be treated as such.

In reference to present University policies, Lenson said, "Universities have taken action against the Constitution, like the old days."

He described these policies as "extraordinarily puritanical." Students are being used as "guinea pigs," pushed to see how far the administration can intrude on their rights, he said.

The authorities have used the flimsiest of excuses to divide and conquer the student population, such as breaking up a loud party or arresting a student walking around with an open can of beer, he said. Lenson said he feels this is a breach of the First Amendment, which grants the right of assembly.

The penalties of getting caught with an open can of beer, [paying a fine and doing free community labor], are extremely harsh and absurd, and are used as a persuasion to "keep everyone at home," he said.

In the future, Lenson said he foresees "increasing incursions on students' rights in the next couple of years," which are not only taking place at UMass, but nationwide.

This is sad, he said, because "the whole point of college is to liberate oneself, to challenge limitations, to make room for yourself, to make self realizations."

Lenson said he likes "the smoldering quality of UMass students."

If students want to change anything, they have got to become aware of their rights as individuals and become active, Lenson said.

Pre-registering urged for Women's Studies

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Students interested in taking a women's studies classes should make sure to pre-register, as most classes fill up quickly, an instructor in the department said.

Introduction to Women's Studies, which was first offered seven years ago, is oversubscribed every semester, according to Arlene Avakian, an instructor in the department.

"It's a very lively class," she said. "It always amazes me that in a class with 150 people, we get discussion going."

Avakian recommended the class, which fulfills a general education interdisciplinary requirement, as a good place to get an overview of women's studies.

"We begin with a grounding in history and then go on to various issues that are particularly interesting to women, such as work, family, and sexuality," she said.

The 100-level course, which Avakian said focuses on American women, also covers AIDS.

Teresa Turner, who has a Ph.D. from the London School of Economics and international experience in women's issues, was hired especially to teach the course next semester, Avakian said.

For students who are beyond the introductory stage, Avakian recommends taking Foundations in Feminism, described in the catalog as a course with both a historical and contemporary section, which focuses on the diverse sources and development of feminist ideas.

This 200-level course offers a regular section to 40 students and an honors section to 20 each semester. But, she warned, "that's the class that gets jammed, it's often filled before the semester starts."

Avakian said classes are oversubscribed because of their popularity, and the good reputation of the women's studies department.

There is no official ranking of women's studies departments, she said, but when we are referred to nationally, we are placed in the top three in the country.

"We're one of the oldest and biggest in the country," she said. "Some of our faculty are well known throughout the world. And we have our own faculty, which is unusual in women's studies."

Avakian said women's studies departments at many other universities must borrow faculty from other departments. "We have our own faculty and we have joint faculty," she said, adding this is important because it gives them the power to hire, fire, and give tenure to their own staff, while still utilizing the skills of faculty in other departments.

"We've been able to benefit from the hirings of other departments," she said, noting that the new political science professor, Patricia Mills, is offering a course in Feminist Politics and Theory, and that journalism professor Karen List, plans to offer Women in Journalism.

In addition to courses, the women's studies department offers students internships and independent study.

"It's a real opportunity," said Karen Lederer, staff assistant and practicum coordinator. "I'd like to see more students considering doing internships."

When you do an internship, Lederer said, you graduate with a degree and a resume item.

Avakian agreed. "The one thing that's absolutely consistent among graduates is that they said the most important thing they did was an internship," she said.

"Internships give you an opportunity to check out a career option," she said. "And some of these internships turn into jobs."

Students from Hampshire and Amherst College Friday cleared out a warehouse in Holyoke to provide shelter for the homeless. Furniture for the shelter was provided by several area businesses.

Area students work to help homeless

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

HOLYOKE — Five-College students worked last week to end homelessness in the Pioneer Valley.

Members of Students Working Against Poverty (SWAP), a Hampshire College student organization, cleaned 8,000 square feet of warehouse space at 37 Appleton Street in Holyoke, according to Ada Sanchez, director of Hampshire College's Public Service and Social Change Program. The new distribution center will provide furniture and household items to persons coming out of shelters in the Pioneer Valley, she said.

About 40 people worked in three shifts from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Sanchez said. Most of the workers were from Hampshire College, but a few Amherst College students, shelter staff and residents also helped, she said. Both schools provided cleaning materials, and transportation to Holyoke was provided by the Hampshire College physical plant, she said.

The warehouse will have an office and reception area as well, she said.

After Thanksgiving, SWAP will conduct what Sanchez called a "two-week blitz," in which students will ask corporations for donations of money and household goods before the warehouse opens.

"Our hope is to open it before Christmas," she said.

There are 17 emergency food and shelter providers in the Pioneer Valley, Sanchez said. Staff and residents of local shelters helped clean the area. Volunteers came from Jessie's House in Northampton, the Main Street Center in Holyoke, and Transitional Living in Chicopee.

Hampshire student Bill Lewis said the first and largest shift consisted of about 17 people. Springfield television stations and newspapers were on hand to cover the event, he said.

"We were scared at first," he said, "that the media would come too early and no (workers) would be there for it, but it turned out that we had just enough help."

Sanchez said the Howard Johnson motel donated curtains to the warehouse while Kamel Hassan's Furniture Barn donated furniture and Rocky's Home Center provided cleaning goods.

Although no University of Massachusetts students took part in the cleaning, Sanchez said she had spoken with members of the UMass Puerto Rican student association, AHORA, and they had expressed interest in the project.

Sanchez said the SWAP project attracts volunteers regardless of their political leanings. "We found that, if asked, people are more than willing to help the cause," she said.

Hampshire student Lenore Diane said the prospect of helping the needy in the area contributed to a "heartwarming" and high-spirited day. "In spite of all the excitement, everyone was aware of the reality of homelessness," she said.

Anyone interested in contributing time or money to the project should call the PSSC program at 549-4600 ext. 395 or attend the next SWAP meeting on Dec. 1 at 8 p.m. in The West Lecture Hall of Hampshire College's Franklin-Patterson Hall.

25 years later, Kennedy's memory lives on

Where would he be today?

By CHRISTOPHER CALLA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Where would he be today? What would he be doing? How would we view him?

It's hard to imagine John F. Kennedy, a generation's symbol of youthful vigor and hope, as a 71-year-old man. But the people who knew him best — friends and political allies — agree that whether he became a scholar, author, ambassador or perhaps even a senator once again, he would have remained an energetic and integral participant in national and world affairs.

"Without question, he would have continued to be an extremely active, public-spirited, heavily involved person in all matters that would have to do with social progress and world peace," said Lawrence O'Brien, a top aide in the Kennedy White House. "He would be a full-time participant in national and world affairs on an ongoing basis, and that could have taken any number of forms."

O'Brien, who served as Kennedy's liaison to Congress, recalls the late president occasionally referring to life after the White House — he would have been only 51 if he served the maximum eight years and the talk revolved around academic life, perhaps at his alma mater, Harvard University.

Instead, Harvard renamed its government school in Kennedy's honor as a "living memorial" to the 35th president, who was gunned down in Dallas 25 years ago today.

It is difficult to predict how Kennedy would have been viewed by Americans today if he had lived.

Dean Rusk, who served as secretary of state in the short-lived administration, said Kennedy would still be revered, but the Kennedy years would never have taken on mythic proportions.

"He would not have given any thought to the idea of Camelot," Rusk said. "His time in office was a serious time. There was nothing 'Camelot' about it. His life was filled with serious crises."

James David Barber, a history professor at Duke University and a leading presidential scholar, said the assassination of Kennedy did much to enhance the public's historical perspective of Kennedy and his hero status.

"We sanctify presidents retrospectively. When Kennedy was around he got a lot of flack. Kennedy became a saint partly because he was killed in office," Barber said, speculating that Kennedy would be a well-respected — but not a worshipped — political figure today.

Letters reveal reverence

By MICHAEL BEZDEK
Associated Press

BOSTON — In the rugged Rogue River Valley of southern Oregon, the few people who had contact with Irwin Lehrer knew him as a man of few words.

But when President John F. Kennedy was assassinated, Lehrer took a pen and with a trembling hand but strong heart wrote a rare letter, to the first lady.

"I am just an old man living by myself way up in the mountains," he wrote. "John F. Kennedy was the best president we ever had and you are the most wonderful woman in the world. Anyone (tries) to tell me different, has me to whip. Twin fawns come in my yard to eat feed I put out for them. One's name is Caroline, the other John John."

Lehrer's letter is now in a special file at the John F. Kennedy Library, created by the National Archives from condolences sent to Jacqueline Kennedy.

Most of the 300,000 pages of letters, selected from about three million pages, are still being catalogued. But the couple hundred already on file reveal, in simple, touching and rarely mawkish prose, how deeply personal the Kennedy presidency and passing was for average Americans.

There are letters from heads of state and celebrities, but most are from the likes of a self-proclaimed "nobody" housewife from St. Louis; from a retarded boy in Riverside, Calif., who labored for an hour to print his 45 words; from a woman from Ripley, Tenn., who said that because of Kennedy many Southerners no longer accept unkind saying that "a child born of a black mama and a black papa, his days will always be unhappy."

The most frequent reflections are on JFK's vigor and humor, his efforts on behalf of the mentally handicapped and minorities, and his handling of the Cuban missile crisis.

At Peninsula High School, in Gig Harbor, Wash., teacher Ruth Crook wrote, "The news came just before I was due to teach Shelley's Ode to a Skylark. (You were at the hospital.) Numb, cold, choked, I put it to the class: 'What do you do? Go home?' There was silence, and no face registered anything at all. Then a boy, very quietly, without waiting for recognition, said: 'No, we're Americans. Let's do the work we have to do.'"

Some of the letters were just dropped off at the gravesite. On signed by "Just Another American" concluded, "Goodbye my chief, my leader, my captain. Good-bye, my president. Good-bye."

A pen, a pen, my kingdom for a pen

Young and old mourn a hero who died too young

My mom was 21 and recently married in 1963, an artist who wed a chemist two years earlier and was beginning to live the American dream — Suffern, New York-style.

She was washing her hair in the sink. The radio was playing in the background. In between times of lifting her hair from the water, she heard something about the president.

Confused about what they were saying on the radio — that the president may have been shot — she went to the television. Walter Cronkite was reporting on the shooting, and possible death of President John F. Kennedy.

My mom stood in front of the television and waited — waited for the author who said it was all fiction, for CBS to say it was not true.

My dad called from the laboratory where he worked in Stony Point, N.Y.

"Hi, Mandy."

"Haven't you heard?" my mom asked as she fought back tears.

He hadn't.

My dad asked one of the white chemists to get a radio. Soon they too realized that Kennedy had been shot, and early reports suggested he would not survive the attack in Dallas.

The world stood still. Both my mom and my dad could not believe the man who meant so much to so many may no longer be alive. The man whose vigor, youth, class and charm captured the spirit of men and women — both young and old — may have been killed.

It was a bad movie, a bad story. My parents hoped it would end.

It didn't.

David R. Mark

John F. Kennedy would be 71 this year, and even now, 25 years after his assassination, the world mourns for the man who will never become old.

It amazes many Americans that not one, but three American politicians attempted to compare themselves with JFK this year. In the democratic primaries, Sen. Albert Gore suggested that in 1960, the oldest president the country had known was succeeded by the youngest, and the United States had the chance to do it again in this election year. Gov. Michael Dukakis said voters had a chance to vote for "another son of Massachusetts," and Sen. Dan Quayle suggested his experience to be equal to JFK's, prompting the now famed quotation from Sen. Lloyd Bentsen: "You're no Jack Kennedy."

None of them are, or ever will be, and perhaps that is why Americans have been so dissatisfied with recent presidential candidates — none of them are John Kennedy.

Ellen Goodman, a syndicated columnist, wrote: "Americans have upped the ante on what makes a good person and a good life. We are now supposed to save the world and be home for supper. As personal lives have become much more complex and challenging, they tend to siphon some of the energy from public service. . . . I wish I knew what Jack Kennedy would have made of all this, how he would have crafted his call in the '80s, because he would have called and he was a fine craftsman. But it's left to those of us who were his younger generation, his sometimes disillusioned human legacy, to figure out a way to pass on that vision to a very different generation, at a very different moment in our country's history."

I was not born until 1968, too young to see first-hand what it was that made Kennedy the leader of a generation, too young to see what it was that still makes our parents' generation yearn for him.

It has been 25 years since his death, and today I mourn.

Speed limit bill sent to the house despite last year's roadblocks

By DUNCAN MANSFIELD
Associated Press

BOSTON — A bill to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on rural sections of Massachusetts' highways was sent to the full house yesterday despite running into roadblocks last year.'

With opposition from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, a similar bill was sent to a study committee last year and never resurfaced.

"I'm hoping we'll get some more action" this time, said the bill's sponsor, Rep. Anthony Scibelli, D-Springfield. In recent months, a grassroots campaign has formed in support of raising the limit.

Forty states have reinstated the 65 mph speed limit on rural highways since Congress agreed in 1986 to make the speed limit a local option to the states.

Massachusetts, along with neighbors Rhode Island, Connecticut and New York, is now among the handful of states that has retained the 55 mph limit set nationally in 1974.

Recent studies of states adopting the higher speed limits have found an increase in their traffic fatalities on 65 mph rural highways while the fatality rate on their 55 mph urban highways has decreased.

But Scibelli considers it "very essential" to raise the limit both for safety reasons and because many drivers already are driving above the limit.

"Regardless of what the figures show, safer driving is driving at a fair rate of speed," Scibelli said. "In my analysis of drivers through the years, ... the slow driver is the one that may create the accident and not the one who is speeding."

The highways are built for driving faster than 55 mph and most drivers already exceed the limit, Scibelli said. "Lets's be honest," he said. "Very few, if any, drive below 65. I don't drive below 65 and I'll readily admit it to you."

The Ways and Means committee endorsed Scibelli's bill after amending it to comply with federal rules. Originally, Scibelli's bill would have increased the speed limit on all 55 mph highways to 65 mph. But that could threaten the state's federal highway funds.

Under the federal law, only highways outside population areas of 50,000 of more people can have 65 mph limits.

In Massachusetts, that means that only 131 of 960 highway miles can be made 65 mph. They are in the following areas:

- Interstate 90: a 42-mile stretch between Westfield and the New York border, and 29 miles from Oxford to Wilbraham.
- Interstate 91: 15 miles from Deerfield to Hatfield, and 6 miles from the Vermont border to Greenfield.
- Interstate 195: 10 miles from Mattapoisett to Wareham.
- Interstate 495: 15 miles from Littleton to Berlin, and 14 miles from Middleboro to Wareham.

The speed limit bill was among several transportation-related bills endorsed by the House Ways and Means committee yesterday. They include:

- A measure setting a $30 fee for reinstating suspended drivers' licenses, with $1.2 million of the fees going to the Registry of Motor Vehicles for driver safety and control programs and for branch office operation. Some 200,000 drivers reinstated their licenses at no cost last year, Registrar Robert M. Hutchinson, Jr. said.

because there isn't enough time."

He said new elections, if held, would have to be during finals week, and even if the senate ratified immediately, the elected person would only have three months to serve.

Silkoff/Rabinowitz won a March 15 election for the presidency which was ruled null and void by the Student Supreme Court, a branch of the Student Judiciary.

The co-presidents-elect then appealed, and the tribunal hearing the appeal, which included McClellan, remanded, or sent the case back to the original tribunal to be reheard with new evidence presented. McClellan yesterday confirmed this chronology.

At the time, it was understood by Silkoff and Rabinowitz and reported by the Collegian that the case was to be heard de novo, or all over again, as if there had been no prior decision.

McClellan said yesterday this is not true, that the appeal tribunal, which he sat on, sent the case back to the original jurors without the de novo classification. The original tribunal upheld their ruling in May.

On the de novo case McClellan said, "That was leaked out of [the Clerk of Courts] office. I'm not clear on how that leaked out."

McClellan blamed the discrepancy about the de novo hearing on the former Clerk of Courts. He could not produce documents proving the case was not to be held de novo because he said the Clerk of Courts' office was disorganized when he took over last month.

The court is also dealing with is a request by Sen. Robert Smith for a Writ of Mandamus, which would order the senate to vote on the ratification. McClellan said he will make a decision on the writ in the near future.

Settlers celebrate surviving a hostile time in America

I the early 1600s, the Church of England was a mess. Tyrannical, arbitrary, and politically compromised, the institution was so insufferable that two distinct reform movements sprang up to deal with it.

Rusty Denton

One group called for change from within; they were labelled Puritans. Another group claimed nothing could reform it, that a new beginning had to be made. They were called Separatists; in America some were later called the Pilgrims.

The Pilgrims had a miserable history. By law, they had to attend the state church every week. They were officially persecuted for trying to hold their own meetings and were forbidden to leave England. When some escaped to tolerant Holland, their children lost their cultural identity, so the group went back.

Allowed to migrate to the New World, the first boat the Pilgrims hired was a useless old tub. To afford a charter for the next ship, half the seats went to a dubious mix of adventurers who could pay the fare — a fact which ultimately forced the Pilgrims to compromise their religious community. The other half of the charter was paid for by loans from unscrupulous investors in London. The loans would later take over 20 years to repay because of the exorbitant and ever-increasing interest rates tacked on after the colonizers left England.

Following several nauseous trans-Atlantic weeks, the Pilgrim travellers found they couldn't even sail to a safe part of the American coast (Virginia) because of the seas and the time of year. With no shelter, no local supplier, no experienced woodsmen and no human neighbors for miles, they had to establish a colony on a barren coastline in the dead of winter. It was bad; between climate and sickness, half of the colony was dead by spring, including almost all the adult women.

With only 51 people left, Plymouth colony probably wouldn't have survived at all had it not been for an Indian who showed up in the spring and spent several months teaching settlers to survive by the ways of the New World. He, too had a particularly bitter history.

Twice Squanto had been deceived, kidnapped and sold across the ocean by white men; each time he had to find his own way home. The second time he was gone, the Pawtuxet tribe (his entire extended family) was wiped out by a white man's disease. Now a pitiful band of incompetent white pioneers had set up permanent housekeeping on his last remaining heritage — the tribal lands.

Had he not earlier decided to follow Christ, Squanto might easily have followed the brutal traditions of the Pawtuxet and killed everyone in the colony. For both the Indian and the colonists, a natural response to circumstances would have been the modern one: bitterness, blaming God for acts carried out by evil people, or cursing God because humans are subject to the often fatal forces of nature.

Instead, after the first harvest they invited a local tribe to help them thank God for food and life and freedom, and for His love toward them. Their feast recognized that God gives many good gifts even to those who don't honor Him, and that it is only because of His great mercy that God doesn't zap us all dead for our selfishness, idolatry and ingratitude.

Have an abundant Thanksgiving.

Pink triangles remind us of oppression and pride

When someone mentions the word "holocaust" the first thing that pops into most people's minds would probably be the systematic slaughter of millions of Jews. One thing that most people do not know, however, is that Jews were not the only group of people to lose hundreds of thousands at the hands of Adolf Hitler and the Nazis.

Brad Robinson

When one sees the yellow Star of David it is also another reminder of the Jews who were killed in the concentration camps, but few people know of the other symbols which were used to label prisoners.

Political prisoners were made to wear red triangles, green triangles were for habitual criminals, vagrants wore black triangles, purple triangles were for Jehovah witnesses, immigrants were forced to wear blue triangles, and the pink triangle was given to gays and lesbians, who formed the lowest rung on the ladder of hierarchy among prisoners.

The triangles could also be used in a variety of ways to "double mark" people. For instance, a Jewish lesbian would have a yellow triangle going underneath a pink triangle to form a star.

The symbols were used for identification purposes but also served to divide prisoners, who formed a hierarchy among themselves in order to be protected from an almost certain death either from the guards or by starvation.

We have been told that "those who forget the past are condemned to repeat it" and we as gays, lesbians, and bisexuals will not forget our brothers and sisters who have died, not only at the hands of the heterosexist society in which we live today. We have adopted the pink triangle as a symbol of pride for our family and as a reminder and an incentive for our future. For every day people are coming out of the closet and finding out that it's okay to be gay, lesbian, or bisexual. Every day our number increases, and there is power in numbers and we will fight for the things in which we believe, the right to vote for who we chose and to be accepted in our society without prejudice.

Ten percent of the population is estimated to be gay, lesbian, or bisexual, many believe this to be a very conservative figure. This means that one out of every 10 people is not heterosexual! It is up to us all, regardless of our sexual orientation, to break down the homophobic wall which exists in our society. Oppression is oppression. It hurts not only those being oppressed, but all of us. By breaking down the barriers we make the world a better place to live.

Prejudice not worth the money

If Minister Louis Farrakhan is a "Distinguished Visitor," then E.T. is a hate-monger from outer space.

If the Distinguished Visitor Program wants to give him an $9,000 honorarium to speak at the University of Massachusetts, then it is honoring and encouraging foul speech, rather than promoting free speech.

If DVP co-Chairman Patrick Berkley "would like to see him" so much, then he should be fair and also invite someone who loathes his religion (or existence.)

But beware . . . such people rarely show up unless they're offered lots and lots of money.

Jewish heritage is something to always be proud of

I am a Jew. There was a time when those words did not come easy. There was a time when I wished it wasn't true. A time when I had damned my parents to hell for making it so.

To think that I, a child of the Holocaust, stood in denial of such an extraordinary heritage. I wanted to be like everyone else. I wanted Christmas and Sunday School, but most of all, I didn't want to have the pennies thrown at me.

I didn't want to walk into the cafeteria and have a book about the KKK slipped under my nose. I didn't want to hear the intentionally audible whispers about the virtues of Adolph Hitler and his regime.

Not that I was the only Jew in my junior high school, but somehow, these events tended to make one feel quite alone.

I was ashamed to tell my parents. Ashamed to tell them that I had done nothing. To tell them that I had not defended our honor.

Why, why had I been so passive?

Perhaps because I did not understand their prejudices. I did not understand our crime. My blood ran as red and my pain was just as real as theirs. But I did not want to take the other corridor so I wouldn't see "them." I was tired, tired of not being able to be me because of "them."

Beth Wiener

Was this what I was to expect? These were the cruel realities of life? At age 13 the foundation of my upbringing was to be shattered?

I was to question all that my parents had strived to make the core of my existence.

These painful questions, however, led me toward the same undeniable conclusions, for I had committed no crime.

I was convicted, unjustly, because of their ignorance and fears. I was not weak, but strong, for not honoring their condemnation with a rebuttle.

I no longer felt angry and frustrated. I felt pity, pity for these children that were victim's of their parents' lack of understanding and tolerance. I was sorry that they would be bitter adults, and I would be proud. They were the victims, not I, I was their scapegoat.

These prejudices and others are a cruel reality of life, but they only possess as much power as we give them. My eyes may have been open too early, or some would say not early enough, but the lessons I learned were indispensible.

Words cannot strip you of what you believe, unless you let them. This knowledge is the best weapon against the prejudicial ignorances inherent in our society.

A day will come when all races and religions will be able to stand tall, with pride and conviction, and say, "I am black," "I am Vietnamese," "I am Hispanic," and "I am a Jew!"

Extended hits that make or break

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Correspondent

As a slight breather from the usual mainstream muck, this week we'll look at singles in a different light. Twelve-inch singles let you listen to a longer, revamped version of your favorite song and are perfect for dancing, so turn on your strobe light and let's begin.

Boy George "No Clause 28"(Import)

Although he's been having difficulties establishing a solo career here in the States, Boy George has been quite busy in the U.K. This remixed single protesting British legislature borrows from other hit songs. After the customary Margaret Thatcher-bashing, strains of Prince and Michael Jackson can be heard through the funky dance music. George's soulful voice sounds much improved since his Culture Club days, although his song-writing abilities haven't. If you can put up with the less than inspired lyrics, the extended version of "No Clause 28" will have you out on the dance floor in no time.

The Singles Scene

Earth, Wind & Fire "Turn On (The Beat Box)"

Throughout the Seventies, Earth, Wind & Fire were a main staple on the charts. Although they don't have the hit power they once did, songs like last year's "Systems of Survival" prove they can still get down. Unfortunately, "Turn On (The Beat Box)" isn't on the same level as past EW&F hits. Perhaps due to lack of sales the band has tried a more commercial sound and the result sounds forced and tense. Even the remix isn't very danceable; sit this one out.

New Kids on the Block "You Got It (The Right Stuff)"

These annoying adolescents that brought us the forgettable "Please Don't Go Girl" have returned with a much improved remix. "You Got It (The Right Stuff)" was produced by Earth, Wind & Fire's Maurice White and what he failed to do to his own band's single he more than makes up for it here. A relentless bass line and a driving drumbeat highlight the track. Although the vocals are less than superior, these Kids sound as if they've been around the Block a few times.

Sinead O'Connor and Karen Finley "Jump In the River"

Ever wonder what the Wicked Witch of the West would sound like during an orgasm? Well, I'm going to tell you anyway. Performance artist Karen Finley, known for her less than tactful sexual stage shows, gives us a sampling of her screeching "talents" on the long version of this latest Sinead O'Connor effort. O'Connor's talents are seemingly flawless, her powerful voice assisted by her forceful guitar licks. They are, as usual, top notch. The only problem with this song is the presence of Finley.

Living Colour "Cult of Personality" Ouch! This one really cooks. Living Colour, who opened for the Godfathers this past fall at UMass, churn out a burning single on their debut release. "Cult of Personality" makes a strong statement against modern politics. Grouping together Gandhi, Mussolini, Stalin and even using pieces of speeches by John F. Kennedy, the band makes a strong point for their cause. The metal-style guitars and grueling vocals prove this one is definitely not for the faint-hearted.

Erasure "A Little Respect"

Following up their huge international hit "Chains of Love," Erasure has once again created another dance club masterpiece. "A Little Respect" was produced and remixed by Stephen Hague, who has helped create hits for the Pet Shop Boys and Jane Wiedlin. Before establishing Erasure, Vince Clarke founded Depeche Mode, Yaz (with Alison Moyet) and the popular UK band The Assembly. His experience has apparently paid off. "A Little Respect" is by far one of the more intelligible club singles of the year. Clarke's killer synth line and Andy Bell's gutsy shrill are a perfect match and definitely earn more than a little respect.

Childhood revisited at Wheeler Gallery

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow is the last day of Karen J. Axtell's first solo exhibit on display in the Wheeler Gallery.

The works in this exhibit, Axtell said, all have to do with childhood.

"From childhood we don't just bring photographs and the memories and instances we get told. We bring sights, sounds and smell; like the smell of Grandma's kitchen," she said. "We can't get hold of them, but they are much more real than just memories."

In her works, Axtell used a wide variety of materials including gauze, canvas, paper, linen, oil and acrylic paints, charcoal, sawdust and more to build up the surfaces into layered, textured relief in an effort to represent the intangible in a very tangible media.

"The tactile sense is so important to those kinds of feelings, to me at least. It seemed to me that that was touchable; a way to touch those things that can't quite be grasped," she said.

One work I found particularly striking was a very dark piece Axtell had called "The Laughter Afterwards."

"I think all of them, and certainly that one, have a lot to do with childhood, and it has to do with all the nasty things," she told me. "It is about all the pain and all the fear; all the apprehension, and all the sadness as well as the joy and the magical things."

The "nastier things" don't always get recognized, she said, because they are so painful and therefore so much harder to deal with.

"The way we become adult people is by taking with us those sights and sounds and smells of being a child; by recognizing the really hard things as well as the really sweet things," Axtell said.

No song sacred for Throats

By RICHARD A. BOUCHER, JR.
Collegian Correspondent

Golden Throats
Various Artists
Rhino Records

One day last summer, my friends and I were record shopping when I picked up an album titled Golden Throats: The Great Celebrity Sing-Off!. I hadn't heard a note off the record, but the names and songs listed on the jacket were enough to persuade me to pick it up. As I usually get indecisive when I look for a record, my friends gave me a little extra time to think about it. But I knew they were in a hurry. "Leonard Nimoy . . . singing?" I thought. "William Shatner . . . Andy Griffith?" I bought it, they got their tapes and we left. We listened to my Golden Throats tape on the way home, and we were laughing all the way.

Golden Throats, compiled and dreamt up by Gary Peterson and Pat Sierchio, is a collection of odd songs. But these aren't just any odd songs; this record is either the second coming of party records or a hellish nightmare that strangles treasured songs of the 60s, depending on what you hold sacred. If you can get by the laughably pitiful rendition of "Twist and Shout" by Mae West at the beginning of the second side, and Frankie Randall's sacrilegious "I Can See for Miles," on the first side, you've passed the martyr test for solar tolerance. These are songs recorded in the 60s and 70s by TV stars of that period.

Do you remember Sebastian Cabot from "A Family Affair?" He does two absurd covers of Dylan tunes, or rather, he sort of speaks "It Ain't Me, Babe" and "Like A Rolling Stone." Andy Griffith's "House of the Rising Sun" is almost an equal to the original version. Eddie Albert from "Green Acres" does a wonderfully dramatic and overblown version of "Blowin' in the Wind." This album seems to leave no stone unturned, nothing sacred, yet by its existence, it poses questions, proposes possible suggestions.

Yet we are not done with our account, not until we discuss the songs which are worthy themselves of the price of the record. I wonder if Leonard Nimoy and William Shatner wince in embarrassment or gleam with pride at the memories here. I can almost see Nimoy smiling with joy while singing a slowed down, laid-back "Proud Mary," or reveling in his rollicking version of "If I Had a Hammer," at the end of which he gets hysterically patriotic. Equally as deadly and priceless, maybe even more so, are the two transcendent masterworks by William Shatner. What he does here is both a shame and a scream. In his hands, he transforms "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds" and "Mr. Tambourine Man," two modern classics, into, well, future classics. He speaks these two hilariously in the character for which he's famous, to a Disneyishly magical-sounding background. He becomes a shameless Kirk, freaking out for us here. He lends an almost demonic effect to the songs. Forget those frat rock albums, heave this leviathan onto your turntable or into your tape deck and pray that heaven and earth can withstand the fury that is Golden Throats.

The Union Video Center will show the following this week on the monitors in the Student Union:

Today at 10 a.m. Disney Cartoon Here's Goofy; at 10:22 Goofy Over Sports; at 11 a.m. Beetlejuice; at 1 p.m. The Last Emperor.

Tomorrow, Hollywood Shuffle will be aired at 10 a.m. followed by Harder They Come at noon.

■ Axtell's exhibit

"The Laughter Afterwards," Axtell said, "is definitely the pain and the fear. It is not blatantly about being afraid of the dark. It's not dark for that reason. It is dark to emphasize the pain, fear, and melancholy. In it there are things that come through . . . that brilliant red . .. that come out of the dark places, so it's not just about sadness."

Axtell said the works in this exhibit represent a new direction for her; one which she plans to stay with for a while. Her works are original, refreshing and well worth seeing if you can make the time before the show ends tomorrow. Wheeler Gallery is open from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Mirandolina:the frivolous feminist

By KIM FRISINO
Collegian Correspondent

Mirandolina, by Carlo Goldoni, is the tale of how one woman held the undying affections of four men at one time, received expensive gifts simply for being her, fulfilled a personal promise against a woman-hater, and then won the marriage of a man she loved. It is an 18th-century battle of the sexes — and the female really clears house.

The University of Massachusetts' Department of Theater presented Mirandolina last week in the Curtain Theater, and it really brought the house down. The cast of only six gave a comical and exaggerated peek at the male-female courtship, and how silly and serious it can be.

The story is about a woman (Lee Anne Hutchison) whose father had died six months earlier, leaving her the keeper of a fancy Italian inn. A count (Paul M. Couzyn) and a marquis (Rick O'Neil) are two competitive men, both prolonging their stays at the inn to win the ultimate affections and graces of its eligible keeper.

Fabrizio (Jeffrey T. Donovan) is a longtime servant at the inn who truly loves Mirandolina (and she too secretly loves him), but she is young and beautiful, and has him rapt tightly enough that she can afford to have some feminine fun with the newest boarder, a man who adamantly hates all women because, according to him, they are dishonest. Her victim, this misogynist, is the Baron Ripafratta (Michael Riseberg), and she gets him good. Then, when Mirandolina has trampled down every masculine hope at the inn, things start getting hairy for her. The baron gets violent when he sees that he not only has fallen for a woman, but is at her frivolous mercy. The count and the marquis plan their revenge on her for using them, and even her Fabrizio's love is faltered when he realizes her conniving tricks.

At this point, the audience is unsure who will prevail. But Mirandolina, crafty and charming as she is, wins in the end, by enraging her three unwanted tenants enough to make them leave, and telling Fabrizio that she does love him.

Equally professional as the players themselves, was the set's design and execution; whole corners of the stage were "folded inside-out" to reveal another room - quite innovative indeed.

The Department of Theater's next production is Getting Out, by Marsha Norman. It is about a recently freed woman coming to terms with her past eight years spent in prison. Getting Out will be presented in the Rand Theater on December 8-10 and 14-17 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for students and $4 for the general public.

Audience, panel make UVC show success

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Last night was the beginning of a new phase of the Union Video Council.

The first episode of a new talk show, titled U-Talk, featured members of the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance (LBGA) and Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays(P-FLAG). Speaking before the show began, host Neal Boushell said that the program would be "a good experience for UMass." He added that the show would be a forum for questions not addressed in the media.

Panel members included Jim and Jean Genasci, Amherst coordinators for P-FLAG; Brad Robinson, bisexual activist with the Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Counseling Collective; Susan Morgan, also a member of the Collective; William Curtis, resident assistant in Northeast Residential Area and member of LBGA ; Amerin Falk, co-president of LBGA and bisexual activist. Stacey Beckerman. Prior to the show, they were briefed on the questions to be addressed.

A small but involved audience participated in the questioning of the panelists, and at times lent support to them. At one point, when the question was asked, "Did you choose to be bisexual?", an audience member said to Boushell that there was no choice to be heterosexual or homosexual, but that the person was acting on his/her feelings.

Another question addressed by the audience was the issue of support for lesbians, gays and bisexuals within their religious groups. Jim Genasci responded by referring to the Episcopalian group Integrity, the Catholic group Dignity, and the Metropolitan Community Church in New York City, which is nondenominational. He added that P-FLAG has a list of groups that provide support for lesbians, gays and bisexuals.

Though there were some whisperings of discontent among audience members regarding the subject matter of the questions, the show proceeded with no loud arguments. And although the show began taping 30 minutes behind schedule, there were no real complaints. From all appearances, the show appeared to be successful in its first taping.

HEY, TURKEY!

Of course, we're not referring to you. But if you miss our Thanksgiving Day Special, you just might feel like one!

AC Reed rocks Sheehan's Sat. with own set of blues songs

By J. BREZ MC GUIGAN

A.C. Reed and the Sparkplugs
Sheehan's
Saturday, Nov.19

Great blues music continues to emanate from Sheehan's in Northampton. This past Saturday, it was tenor saxophonist AC Reed and the Sparkplugs who provided the combustion to get the crowd going.

Reed and his band are in the midst of their months-long "Sax for Sale. Cheap" Tour which follows the release of their latest album, I'm in the Wrong Business. That album, incidentally, on Alligator Records, also features appearances by fellow blues stalwarts Bonnie Raitt and Stevie Ray Vaughn.

Certainly, as the album title suggests, the theme of the show was set and expressed in the songs that were played in that album. It was a celebration in song of the blues that the artist intrinsically encounters (no pay, low pay, obscurity, etc.) in that genre of music. For example, Reed began playing sax in the 1940's with Willie Mabon. For decades he has been the primary saxman for bandleaders such as Albert Collins and Buddy Guy. He's been everybody's session man, seemingly destined to play someone else's song. It has taken AC nearly 50 years to form his own band and become a star in his own right.

So now he's writing his own songs, singing them, playing his horn and has emerged from his years in the background intact with a wry assessment of his evolution. When he did songs such as "These Blues is Killing Me," "Fast Food Annie," "The Things I Want to Do to You" and "Take These Blues and Shove 'Em" on Saturday night, the crowd was listening to the lyrics as much as they were feeling the music. Particularly impressive was the difficult three-part vocal harmony provided by the Sparkplugs on numerous songs. The members of the Sparkplugs are: Vance Kelly, lead guitar; Grown Mann, second lead guitar; Douglas Watson, bass and Peet Onion Head on drums.

ENGINEER-IN-TRAINING:

An Investment In The Future

The Engineer-In-Training (E.I.T.) program is designed to provide the newly graduated engineer with an understanding of our industry, corporation and products. As an E.I.T., you will spend your first year working with experienced engineers on projects in our Boiler Design, Stress Analysis and Proposal Engineering groups. You will also gain three months of "hands-on" experience working with our Service Engineers at a customer jobsite. We have several openings in our E.I.T. program for:

Mechanical Engineers (Entry Level)

You must possess a Bachelor's in Mechanical Engineering with an emphasis in Thermodynamics Fluids and Heat Transfer Analysis. Familiarity with the Boiler Industry and Energy Systems is preferred.

When you come to Riley, you will be joining a team of men and women who bring experience, professional dedication and commitment to their work. You may be engineering boiler and fuel burning systems for coal, oil and gas, or you may be designing units fired by such unconventional fuels as bark, bagasse, coffee grounds, petroleum coke or beet pulp. Riley's engineering expertise has been proven in the resource recovery (municipal solid waste) and fluidized bed combustion boiler markets.

An engineering career with Riley leads to either a managerial or technical career path within the engineering functron. Whichever path you choose to follow, this "dual career ladder" allows for professional growth and increased responsibilities. For those with a technical background, positions in project management, estimating, sales and field service are open to you as career options.

E.I.T.'s at Riley gain a special understanding of the company's operations, and insight into how their talents and interests can best advance their careers with our company. Our E.I.T program is an investment in the future – for you and for Riley.

Stories brand Brodkey brilliant

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Stories in an Almost Classical Mode
Harold Brodkey
Alfred A. Knopf

Common characteristics of brilliant male writers include turbulent childhood, obsession with women and sex, and fascination with the self.

Harold Brodkey is no different

His recently-published collection of short stories, Stories in an Almost Classical Mode, reveals a Harvard-educated intellectual whose approach to relationships, and social and family concerns must be described with the term "brilliant." Some of the stories, such as "Innocence" and "Largely an Oral History of My Mother," had previously appeared in such magazines as Esquire and The New Yorker.

The book's opener, "The Abundant Dreamer," is a psychological penetration into the mind of the protagonist, a movie producer who learns while shooting a film in Rome that his grandmother died. Brodkey shows that the protagonist's attempts to suppress his grief and carry out his daily tasks only make images of his grandmother more vivid.

The narrative alternates between the protagonist's lights-camera-action life and flashbacks of younger days.

In "Hofstedt and Jean — and Others," Brodkey delves into the unequivocal realm of sexual desire. He desires Inez, the wife of the protagonist's best friend. The protagonist, a college professor, seeks to find his own Inez by romancing with one of his students.

As the author sees it, one cannot admire a man until one desires his woman.

Brodkey further digs into the confines of sexual desire in "Innocence," whose Harvard setting seems appropriate for a blend of frenzied love-making with philosophical discussions about the subject.

Wiley, the protagonist, manages to get a date with Orra, the object of his desire. When he jumps into bed with her he realizes she isn't the sex virtuoso that her dashing body and his colleagues make her out to be. The realization only compels Wiley to create with her a sexual masterpiece for which they would both be thankful.

The fascination with sex and women seems to have originated in Brodkey's relationship with his adoptive mother, whom he describes as a hideous, selfish and manipulative person in the Freudian tale "A Story in the Almost Classical Mode."

The story reveals how his mother, who suffered from cancer, tormented him with constant accusations of selfishness and cries of pain.

Through this and other autobiographical pieces, the author grows before the readers' eyes. He exposes various dimensions of his life and his philosophical character. Some stories, such as "Angel" are purely philosophical essays, but his philosophy, marked by a degree of fatalism and Judaism, is present through the book.

President-elect George Bush poses with former Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter in front of the Old Executive Office Building in Washington, DC, yesterday.

Former presidents advise Bush on reducing the budget deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration could reduce the nation's budget deficit by $40 billion annually by raising non-income taxes while cutting spending, former Presidents Carter and Ford said in a report released yesterday.

Carter and Ford met with president-elect George Bush to present their report, entitled "American Agenda". A host of influential people, including former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and ex-Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal, contributed ideas to the report.

The ex-presidents listed the budget deficit, which is expected to reach more than $150 billion this year as the No. 1 priority for the Bush administration.

Other proposed priorities, ranked in descending order, are national security and arms control, the savings and loan crisis, Third World debt and international trade, the fate of children at risk and US relations with the allies.

The presidents said Bush's second tier of priorities - issues of compelling and intrinsic importance but not requiring immediate action - should be productivity and education; US relations with the Soviet Union, Mexico, Nicaragua and Central America; the environment, and drugs.

The report suggests taking a number of steps until the budget is balanced. They include holding defense spending at the current level, adjusted for inflation, for four years; increasing Social Security benefits at an annual rate of 2 percent less than the Consumer Price index; reducing Medicare fees for doctors, agriculture price supports and public works and transportation appropriations, while increasing taxes on gasoline, cigarettes, beer and wine.

Baby walkers and crib gyms may be hazardous, reports group

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group, advising Americans to be on the lookout for potential hazards as they shop for childrens' Christmas gifts, yesterday cited baby walkers and crib gyms as products that cause particular concern.

The Consumer Affairs Committee of Americans for Democratic Action said in its annual top quality and safety report that baby walkers, which can tip over or topple down stairs, are "highly dangerous" and led to 20,790 child injury reports to the Consumer Product Safety Commission in 1987.

Crib gyms have caused 674 reported injuries since 1984 and 12 deaths, the committee said. While most manufacturers now include voluntary warning labels that recommend removal of the gym toys when a baby can pull itself up to its hands and knees, many carry no such warning, it said.

"Warnings aren't enough," the committee said, "Crib gyms need to be designed in the first place without hazards. Babies begin to enjoy crib gyms just at the age that parents are advised to remove them. So human nature enters the picture and parents leave the crib gyms a little longer."

Overall, the committee said, toys resulted in 131,000 injuries in 1987, 105,000 of them to children under age 15.

The committee said categories of potentially dangerous toys include:

- Some seasonal toys such as inflatable sleds that throw up snow which could blind the driver.
- Flammable items, including stuffed animals that burn.
- Toys that teach children to imitate adults in a dangerous fashion, such as an electric oven that could burn a child and a play iron with a realistic-looking plug that could send children to the nearest electrical socket.
- Toys that can be dangerous when broken. For example, a medical kit of poor construction that contains instruments which could break while a child puts them up to his face, throat ears or eyes.
- Items that are dangerous for babies, including rattles that don't meet specified width requirements which a baby could poke down its throat and choke on.
- Items with inadequate or misleading age labels.

South cleans up in wake of two dozen tornadoes and storms

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP)—The National Guard was patrolling in Tuscaloosa, Ala., as the South cleaned up yesterday from a barrage of nearly two dozen late-season tornadoes and storms that killed at least two people and damaged more than 150 homes.

The same storm system carried high winds and heavy rains to parts of Ohio and Pennsylvania on Sunday, ripping off the roof of an empty school in southwestern Pennsylvania and toppling a 75-foot Christmas tree in Pittsburgh.

In the Caribbean, Tropical Storm Keith, the season's 11th storm, churned off Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula. Forecasters expect it to reach hurricane strength as it heads into the Gulf of Mexico.

It could hit Florida late in the week.

Twisters skipped across Arkansas, Mississippi and Alabama, uprooting trees, damaging homes and downing power lines this weekend.

The tornadoes struck unusually late in the year, said Harry Gordon of the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

One tornado slammed through a three-mile area near the small northeast Mississippi town of Nettleton, snapping the tops off trees before dipping into a mobile home park and running along a string of hills and valleys.

Two people in mobile homes - a 37-year-old man and a 9-month-old boy - were found dead Sunday after the tornado hit. Eleven others were injured, including on hospitalized in critical condition and one in serious condition.

Ten houses and two businesses were destroyed and 24 homes were damaged, officials said.

"It's terrible," said Gov. Ray Mabus, who toured the area Sunday. "There's nothing that was left standing much in the path of the storm."

Tornadoes also were reported in the Mississippi counties of Simpson, Boilvar, Sunflower and Leake, with at least 25 houses damaged in Simpson.

Three traffic deaths in Mississippi were blamed on wet weather. The weather is believed to have contributed to six traffic deaths in Arkansas since Friday night when a small plane slammed into a mountain in Batesville, Ark., while trying to land in dense fog and thunderstorms. The cause of the crash has not been determined.

A tornado in Tuscaloosa, Ala., early Sunday cut a mile-long path of destruction, damaging homes and knocking out electrical service to 3,600 homes. Nearly 100 homes were damaged or destroyed and six people were injured.

Mike McCarty said he was on his way into the kitchen when the tornado slammed into his two-story home.

"That's when the kitchen came apart," McCarty said Sunday afternoon. "The ceiling just vanished. So did much of our house."

"He brings a lot of knowledge from the bigger schools and puts certain new thoughts in the program," David Brown says. Calipari thought a lot before making the decision to come to UMass.

"It was a challenge coming here," he says. "But I saw a big commitment from the school: a new building, new uniforms, and a recruiting budget that practically doubled."

Says assistant coach Bill Bayno, "I've known John for a long time and what's happening here is no surprise. He's is very enthusiastic, whether it's basketball or anything else. Some coaches treat basketball too much as a business but he looks at it from a players' type of perspective.

"He deals with 15 egos, and it's tough to tell kids they can't play at this level until they improve at something. A lot of kids don't want to hear that or don't want to accept it. But the kids on this team like and respect him, because he's doing as much for you as he's asking of you."

"He's making me better," David Brown says. "He looks at the entire package and improves it. And he treats you the same. Whether you're 15th, or the first player on the team, you get no special treatment. I wish I had him since I was a freshman."

Turning the UMass basketball program around will not be easy. But Calipari has plans.

"I want to create a love affair between the program and the community," he says. "I want to give them a team they're proud of, give them players they're proud of, and give them a staff they want to follow. Do these, and winning will happen.

"I want them to play hard, and see that each kid improves and graduates. I like to see the growth, not just basketball-wise, but academically as well," he said. "It's a heck of a profession."

Sounds like the enthusiasm of 29-year-old man. And the maturity of a much older one.

■ new faces for UMass men's basketball

Last year UMass lived and died by the trey. This year they return the premier long distance 3-point shooter in the conference, last year's All-Freshman team player Rafer Giles.

This year's team returns 10 players from last year's squad. Only Sutton and Wilbur Hicks (6.4 ppg) graduated from the Minutemen ranks.

David Brown is UMass' leading returning scorer but it is Chase that the offense has centered around so far this year. The Minutemen will also bring back Chris Bailey, last year's assist leader.

The New Faces

Calipari isn't the only rookie at UMass, he brings with him four assistant coaches and two highly touted freshman.

There are only four people in the entire UMass program who want to be on the bench every night, Calipari's assistants: Bill Bayno, John Robic, Dave Glover, and Roger McCready of Boston College fame.

Calipari's other new faces, however, won't see the bench that often. Freshman Jim McCoy, from Pittsburgh Pa., and Anton Brown, from Columbia S.C., have already made their impressions on UMass basketball.

McCoy and Brown will be the starting guard tandem for UMass in its first game Saturday— a rare accomplishment for freshmen. In fact, Calipari has enough confidence in his duo that he said they both have the "green light" for the 3-point shot.

Anton said he doesn't feel pressured by being thrust into the starting line-up.

"I think it's my chance to show what I can do," he said.

Likewise, McCoy was surprised but said he is ready for the challenge. "I really didn't look forward to starting this early. I thought I'd work my way into the starting line-up. I've worked pretty hard these past few weeks . . . from now on it's a learning experience."

The schedule

When Temple humiliated North Carolina and Rhode Island dropped Syracuse in the NCAA Tournament last year, the Atlantic 10 took two giant steps forward and so did UMass' toughness of schedule.

Calipari has conceded that Temple and West Virginia are probably "a good head and shoulders" above the rest of the conference but he thinks UMass can compete with either of them on any given night.

Aside from the A-10 opponents, UMass will play two Big East teams (UConn and Boston College) and last year's Div.II defending national champions, Lowell University (As a sneak preview to next year, Calipari said UMass will drop all Div. II teams from next year's schedule. The Minutemen are also trying to gain a commitment from UCLA for a game).

David Brown summed up UMass' position as we enter a new season. "I really don't believe in those pre-season polls . . . we want to earn our respect early. We are in a position to surprise a lot of teams."

Women's swimming knocked off for the first time

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team was handed its first loss of the season Sunday, as the Minutewomen fell to the University of Maine, 175-119 at Boyden Pool.

"That may not sound like a good score, but we've never been within 100 of them," UMass coach Bob Newcomb said.

The Minutewomen, now 3-1 on the year, were able to gather only three first-place finishes in the meet. UMass got off to a good start with a win in the 200-yard medley relay, as the team of Lori Schwarz, Melissa Waller, Sue Gorski and Patty Pike finished in 1:55.44.

"That was just an excellent swim. It's the fastest we've been in the four years I've been here," Newcomb said.

But the good fortune didn't hold up for long. UMass was only able to get victories in the breaststroke events over the remainder of the meet, with Waller taking the 100 in 1:11.04 and Regina Jungbluth winning the 200 in 2:35.81.

Other highlights for the Minutewomen included a pair of second place finishes by Tracy Young (1000- and 500-yard freestyle), Gorski (100- and 200-yard butterfly) and Debbie Mullen (one- and three-meter diving). Taking individual seconds were Schwarz in the 100-yard backstroke, Jungbluth in the 100 breast, Melissa McCarthy in the 200 back and Leslie Cromwell in the 200-yard individual medley.

The team wrapped up the meet with a 2-3 finish in the 400-yard freestyle relay, with the team of Pike, Young, McCarthy and Keira Cruz just edging out the foursome of Theresa Jacobs, Kim Morin, Schwarz and Megan McCamy.

Despite the loss, Newcomb expects the meet to serve a good purpose.

"We're a little disappointed that it wasn't a little closer, but we'll use this as a good learning experience," he said. "I think we're that much better for it."

UMass football heads for playoffs

Minutemen set to battle Eastern Kentucky

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts football team probably spend their Thanksgiving like a lot of other people on this campus: sleep late and spend the day eating and drinking as much as possible.

This year, however, things will be different. The Minutemen will spend Thursday knowing that 48 hours later, they will be playing in the first playoff game of their collegiate careers.

UMass went 8-3 during the regular season to clinch an at-large berth in the Division 1-AA playoffs. It will play Eastern Kentucky State University at 7 p.m. Saturday in Richmond, Ky.

"You always want to spend Thanksgiving with your family, and that's what we'll be doing. It won't be our immediate family, but it's the closest family I've been involved with in terms of football."

—UMass head coach Jim Reid

"You always want to spend Thanksgiving with your family," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "And that's what we'll be doing. It won't be our immediate family, but its the closest family I've been involved with in terms of football."

The UMass football team has been through a lot this season. There was a quick start, followed by two straight losses, followed by four straight wins to finish the season and clinch its first playoff appearance in 10 years.

"As a staff, we've accomplished our goals," Reid said. "But the players extended their goals and that's what's left. From here on out we'll keep things routine."

The one thing the Minutemen cannot work into a normal routine is the flight to Kentucky. But a long road trip is nothing new to the team, which traveled to Indiana, Delaware and Virginia during the regular season.

"We've had a terrible road schedule because of the realignment of the Yankee Conference," Reid said. "We've had some long road trips.

"But this team has a motto: We go anywhere, anytime, if we can play the game of football."

UMass will be facing a powerful team. The Colonels are 9-2 and won the Ohio Valley Conference with a 6-0 record.

Tailback Elroy Harris has sparked the team with 277 carries for 1,543 yards and 21 touchdowns. He averages 5.6 yards per carry.

Sophomore quarterback Lorenzo Fields has completed 82 of 126 passes for 1,223 yards and 8 touchdowns.

For UMass, senior quarterback Dave Palazzi is 144-of-261 for 2,043 yards and 14 touchdowns.

Tailback Kevin Smellie has carried 188 times for 807 yards and 8 touchdowns.

Extra points: As of yesterday, five UMass starters were on the UMass injury list for the Eastern Kentucky game: defensive tackle Steve Brothers, out with a shoulder injury; cornerback Andrew Thomas, doubtful with a thigh injury; flanker Mike Tobin, doubtful with a concussion; fullback David Mitchell, questionable with a sprained ankle; cornerback Garrick Amos, probable with sprained ankle. Also, backup free safety Lance Neveling is out with a shoulder injury.

Six UMass records were broken or tied during Saturday's 64-42 win over the University of New Hampshire. The combined 106 points and 1,192 yards of the two teams are both new records.

The 33 third-quarter points were the most ever scored and the 64 points were the most since the 1931 team beat Wagner, 77-0.

Palazzi broke the record for most yards of total offense with 407 and kicker Silvio Bonvini tied the record for most extra points in a game with 7.

This is the 16th time UMass has won the Yankee Conference championship, which leads all conference teams. The University of Connecticut is second with 14.

The Minutemen have scored 40 or more points four times this season, or in more than one-third of their games.

UMass men's hoop looking to rebound

Minutemen open Saturday

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts men's basketball— those words haven't exactly sent tremors of fear throughout the Northeast in recent years.

The Minutemen haven't had a winning season in eleven years, not since the 1977-78 squad went 15-12.

But now UMass boasts some new players, a new coach, and a new style of play. And, although first-year head coach John Calipari said, "We're not trying to re-invent the wheel," he and his team remain optimistic for the upcoming season, which begins at the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday against Southern Connecticut State University.

"I'm excited about being a head coach, I'm excited about the Atlantic 10 conference— we've got a heck of a conference. The top three or four teams can play with anybody in the country— anybody. . . now we have seven very strong teams that can go out and play with anybody," Calipari said.

Although neither coaches nor players have grand illusions of being the top team in the conference, both think UMass can easily play the part of spoiler.

"We're in a position to surprise a lot of people," UMass captain David Brown said.

This season's campaign will mark the official beginning of the "Calipari era." He replaces Ron Gerlufsen, who had a 55-84 record in five years with the Minutemen.

Most basketball magazine previews have picked UMass to finish in the cellar of the A-10— hoop guru Dick Vitale picked the Minutemen to finish last. Calipari who said he wants to pick up the tempo of the UMass offense, enjoys the underdog status.

"If we finish eighth or ninth, I go back to the athletic department and say I want a three-year extention on my contract," Calipari joked. "We are going to run and press but if you watch us play it's not run and gun."

The low ranking, however, doesn't surprise Calipari.

When your all-time leading scorer, Lorenzo Sutton (19.4 ppg), graduates, you finished ninth in a 10 team conference last year, and you have a rookie head coach— it's difficult to gain the respect of the basketball world, he said.

Senior Duane Chase and his UMass teammates will try to pin their opponents this season.

Last year the Minutemen were 5-13 in the Atlantic 10. UMass ranked last in field goal percentage and rebound margin. So, although the Minutemen will still look to shoot the 3s, coach Cal said he wants to look to senior Duane Chase in the middle for more offense this year.

"Duane has got to score points in the post and we've got to go to him, but maybe by shooting 3s, it opens up for him," Calipari said.

Calipari full of enthusiasm

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

John Calipari really loves basketball, but that's not what sets him apart from other men his age.

It's the fact that at 29, he is one of the youngest head coaches in the nation, a position that often takes the fun out of the game.

Yet Calipari, the first-year head coach at the University of Massachusetts, has no shortage of enthusiasm. And his energy has already made an impact on his players.

"He's bringing a different style here, one that's more exciting and college kids can relate to," UMass captain David Brown says. "Even in practice, he's always moving and he's very vocal."

Calipari has never been passive, and that type of involvement has allowed him to gain a reputation as one of the best recruiters in the nation.

Two UMass freshmen, Anton Brown and Jimmy McCoy, both say Calipari was a major factor in their decisions to attend UMass.

"His enthusiasm is his best point," Brown says. "And when he promises you something, like playing time, he delivers."

"He relates to the players very well," McCoy says. "He's not a hard recruiter. His best thing is that he's serious and he cares about his players. For some coaches, it's just a workshop to run players through. But he looks out for the welfare of the players and he's a fun guy to be around."

But if Calipari has his way, people will remember him for more than his recruiting ability.

"I hope I'm a better coach than a recruiter," he says. "I want to be known as a teacher."

And the Moon, Pa. native already has come solid experience behind him.

Calipari played at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington for two years before finishing his career and graduating from Clarion State. He has coached for six years, as an assistant at the University of Kansas and Pittsburgh University, a pair of basketball powerhouses.

Commission to address housing concerns

By DEBORAH RITTER
Collegian Staff

The scramble for spring semester housing begins this week, and so do the headaches.

In the latest effort to address Amherst's housing problem, Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, has formed the Amherst Commission on Regional Affordable Housing Needs of the Academic Community.

The commission, whose first meeting is set for next week, will locate and appoint a consultant to conduct a year-long study of the problem and make recommendations. Some $40,000 has been earmarked for the project.

With a one-percent vacancy rate, Amherst is in a semi-permanent state of housing emergency, according to the definition set forth by the federal government.

This is bad news for students looking for off-campus housing. Although most will eventually find a place to live, they will pay high rents and often contend with cramped or poorly maintained conditions.

Rosenberg, who also heads a committee in the State House to study the state-wide problem of housing for higher education, said "the first thing we have to do is study the problem. It's more complicated than students paying more to live off-campus than on."

"It's clear that the availability of housing is an issue in the recruitment and retention of faculty," he said. "We know that a large percentage of the support staff commutes a fair distance because they can't afford to live in Amherst."

In its search for solutions, the new commission will look at how other communities are handling the housing problem, Rosenberg said.

"Housing shortages in towns where large universities are located is a nationwide issue," he said. "I'm doing my own informal inventory of current strategies right now.

Football bows to Eastern Kentucky

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

RICHMOND, Ky. — There is a 21-year-old legend in Eastern Kentucky by the name of Elroy Harris. Everyone knows about him and everyone admires him.

He can run through any defense, they say. He can score against any team.

The University of Massachusetts found out Saturday night why Harris receives so much attention and, more importantly, why he deserves it.

"They're a better team. We needed to execute perfectly and we didn't do it."

— UMass head coach Jim Reid

The junior tailback rushed for 192 yards and a touchdown to lead Eastern Kentucky University to a 28-17 victory over the Minutemen in an NCAA Division 1-AA playoff game at Hanger Field.

"If there is a better back in the country in 1-AA, I'd like to see him," said Eastern Kentucky head coach Roy Kidd, who in his 25th year is even more of a loacl cult hero than Harris.

Kidd's teams have made the playoffs three straight years, and nine of the last 10. They have won two national championships, and their playoff record is now 12-6.

With Saturday's win, their ninth in a row, the Colonels will play host to Western Kentucky Saturday in the second round.

The Minutemen finish the season at 8-4.

"They're a better team," UMass head coach Jim Reid said. "We needed to execute perfectly and we didn't do it."

The Minutemen certainly didn't do it in the third quarter, when they had a 14-6

Professor: UMass unlikely site of shake-up

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

Although an earthquake fault zone grazes Amherst near the Pelham line, the Pioneer Valley is one of the least likely areas of New England to be struck by a tremor, according to University of Massachusetts geology professor Donald Wise.

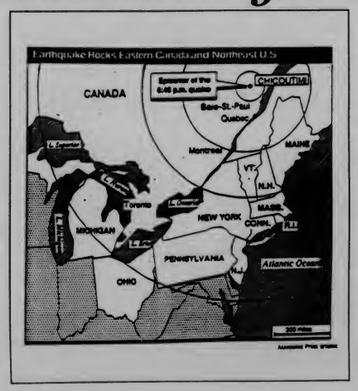
Wise, who is studying fracture patterns from old earthquakes, said there are plenty of other places within 50 to 100 miles that are much more likely to have seismic activity.

"This is not to say that tomorrow we couldn't have a huge quake on our hands," he said.

Friday, a quake struck the Quebec province of Canada and the impact was felt as far away as Washington, D.C. — a distance of about 800 miles. The earthquake measured 6.0 on the Richter scale. According to the scale, a quake of this magnitude can cause severe damage. A temblor measuring 7 or more can cause widespread, heavy damage.

The tremor, which was felt in Western Massachusetts, caused switchboards at area police stations to light up and the control tower at Westover Airforce Base in Chicopee was evacuated for 10 minutes.

Wise said a fault line runs from Dartmouth, N.H. to Long Island Sound cutting through the eastern side of the Connecticut River Valley on the fringe of Amherst. This fault zone "shows no signs of activity," he said.



"In terms of seismic patterns," Wise said, "Western Massachusetts seems to be a dead spot."

The chances of a major quake hitting the area are very slim, he said, "but you can never be completely sure." Old faults can be reactivated, he said.

Even if an earthquake did strike the region, the UMass community should not be worried about disasters like campus towers crashing to the ground, he said. The structures' frames are reinforced with steel, and buildings constructed this way are usually quite sturdy, Wise said.

"One would wonder what might happen with the bricks on the Tower Library," he said. Structural problems, including falling bricks, have plagued the almost 20-year-old building since its beginnings.

The worst type of structures are those made with rounded cobblestone because the stones tend to be jarred loose during earthquakes, Wise said.

History shows the Pioneer Valley is not a danger zone. If there has not been a major tremor in millions of years, then the odds of one occurring in a given person's life span are very low, he said.

But in New England and New York state there are many fault zones, Wise said. Earthquakes do occur in the eastern part of the nation, "and there have been some very big ones."

In 1755, a quake hit Cape Ann, a point about 30 miles northeast of Boston. It is believed the tremor had a force of about 6.2 on the Richter scale.

WORLD/NATION

Tables turned on top Mass. cop, investigated by Justice Dept.

BOSTON (AP) — Marijuana, politics and charges of questionable judgment have conspired to make a top New England law enforcement official the subject of investigation instead of the investigating subject.

Frank L. McNamara, Jr., US attorney for Massachusetts, faces a Justice Department inquiry after revelations he may have lied about witnessing his predecessor smoke marijuana six years ago.

McNamara, a 41-year-old Republican appointed by President Reagan in April 1987, also faces the ire of many of his assistants, who say he lacks credibility and has used his position for political reasons.

"He does not have the confidence of his staff," said one assistant US attorney who spoke on condition of anonymity. "No one believed he was close to the most qualified person when he was selected, but we gave him the benefit of the doubt. That initial willingness to be open-minded has been eroded."

McNamara has denied any impropriety.

"I've done nothing wrong," he declared in an interview with The Associated Press last week, the last time he has spoken publicly about his charges.

"People have been saying a lot of things about me since I first began public life," he said. "If I were to base my actions on the idle and uninformed speculation of those people, I wouldn't leave my house in the morning."

LBGA to hold vigil for Harvey Milk tomorrow

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

We don't have enough national heroes, said the president of the Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance at the University of Massachusetts.

To recognize one of the heroes they do have, LBGA President Amerin Falk organized a vigil to commemorate the assissination of the nation's first openly gay city official, Harvey Milk.

The vigil, to be held from 5 to 5:45 p.m. tomorrow on the steps of the Fine Arts Center, will begin with the distribution of candles, ribbons and song sheets. There will be a student speaker and a speaker from the Faculty/Staff Group, Falk said.

At 5:30 p.m., they will ring the Old Chapel bells, light candles and ask for a moment of silence. Falk said the vigil will end in song and some participants are planning to play guitars.

Falk described Milk as "a good person and a good politician who happened to be openly gay."

Georganne Greene, co-chair of the Faculty/Staff Group For Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Concerns, said Milk, a San Francisco city supervisor, was "the first public role model for the gay community."

It was a huge political victory, said Greene, to be openly gay and win an election in the late 1970s.

Milk didn't just support gay rights, Greene said, "he talked about the connectedness of all people. He ran for office not out of wanting power for himself, but because he wanted to create a place for all people to be themselves."

Milk was assassinated by former City Supervisor Dan White on November 27, 1978 in his San Francisco office.

According to an article in Sunday's Boston Globe Magazine, "it was Milk's gayness that brought about his death."

Anticipating this possibility, Milk made a tape "to be played only in the event of my death by assassination."

On the tape, cited in the Boston Globe Magazine, Milk asked "for the movement to continue, for the movement to grow, because last week I got the phone call from Altoona, Pennsylvania, and my election gave somebody else, one more person, hope. And after all, that is what this is all about. It's not about personal gain, not about ego, not about power — it's about giving those young people out there in Altoona, Pennsylvania, hope. You gotta give them hope."

Falk said the LBGA chose to do this event because "in the last 10 years [Milk's accomplishments] haven't been talked about enough.

"We don't have a chance to come together as a community very often, especially to commemorate someone who was so important to us," she said. "We hope a lot of people feel the way we do and come join us."

OCHO offers rental listings, counselling to students

Founded in 1976, the Off-Campus Housing Office handled about 20,000 walk-ins last year, according to Director Joanne Levenson.

Located directly above the People's Market in the Student Union Building, OCHO serves other functions as well.

"Besides rental listings, we offer counseling in any aspect of the landlord-tenant relationship.

"Also, we do a lot of advocacy work on behalf of tenants. Renters are at a disadvantage in Amherst because of the tight housing market," she said.

OCHO is a co-sponsor of the Pioneer Valley Oil Cooperative, Levenson said.

"Anyone who uses oil to heat can join," she said.

"You buy oil through a local dealer at five to 15 cents below the average rate. The prevailing rate in Amherst right now is 77 cents per gallon. Ours is 60 cents.

"We're the only university in the country that has an oil coop," she said.

Amherst plagued by housing crunch

The University of Connecticut, for example, has turned to private developers to construct industrial space that serves as technology transfer for its research programs. That developer will also be building a complex of 300 rental units."

For the last 15 years, the town has limited the construction of new housing through a combination of a building moratorium and zoning restrictions.

Levenson said the government should consider offering tax incentives to developers who build low-income housing.

Jane Nevins, commission member and director of the Pioneer Valley Housing Association, said that UMass should assume more of the burden for providing housing for its students. Rosenberg agreed that the University needs to examine the idea. Ten years ago, he came up with his own proposal.

The decision to limit growth was based on the "bottomless pit" theory, which holds that Amherst is such a desirable place to live that no matter how much new housing is built, the demand can never be satisfied. Students, faculty, and staff would move in from the outlying areas, the argument goes, and rents would continue to stay high while the town would expand beyond the point where it could provide adequate municipal services.

Gerald Jones, general manager of D.H. Jones Realty Inc., disagrees with this reasoning and said the town should reverse its anti-growth policy.

"Last spring the town lifted the building moratorium, but zoning restrictions are still preventing construction," he said. "If the town would allow more units, the rents would go down and we wouldn't need a Rent Review Board. After all, the biggest thing a landlord fears is an empty apartment.

"An additional 50-100 units would open up the market," he said.

Jones' assertion that a free market will regulate itself was challenged by Joanne Levenson, commission member and director of the UMass Off-Campus Housing Office.

"For one thing, 100 more units would not begin to make a dent in the problem," she said. "For another thing, the housing market needs more regulation, not less. Landlords have all the leverage in this town."

"I had the idea of 'theme houses,' organized around academic or other common interests," he said. "The idea fits the same profile as the Greek system, but without the formal organizational structure."

Rosenberg declined to comment on the recent decision to rezone the area on North Pleasant Street known as Fraternity Row, but he did say UMass should appreciate how the Greek system takes some of the pressure off UMass to provide housing.

"With 1200 students participating, the Greek system should be a vital part of the housing strategy," he said.

Rosenberg said that Amherst will soon be facing additional demands on the housing market because of an influx of senior citizens who choose Amherst as the place they want to retire to.

"Everywhere I go lately, I'm meeting constituents who have recently retired here," he said. "They tell me they like Amherst because it's quiet, relatively rural, and culturally stimulating. And it's a quick drive to New York or Boston.

"Right now there are three proposals to build retirement communities," he said. "That's a new segment of the population no one figured on.

"It's hard to imagine any scenario short of UMass going bankrupt and closing that will reduce the housing demand here."

D.H. Jones real estate prospers in Amherst

D.H. Jones.

The signs are everywhere, but what is D.H. Jones?

According to General Manager Gerald Jones, the company is the oldest and largest landlord and real estate agency in the Pioneer Valley.

Gerald's father, Denison H. Jones, started the business more than 30 years ago.

"We started out small, but now we personally own or manage 500 rental units," Jones said. "We have a whole variety of rentals, from homey-type houses to small complexes like Crestview and Mill Hollow."

Many students are already familiar with the agency, because its rental office is "geared toward students and faculty," he said.

The rental office handles listings for free and also has a roommate referral service, he said.

The self-assured McNamara, a Massachusetts native who challenged former House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. in 1982, has been hit by a welter of charges in the last month.

The Justice Department's internal inquiry began after investigators found "overwhelming" evidence to contradict McNamara's claim that he saw his predecessor, William F. Weld smoke marijuana at a 1982 wedding party in Virginia.

During the Weld probe, McNamara admitted that he had smoked marijuana as recently as 1984, a revelation critics have seized to paint McNamara, who has touted his office's drug prosecutions, as hypocritical.

Three sources in the US attorney's office last week said McNamara doggedly pursued an investigation of a prison land deal by the administration of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in an attempt to discredit Dukakis, then the Democratic presidential front-runner.

In addition, prosecutors charged that McNamara engineered an office reshuffle two days after Election Day for political reasons, demoting First Assistant US attorney Richard G. Stearns, an active Democrat who was a key young campaign worker for George McGovern in 1972.

Other revelations about McNamara have been aired since the marijuana charge:

(bullet) Officials in Washington said McNamara's confirmation was held up because he failed to pay income tax for 1983 and 1984 until two years ago. The delay turned up during a routine FBI background check.

Stearns has said he plans to leave the office, joining at least four other assistant prosecutors who have departed this year, in part because of McNamara, sources said.

"Everybody who's left that office didn't want to leave that office," one prosecutor said. "A lot of people waited, hoping that Frank would change — or that the Democrats would win and there would be a new US attorney."

Inquest on police cadet's death begins six weeks after collapse

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — A closed-door inquest begins today into the death of a young police cadet who died six weeks after he collapsed on the running track of a state training academy.

Timothy Shepard, 25, died Nov. 2. He collapsed from heat stroke six weeks previously after his first day of training at the state-run training academy in Agawam.

District Court Judge Irving Goldblatt, who is conducting the inquiry, said he would devote the first day of the inquest to organizing the list of witnesses and the course of the inquiry.

"I don't even have a full idea of the complement of people who will testify," he said.

District Court First Justice George Bregianes had said the inquest could take at least two weeks. He said Goldblatt will write a report after receiving a transcript of the testimony, which should take another several weeks. In that report, Goldblatt will cite the official cause of death and say whether there are grounds for criminal charges.'

His report will be made public if there are no grounds for criminal charges, but if the judge sees evidence of a crime, the report will be submitted to the district attorney, who will proceed to a grand jury.

Abortion protest results in 8 arrests

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE — The Brookline police force called in all available resources Saturday morning, combining forces with a fleet of state troopers to contain more than 400 anti-abortion and pro-choice demonstrators outside the Planned Parenthood clinic on Beacon Street.

Eight people were arrested in the metropolitan area's second anti-abortion protest since members of Operation Rescue, a militant anti-abortion organization, blockaded the Gynecare clinic on Tremont Street in Boston last month.

A Brookline police spokesman said the protests were "peaceful" and the clinic was not shut down but noted the demand for police protection is becoming expensive because many of the officers are on overtime pay.

"It's an on-call situation," he said. "We got everyone we could."

Operation Rescue leader Darroline Firlet, one of the eight people arrested, said the protests will continue until Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 US Supreme Court decision to legalize abortion, is overturned and a human rights amendment is added to the the US Constitution.

"It is not a protest, it's a rescue," she said in a phone interview yesterday. "We are physically but peacefully placing our bodies between the mothers and the abortionists."

Firlet, pastor of the Choice for Life ministries, said the pro-abortion activists are denying themselves their basic right to motherhood.

"They're saying it's a choice, but it's not," she said. "They are being driven by bitterness and hate. They really don't believe it's a baby."

Firlet's daughter, Heidee, a teenager who attended her third rally Saturday, said "pro-death" activists are misled about abortion.

"Abortion is murder," she said. "Two victims go into the clinic and only one comes out.

"In the school system, we're told [the fetus] is just a blob," she said. "It's not, it is a human being."

Ellen Convisser, president of the Boston chapter of the National Organization for Women, said the pro-choice turnout for the counter-rally, "Stand Up For Choice" was significant despite the lack of student turnout due to Thanksgiving break.

"We chanted and sang and showed a strong pro-choice support," she said. "This is an issue where more people are angry. It has created such a backlash."

The chapter is a key organizer in a pro-choice coalition of phone trees to call more than 1000 counter-demonstrators to action when Operation Rescue targets a clinic, Convisser said.

"It doesn't matter when they hit," she said. "We are prepared at any time to have a rally. People are ready to do this."

Although the anti-abortionists did not succeed in closing the clinic, Convisser said the protesters created a "stressful" situation for women attempting to enter.

"It was rough," she said. "People go in for other services, but everyone goes in suspect."

Convisser said NOW memberships and donations are increasing in response to anti-abortion protests and the potential overturning of the Roe vs. Wade decision.

Pro-choice activists are planning to rally on April 9 in Washington D.C. to support the "March for Women's Lives and Rights," Convisser said.

"It activates people," she said. "There are so many people who are willing to come out and be there."

■ Earthquakes

This was the last major earthquake to strike the Boston area, and the Boston Globe reported yesterday that one authority on seismic activity in New England said the region is overdue for another.

"I can say statistically we are due, but that's not a prediction by any stretch of the imagination," said John Ebel of Boston College's Weston Observatory.

"We have every reason to believe that an earthquake of the size of Friday night could strike in Maine or Massachusetts or northern New England sometime in the future," he said.

They make me afraid to live in my own home

Ashamed.

This is how I felt about my hallmates after they threatened physical violence on a male friend of mine. During "Jerry's" (not his real name) visit from Hampshire College, we joined about six of my hallmates in a discussion. Our conversation varied from food to abortion to education. Jerry's opinions contrasted a bit more from those of my floormates. For example, he did not believe that a creation should be considered a baby at conception. Jerry also looked a bit different form the others. His blonde hair swung across his forehead and formed a tail in the back. However, no one expressed a problem with him.

Dana Goldfarb

Later, two of my other hallmates returned for the night. These men had previously consumed alcohol as had many of the floormates who were in the discussion. Although the term "men" seems highly inappropriate ("juviniles" seems more fitting), I will use the term "men" because of their age.

People, including Jerry, commented on the two men's evening events. Specifically, Jerry didn't see the point in them continuing to drink at 4 a.m. Then, the floormates entered one room and shut the door, leaving Jerry and I in the hall. A few minutes later, one of the intoxicated men said that Jerry had "pissed off" his "easygoing" roommate, that he wasn't wanted here in their "home", and if he didn't leave now, they would have to use violence. Jerry was not overjoyed by his options, but he would not leave on account of these men. For hours we tried to civilly discuss the problem and get some concrete reasons for my floor's reaction to Jerry. The result was that those who were intoxicated would contradict themselves and make more threats of "breaking bones." They told us that Jerry was dumb to remain in the dorm while at another time, one man told us that his friends were acting like idiots.

The group of men approached us when they were supposedly going to do their stuff. Jerry's legs were trembling while I tried to keep tears form forming in my eyes. They saw that Jerry wasn't voluntarily leaving. One by one, they went back to their rooms.

This incident was completely unnecessary. We were arguing about an issue that the men could not defend but since there were more of them and it was their turf, they could threaten my friend. Was it his looks? Was it his opinions? No matter how he differed from them, there was no excuse for their behavior.

Among their earlier threats, my floormates said that they really liked me; that this had nothing to do with me. How can they say that when they were going to hurt someone I care about? I have never felt so helpless, so embarrassed, and so ashamed. Never before have I seen a group of men take advantage of their size and number to threaten another.

The following morning I received apologies from two of my floormates. It reduced some of the tension I felt, but it doesn't erase this incident.

I couldn't let this happen without telling this campus that such outrageous events occur here. What right do these men have to threaten violence to my friend? Their turf is my home! I don't feel safe bringing any of my friends to my floor. I will continue to reside on my floor. Scared.

Dana Goldfarb is a UMass student

They said it . . .

"The inhabitants of this Country," wrote William Dampier, the English sea dog who in 1688 became the first Englishman to record his impressions of Australia, "are the miserablest people in the World. . .Setting aside their humane shape, they differ but little from Brutes." Early this year, English journalist Auberon Waugh, who seems to have inherited his father Evelyn's racism if not his genius, visited Sydney for the Australian bicentennial. "They had no form of civil society at all, beyond whatever social organization may be observed in a swarm of locusts," he wrote of the Aborigines. Their art "must be judged by the merest piffle by civilized standards."

From brutes to insects, in only 300 years: what an evolution for English thought! In between, for the Aborigines, a long and melancholy history of invasion, resistance, murder, rape, rum, and the destruction of tribal identity by white paternalism and greed.

And yet they did survive. There are more than 225,000 Aborigines living today, about 1.5 percent of Australia's population, and instead of dying out (as most whites around 1900 assumed they would), they are increasing their numbers. The fate of these people is now one of the prime moral dilemmas Australia faces. It has also more whites more aware of the realities of the Aboriginal culture.
— Robert Hughes, Time, Oct. 31

Politics and other rhetoric

A new option for pregnant women

A drug called RU486 was introduced in France. This drug is made to induce an abortion in the earliest stages of pregnancy. It inhibits the production of progesterone in the body which is necessary to maintain a normal pregnancy. When the drug is administered, the lining of the uterus is shed. The drug produces the same result as a miscarriage.

Meredith O'Brien

Physicians have stated that the use of RU486 is safer and less painful than an abortion. In order to receive the drug, a woman must obtain a prescription from her doctor. By going to a personal physician, she can get advice from someone who knows her and her medical history well, unlike a clinician.

The French drug company that produces RU486 took the drug off the market due to the due to the enormous political pressure from pro-life advocates. The French government forced the company to put the drug back on the market. The reasoning behind their action was their belief that the women of France have the right to choose to use the drug and that pressure groups should not inhibit that right.

If the drug were introduced in this country such pro-life groups as the militant Operation Rescue groups, would be exert the same (if not more) political pressure on American drug companies. The entire movement of the anti-abortionists would lose its intensity and effectiveness through the production of RU486 in this country.

The powers of organizations like Operation Rescue lie in the power to picket and protest in front of abortion clinics. Using RU486 would make these protests pointless. Since the drug is safer and easier than abortions, more women would go to personal physicians. Where could these pressure groups protest? There would be a substantial reduction in visits to abortion clinics except for routine gynecological exams. Pro-life groups would be rendered powerless; they can't exactly protest in front of every doctor's office. Their movement would die out because of the inability to be effective in preventing abortions. This is what scares pro-life advocates.

RU846 would be an excellent alternative for American women. Not only would it be physically safer for them, but it would put these women out of the reach of the extreme and hostile harassment of Operation Rescue groups. Women could make their decisions without being called "killers" or having photos of aborted fetuses thrust in their faces.

The decision to have any abortion is a very personal one. No government should legislate with blanket statements what a woman can do with her own body. Our government has a duty to provide women with all of the choices available to them. No one facet of the American public should be able to intimidate a drug company from introducing a beneficial drug to the female population.

We should all have equal opportunities available to us — not just opportunities dictated to us by one portion of American citizens. Simply because the option is there doesn't mean that we have to take it, but it is our choice. It should be our choice.

Neo-nazis stir up hatred — against themselves

After having just read an article in the latest issue of Rolling Stone (the one with Stevie Winwood on the cover) about the neo-nazi skinheads and the W.A.R. (White Aryan "Resistance"), I needed an outlet to vent my anger and disillusionment.

I consider myself somebody who tries to think about other people in my actions; someone following (or trying to follow) the example of Jesus Christ in my life. I believe this includes showing respect for other people and loving others as I love myself and God.

However, I'm having a problem with these people who hurt others because they're "different". As I was reading this article, which includes some accounts of these skinheads' atrocities (such as nailing a former colleague to a wall by his hands), I felt anger and hate. I know it's not bad to feel these things and I know it's natural, but I really wanted to kick the crap out of these skinheads. They give the hairstyle and the non-oppressive people who wear their hair this way a bad name.

I believe violence is wrong. Hitting first or hitting back has always been out with me. I want to learn to love people with the love I believe Jesus has for me. However, sometimes when I see something like this I have the most awful thoughts of violent revenge in my mind.

Somebody please tell me why some people in the article were proud of their racism and what they do. Why? "Hands Across UMass" was a big step in the direction of love for everyone, but things like this threaten to turn "Hands" into fists. I almost wish I hadn't read the article or heard of these "skins," then I could go on believing that nothing's wrong.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo brings South Africa to the Valley

By CHRIS A. MUTHER

Ladysmith Black Mambazo
Fine Arts Center

The South African a cappella vocal group Ladysmith Black Mambazo played to a packed concert hall Tuesday night, marking their first appearence in the area. Formed in 1970, the band has released 26 albums, most in South Africa, and have recently won a Grammy award for their 1986 album Shaka Zulu. Work with Paul Simon on his Graceland album have brought the band in the spotlight and Tuesday's stop in Amherst was just part of a massive world tour that has included stops in Canada, Mexico, Europe, Australia and New Zealand.

■ Ladysmith

Lead by Joseph Shabalala, Ladysmith's spritual songs are highlighted by striking harmonies and smooth melodies that earned the group a standing ovation. They earned their name in South Africa by their ability to beat all other bands in vocal competitions. Performing songs from early albums as well as songs from their forthcoming album Journey Of Dreams, the group drew the best response from songs from the Graceland album. These include the critically acclaimed 'Homeless' and 'Diamonds On The Soles Of Her Shoes.'

Along with an incredible sound, the band is equally as exciting visually. Dance moves that should have a warning not to be attempted by amateurs are a trademark of the group and have landed them appearances on shows including the Tonight Show and Saturday Night Live. All ten members of the vocal band harmonized brilliantly while making dance steps the Rockettes would envy. The group ended the evening by singing the South African anthem to a standing audience.

Karla Bonoff, who opened for Ladysmith, began her career in music as a songwriter. Her songs have been recorded by Linda Ronstadt and Bonnie Raitt. Her set included older material ranging from her 1977 debut album to songs from her forthcoming album New World. Singing with a guitar or piano as her only backup, Bonoff put out an impressive one woman show. Her distinct vocal style had the qualities of an early seventies songstress, especially pitted against the solo guitar.

Although a talented song writer, Bonoff's songs mostly reflect broken romance, or, as she explained, 'This song is about a real jerk,' making her set somewhat limited. She ended the set with what she dubbed as her 'greatest hit medley,' which was her seventies hit 'Personally.' It was a nice trip down memory lane.

Gyuto Monks to chant at Smith

The Gyuto Tantric Choir, a group of 21 Tibetan monks, will end its tour of 13 US cities with a performance at John M. Greene Hall at Smith College on Tuesday, Dec. 13 at 8 p.m.

The monks have been trained to use their voices in a way not normally known to human voices by reshaping their vocal cavity. For example, individual monks can sing in three-note major chords. The reshaped vocal cavities can sing these chords in such a way that they resonate intensely enough to be heard.

The monks' history has been rocky. Originally, the rituals to be performed Tuesday night were secret, to be used only for initiates of advanced, or tantric, Buddhism. Indeed, according to MIT professor Huston Smith, who was the first westerner to hear and record the monks' chants, there is symbolic power to the sound. He added that, in singing in their unique style, they were, "tapping into the Power of God and transmitting its very essence."

This secrecy ended when the Chinese occupied Tibet in 1959. The monks escaped to India, and redeveloped their monastic culture, which had been destroyed with the occupation. Despite the difficulties with refugee existence, the monks have managed to survive and continue their training.

Since music is an expression of the monks' blissful state in meditation, they use different media to evoke the sacred realms of their deities. This includes painted images, hand gestures, costumes, ritual objects and instruments such as the long horn, cymbals and drums.

The monks' visit to the US is sponsored by Tibet House, a non-sectarian educational and cultural institution, and 360 Degree Productions. Proceeds from the tour will go to the Tibetan refugees, the Gyuto Monastery in Bumdilla, India and Tibet House. Tickets are $12.50, and can be purchased at Beyond Words Bookshop in Northampton and at all Ticketron outlets.

D.A. stood knee deep in Bronx

By COSMO MACERO JR.

Big City D.A.
Mario Merola with Mary Giordano
Random House

Mario Merola is regarded as one of the most outspoken and controversial District Attorneys in the history of this country's judicial system. His account, Big City D.A., is laced with the intriguing stories of Son of Sam, Buddy Jacobson and Melanie Caine, the 1976 arson rampage that plagued New York City and the constant menace of New York's juvenile delinquents. Merola died in October, 1987, and Random House's posthumous release is clearly aimed at the audience that gobbled up Richard Nixon's Memoirs, G. Gordon Liddy's Will and the biographies of Lee Iacocca and Donald Trump.

There are few flaws in this well written book. What stumbling points Merola himself may have had were overcome with the help of Giordano. The informal, storytelling style is refreshing, relaxing, hard hitting and often humorous.

Within the text, there's a well crafted model of hard nosed crime: "the .44 caliber killer assigned himself a name. He was Son of Sam . . . what it came to mean was terror . . . unmitigated terror."

Jimmy Breslin contributed the forward to*Big City D.A.* He points out Merola's rock-solid devotion to the law: " . . . Mario Merola was living a life that goes down as an example . . . Everybody who knew him hoped that he had left the Bronx some of his honesty."

True, however, Merola pulls no punches in critiquing the system he worked in all his life: "George Agosto was a parole violator, who technically should have been in jail. Instead, he was out shooting cops. The parole board . . . their goal is to get people out, keep the system flowing." Merola hits the point hard on every subject.

There's plenty here to keep anyone busy for awhile. Thumbs up to the D.A.

Bah Humbug! Ebeneezer Scrooge is confronted by ghost in bondage: Jacob Marley, in the Nebraska Theater Caravan's production of A Christmas Carol. The Dickens classic will come to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Thursday, Dec. 8, at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the FAC Box Office.

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

If you're like a lot of people, your longest-lasting memory of college is the student loan you're still paying back. The Army has a solution, though: qualify, sign up with us, and we'll sign off on your loan.

Each year you serve as a soldier, the Army will reduce your college debt by 1/3 or $1,500, whichever amount is greater. So after serving just 3 years, your government loan could be completely paid off.

You're eligible for this program if you have a National Direct Student Loan, or a Guaranteed Student Loan, or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975. The loan must not be in default.

Get a clean slate, by erasing your college debt. Take advantage of the Army's Loan Repayment Program. Your local Recruiter can tell you if you qualify.

Some more hustle from Anton created another steal, as the Minutemen were scrapping and pressing the Owls all over the floor. He then fed McCoy for a heavy-duty dunk before finishing off the spurt with a coast-to-coast run through the lane.

From that point on, it was just a matter of putting the Owls to bed. Southern Connecticut never got closer than 16 the rest of the way. The lead grew to as much as 30 with 3:36 to play on Beetle's 10-foot kiss off the glass.

The Minutemen went much of the second half with a three-guard offense, with red-shirt freshman Ishmael Butler filling the third spot for the most part. In his first collegiate game, the walk-on from Seattle scored six points.

"Maybe our best team is with three guards," Calipari said. "He [Butler] has been great. He's been on the third team all year, but when we went to the small lineup, we put him in. He's been working hard, so I played him."

Calipari would take no credit for what had transpired in the early goings of the half. He said that it was all a matter of the team getting itself in the right frame of mind to hammer the Owls all the way back to New Haven.

"They made the effort in the second half. They played harder and I'm proud of them," Calipari said. "We're just looking for effort. There were no changes and we didn't do anything fancy. They knew that if they picked it up a little, they could win. They've got to have that inner drive.

"In the first half it didn't seem like we had it. In the second half, all five players came out and played hard," he said. "We didn't come to play. We have to start the game the way we started the second half."

The Minutemen simply didn't have it together in the early going. Despite a tremendous height disadvantage, the Owls were holding their own on the boards, and the backcourt play of brothers Mike and Angelo Parenti was creating good penetration.

UMass knocked home the first four points on a pull up jumper by Anton and a jumper by Chase, before the Owls, behind game-high scorer Rick Radicioni (24 points, 12 rebounds) came back to take a 5-4 edge. The Minutemen moved back ahead at 10-7 on Anton's baseline drive.

With 13:53 left and Aaron Martin preparing to go to the line for SC, the scoreboard above center court began to smoke. It wasn't because the teams were lighting it up. They weren't. It was later attributed to a motor which had burned up inside.

After some deliberation, the board was lowered to the floor and disconnected, and play resumed 26 minutes later with the time and score being kept on the sidelines. But what a way to ice down a free throw shooter.

After that break, UMass twice had leads of nine points before the Owls fought back to force a tie at the half.

"At halftime I went out to my car and I was going to drive home. One of the assistants had to come out and get me," Calipari joked.

After the second half showing, Calipari was glad he stuck around.

Down 28-24, senior co-captain Christel Zullo put the Minutewomen ahead for good, nailing a jumper and then sticking a three-pointer to give the Minutewomen the lead, 29-28 with 18:58 left to play.

Junior center Helen Freeman then cashed in on a pair of inside moves to put UMass up 33-28, capping off a nine-point run to begin the second half. From there, the Minutewomen were off and running.

Freeman led UMass with 18 points, including 14 in the crucial second half. Sophomore forward Keyburn McCusker added 16 points, 10 of those coming after intermission.

UMass led by as much as 15 points, at 59-44 with 3:08 to play, before clearing the bench in the final few minutes.

Zullo and junior Michele Pytko each added eight points from their guard spots. Pytko had eight rebounds, all on the defensive boards. McCusker led the Minutewomen with 13 boards.

The Minutewomen open their home schedule Wednesday, hosting Boston University at 5 p.m. at Curry Hicks Cage.

Editor's note: Look for a complete preview of the UMass women's basketball team later this week in the Collegian.

Pats don't get a kick out of Staurovsky, 24-21

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Dean Biasucci put Indianapolis ahead with a 28-yard field goal with 2:22 remaining Sunday, and New England's Jason Staurovsky missed a 27-yarder as time expired to preserve the Colts' 24-21 victory.

It was the second missed field goal of the game for Staurovsky, who six minutes earlier failed on a 43-yard attempt that would have given the Patriots the lead.

The Colts had to punt three plays after Saturovsky's first miss, but New England's Irving Fryar dropped the ball and Colt rookie Michael Ball recovered at the 20, setting up Biasucci's winning field goal.

Eric Dickerson, who scored two first-half touchdowns but was held to 45 yards rushing, ran twice to the 15 and Albert Bentley ran once to the 11 before Biasucci kicked the field goal on fourth down.

The Indianapolis victory left both teams at 7-6, battling for AFC wild-card playoff spots.

Minutemen eliminated by EKU, 28-17

lead and a steady wind at their backs that got as high as 35 miles per hour.

At that point, UMass seemed in control. But the EKU defense held the Minutemen in check, and Harris came alive, running through the UMass defense almost at will.

"He's a great back," UMass noseguard Joe Cullen said. "He's fast and powerful. He's the best we've seen all year."

In the first half, Harris, who leads the nation in rushing yards and scoring per game, gained 92 yards but his team had just six points to show for it. But in the second half, Harris and his line were able to push back the UMass defense.

"They set us up," UMass linebacker John McKeown said. "I was getting caught inside on every play."

"I don't think Harris did anything that his offensive line shouldn't take full credit for," Reid said.

After Silvio Bonvini put UMass up 17-14 with a 26-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter, Harris carried on six of the next eight plays as the Colonels drove to the UMass 7-yard line.

On the next play, however, EKU quarterback Lorenzo Fields fumbled. UMass defensive tackle Steve Robar recovered, and the Minutemen had the ball back.

But after three plays gained eight yards, UMass had to punt.

Harris then carried five of the next eight times and scored from the 2-yard line to put the Colonels on top. After the extra point, it was 21-17.

After a touchback, UMass took over at its 20, but after four incomplete passes, EKU took over on downs. Three plays later, fullback Tim Lester scored to put the game out of reach.

"They were tough and they played the option well," Palazzi said. "The wind was pretty bad out there but we still could have won it."

The Minutemen could not take advantage of the wind conditions they had in the third quarter that's what did them in.

"That was the key," Reid said. "We needed the wind and when we had it, we didn't do anything."

The Minutemen's best chance came on a second-and-6 from their own 27. Split end Ron Blauvelt was wide open about 20 yards downfield with non one between him and the goal line, but Palazzi overthrew him.

"We missed the slant play over the middle. That hurt us," Reid said. "He was wide open."

"The wind took that pass," Palazzi said.

So the passing game didn't work in the third quarter, and the running game wasn't effective either. Meanwhile, working into the wind, the Colonels put together a scoring drive to tied the game.

Lester capped off an 8-play drive with a 21-yard run up the middle, and the extra point made it 14-14.

In the first half, both teams did the most they could with the wind at their backs.

In the first quarter, with the wind at their backs, UMass had grabbed a 14-0 lead on a 39-yard pass from Palazzi to Mike Tobin and a 2-yard run by fullback David Mitchell.

In the second quarter, with the wind, the Colonels got a 40-yard field goal to make it 14-3. And with about 2:30 left, they had a first-and-goal from the UMass 5.

But the Minutemen stuffed them on three straight running plays and, after EKU was penalized for delay of game, James Campbell made it 14-6 with a 27-yard field goal.

"We were happy to hold them to six points in the first half," Cullen said. "But it would have been nice to hold them to six in the second, too."

But things didn't go the way they were supposed to in the second half. Elroy Harris saw to that.

"He's been impressing me for three years," Kidd said. "Tonight he really impressed me."

And he sent the Minutemen home with quite an impression as well.

Extra points: If the Minutemen had won, they would have played Western Kentucky Saturday, almost definitely at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

McKeown led UMass with 20 tackles. Brant Despathy, playing for George Karelas, who injured a knee, added 19 tackles. "Brant kept coming up to me in the second half and asking what he was doing wrong," McKeown said. "I kept telling him 'It's not you that's messing up, it's me.' He did a great job."

Kevin Smellie led UMass with 80 yards rushing while Palazzi was 6-of-18 for 59 yards, a touchdown and an interception.

EKU threw just seven passes in the game.

The Colonels have won 20 consecutive games at Hanger Field, which fans have nicknamed "Cliffhanger" because of the number of close games that have been played there.

Men's hoop opens season with 84-61 win

Minutemen top Southern Conn. with 18-point second half run

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Throw out all those early entries. Saturday night's men's basketball game at the Curry Hicks Cage was the season opener that really mattered.

And the University of Massachusetts, despite a sluggish start, rebounded to roll to an 84-61 win over Division II Southern Connecticut State University.

The game was the official start of the 1988-89 season for the Minutemen, and the official debut for first-year head coach John Calipari. All scrimmages and exhibition games aside, this was the one that will go down in the books, as UMass starts the year on a bright note with a 1-0 record. Southern Connecticut falls to 0-2.

In the end, it was a total team effort that did the trick. The Minutemen got solid contributions from seniors David 'Beetle' Brown, who led the team with 18 points and 11 rebounds, and Duane Chase, who tossed in 13 points and nine caroms along with a trio of the crowd-pleasing slams that have come to be expected of him.

"Duane played hard. The kind of effort he showed was good," Calipari said.

Then, there were the freshmen. In what may be an unprecedented move in these parts, Calipari went with rookies Jim McCoy and Anton Brown as his starting backcourt. The two didn't let anyone down, as Brown dropped in 17 points and McCoy added 13. Each had a pair of assists and Brown had four steals.

"Jimmy McCoy can play, and Anton Brown can play," Calipari said. "They'll be [starting] until someone else proves that they deserve it."

So far, there have been no arguments that the freshmen deserve the honor. Brown had a particularly strong game from the point, and McCoy showed the flair to nail the jumper and drive to the hoop.

"Anton did a very good job. We needed stability [at point guard] and we were hoping for an upperclassman, but he's worked hard," Calipari said.

It could have easily been a lot worse for UMass, though. The visiting Owls came in undaunted and held their own against the Minutemen, battling to a 33-all deadlock at the half.

"I was disappointed in [the Minutemen]. I was a little embarrassed with what happened," Calipari said. "They started off a little bit afraid."

But the Minutemen dispelled any thoughts among the 1,100 on hand of a major upset, by running off the first 18 points of the second half over a span of just 4:23.

McCoy started the spurt with a drive to the hoop for a three-point play and then a rebound follow from the baseline. Next he set up Chase with a patented alley-oop dunk and Beetle for a fast break gimme.

Then Anton converted his own steal for an easy two and then nailed a three-pointer to put UMass up by 14, 47-33.

Women's hoop gets win in opener, 60-52

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team successfully opened its 1988-89 campaign Saturday afternoon by beating the University of Vermont, 60-52 in Burlington, Vt.

The game marked the debut of head coach Kathy Hewelt, who came to UMass earlier this fall from Indiana Tech.

"We played pretty good defensively. It wasn't pretty, but we'll take the 'W,'" Hewelt said.

Minutewomen, 60-52

Massachusetts (60): Keyburn McCusker 8 0-1 16; Beth Wilbur 3 1-2 7; Helen Freeman 8 3-2 19; Michele Pyzbo 3 2-2 8; Christel Zullo 2 3-4 8, Sue Serafini 0 1-2 1; Trish Riley 1 0-0 2; Colleen Hopkins 0 0-0 0; Dianne Burke 0 0-0 0; Jenny Moran 0 0-0 0. Team Totals: 25 9-14 60.

Three-point goals: Hill 2, Zullo, Cummings.

The Minutewomen held Vermont, which dropped to 0-1, to 18-for-73 shooting from the field, good for a subfreezing 25 percent. UMass wasn't exactly firing on all cylinders in the early going, shooting only 30 percent (9-of-30) in the first 20 minutes.

"We just couldn't shoot in the first half," Hewelt said.

UMass trailed by four points at the half, but used an early burst in the second half to do away with the Catamounts.

Presidency vote order rejected by student court

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Student Supreme Court has denied a request for the court to order the Undergraduate Student Senate to vote on the ratification of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as Student Government Association co-presidents.

SGA Sen. Robb Smith filed a petition for a writ of mandamus on Nov. 14. The writ would have ordered the senate to vote on ratification. Smith said he was not surprised with the decision, but was upset with the way it was reached.

"It seems they had a hearing that was closed," Smith said. "They reached a decision without hearing my case. I didn't get a chance to argue anything."

Clerk of Courts Chris McClellan said the hearing on the writ was held Monday, Nov. 21 in his office. Justices Adam Scales, Anne Buechler, and Stephanie Corby met and denied the writ.

McClellan said they did not need to have Smith present to argue because this was not a case, and did not require two parties to make arguments.

"There was no need for a case," McClellan said. "It's not a case of parties, per se."

He said he did not give public notice of the hearing because, "I didn't want to release it and have people around the office."

Smith said the court would lose credibility because of the way the decision was reached.

"This was their way of just avoiding the issue totally. They totally screwed-over the whole system," he said.

The denial of the writ goes along with the court's position that the March 15 presidential election, which was won by Silkoff and Rabinowitz, is null and void.

The case determination issued by the court says that granting the writ "would be inconsistent with the court's determination that the March 15, 1988 election was unconstitutional, thus null and void."

Smith said he requested the writ because the senate has not voted on the ratification after eight months of controversy.

In his petition for the writ, Smith quoted Chapter 10 of the SGA by-laws, which says "Before an election is to be considered final, it must be approved by the senate."

He said in his petition, "It is the senate's duty to act, in favor of or against, ratification . . . I am requesting this writ so the senate can finally deal with a controversial, eight-month-old election." He said any constitutional problems that arise from the ratification can be dealt with by the Student Judiciary under the Judicial Review procedure in the SGA by-laws.

Recall on Greek growth denied

A motion by Univeristy of Massachusetts student Senator Bob McDevitt to recall an article banning fraternity-sorority growth on North Pleasant Street was defeated last night at Town Meeting.

The original decision, which passed by one vote, still stands, meaning the area along North Pleasant and Phillips streets will change from campus residence zoning to general residence zoning.

"It's another anti-student bill that has been passed at town meeting," said McDevitt. "They take all the money [from the University] but they don't want to support anything that's beneficial to students."

Peter Dow, the president of the building corporation at Alpha Chi Rho, said, "You saw the end of all new fraternities on campus tonight."

For his houseless fraternity to obtain residence, it must either move into a vacated house which is still grandfathered by the zoning change or move into Fraternity/Sorority Park.

UMass graduate works with battered women

By DEBORAH RITTER
Collegian Staff

Dianne Rapp remembers.

"He just wouldn't calm down that night," she said in 'Out From Under," a newsletter of the Philadelphia organization Women Against Abuse. "I went to bed and the next thing I knew, he was beating and beating me. He broke four or five of my ribs . . . then he loaded a shotgun and pointed it at me and said, 'I'm going to blow your brains out' . . . And then I thought, I'm no dummy. I'm not going to lay here and let him blow my brains out.'"

A jury found Dianne Rapp innocent of manslaughter in 1981. She is an exception, according to Sue Osthoff, a 1981 graduate of the University of Massachusetts and director of the National Clearinghouse for the Defense of Battered Women in Philadelphia. Osthoff, who edits "Out From Under," said a woman who goes on trial for killing her partner stands an 80 percent chance of being convicted, and is likely to receive a harsher sentence than a man.

Osthoff said battered women who kill their partners do so out of self defense, "but juries and society in general have a hard time with women who kill. They ask 'Why didn't she just leave? Why did it have to get to this point?'"

In fact, most women do leave, Osthoff said, and those who don't, stay out of fear or a lack of fear or a lack of options.

"It's hard to put yourself in the woman's place, but you have to," she said. "You have to understand what that woman's life was like before it happened. Over the years that I've been working with battered women, I've come to believe that women do not kill with malice aforethought, but as a last resort, with the intention of making the violence stop."

Osthoff has been working with battered women ever since a summer internship at a Pittsfield shelter for battered women jolted her out of "political adolescence."

"That internship is where I learned about real life," she said recently in a telephone interview. "I went there with this image of the nice Berkshires. I left with a complete horror of the level of violence directed against women in this society. I had to do something."

Osthoff established her organization a little over a year ago. It is an expanded version of a program she started four years ago to help battered women who have assaulted or killed their partners.

The Clearinghouse provides information and technical assistance to district attorneys, lawyers, court witnesses and programs for battered women. Other functions are to train battered women's advocates and dispel misconceptions about women who kill.

"Everybody believes there is such a thing as a perfect victim," Osthoff said, "someone white, middle class, meek. A good girl, someone you can feel sorry for.

"Then you conjure up the partner as an evil ogre. Everything is black and white and no one doubts that it was self-defense."

But a victim is both a perpetrator and a survivor, Osthoff said.

"The reality is harder to take," she said. "these women don't always come from squeaky clean backgrounds. So you have to convince a jury that just because a woman has a history of drug abuse or a prior criminal record, that does not mean she is not a battered woman. The social context may be more different than you can imagine but she is still driven to defend herself."

Another misconception is the idea of the "battered women's defense" or the "Burning Bed syndrome," Osthoff said, referring to the recent television film about Francine Hughes.

"There's really no separate defense that's been developed," she said. "Francine Hughes was defended with a plea of temporary insanity. Up to this point, we haven't advocated the use of that and we don't want to. We are of the view that the battered woman's act of killing may be the most sane, reasonable thing she's ever done."

Even so, Osthoff admits to a "certain ambivalence about working with women who have used violence. It contradicts our creed that the battered woman's movement is a non-violent movement," she said.

If women were not abused, they would not be violent, she said, adding that the fault lies with the men who batter.

"Sometimes I wish I could know what was going on in the minds of those men before they got themselves killed," she said. "I'm convinced I'd find that a lot of them were suicidal. They'd have to be for the way they provoked and goaded the woman. Over and over again, women tell me the man was looking straight down the barrel of a gun saying 'Come on, bitch, give it to me, come on.'"

Osthoff's work parallels the development of the feminist branch of the fledgling critical legal studies field. According to Peter d'Errico, UMass professor of Critical Legal Studies, feminist scholars believe the legal system is weighted against women.

"The feminist critique says that if women fight back, they end up in jail for long stays because they are a threat to the male power elite," d'Errico said. "Some of them believe there is an inherent bias in the system that dates back to the Constitution, which they say was drafted to uphold the rights of white men who owned property and slaves."

Osthoff's approach is to change societal attitudes on a case by case basis.

"Every time we go on trial, a woman's freedom is at stake," she said. "The point of going to court is to win, not to get at truth or justice. The legal system frustrates me, but I'm working within it.

"When people ask, why did she have to kill him? I ask, why did he have to batter her? It's pretty simple really. If men didn't batter women, women wouldn't kill them. Then I'd be out of a job. And I'd love that."

Area AIDS researchers to conduct workshop

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Is the University of Massachusetts community immune to the effects of AIDS?

The answer is no, according to the student and faculty experts on campus who will be speaking tomorrow afternoon in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Organized to coincide with "World AIDS Day" events taking place around the globe, tomorrow's AIDS Research Colloquium will feature presentations by local experts, drawn from a variety of disciplines. Beryl Koblin, an associate professor of epidemiology in the Division of Public Health here at UMass, will kick off the workshop at 1 p.m. with a presentation of surveillance of HIV infections among intravenous drug users.

"This is a good opportunity to present AIDS research efforts being conducted throughout the University," said Koblin, who helped to organize the event.

"We wanted to bring attention to the AIDS epidemic, and to research efforts worldwide," she said. "Specifically in this area, we wanted to heighten the awareness within the Division of Public Health and the UMass community as to the research being carried out by UMass students and faculty."

The afternoon's schedule of activities is open to the public, and according to Koblin, "people can come and go." The event is being sponsored by the the UMass AIDS Research Unit in the Division of Public Health, and is intended to bring the events of the first World AIDS Day closer to home.

Of local importance, doctoral candidates are scheduled to discuss AIDS among the Hispanic populations in South Holyoke and intravenous drug users in Worcester. Pam Gonyer, a health educator at University Health Services, will also present a survey of local attitudes surrounding AIDS.

Following Gonyer's talk, Dr. June Osborn will deliver the afternoon's keynote address. Osborn, who is the Dean of the University of Michigan School of Public Health, is expected to summarize several of the topics on the agenda, as well as discuss developments in AIDS research and education from a public health perspective.

"She's an excellent speaker," said Koblin. "She's an expert in presenting the big picture."

Career book published

Collegian Staff Reports

Imagine how different the world would be if Ronald Reagan had remained an actor instead of switching to politics.

His move represents what has become a trend in America today —, changing careers. Most of us will do it several times in our lives, and making the right move can be risky business.

But it doesn't have to be. In his new book "CareerMap: Deciding What You Want, Getting It and Keeping It," Dr. Neil Yeager helps you chart your course through a complex marketplace, offering guideposts along the way.

The book draws on Yeager's experience running the Adult Career Transitions program which he created at the University of Massachusetts, and offers more than 50 stories of successful career changers he has worked with in the past seven years.

"'CareerMap' isn't just a reference book for changing careers," Yeager said. "It's more a handbook for managing your career.

"Whether it's corporate mergers and leveraged buyouts that shake up an industry, or baby boomers who want more from a job than a paycheck," he said, "the fact is people are no longer remaining in one career for life."

Unlike the long popular "What Color is Your Parachute," Yeager said his book is designed to teach people how to manage their careers whether they are in transition or not.

"My intention is to give anyone a handy tool for managing their career on an ongoing basis," he said.

Citing examples that range from Bruce Springsteen to Lee Iacocca, Yeager offers a "user-friendly" plan for successful career survival.

"You have to get beyond the fear of making a change before you can get into the nuts and bolts of landing the job," Yeager said. "The book follows the natural sequence people move through as they learn and holds the reader's hand as they navigate through the psychological roadblocks to change."

"CareerMap" focuses first on the psychological aspects of work, the author said, because "too often people are driven by economics and end up in jobs they don't feel good about — there is no motivation. We hear about the crisis in productivity in America, but what's behind that is that workers are not motivated.

"We need to more effectively match people with jobs. Employers don't do that for us. We have to be our own career managers," he said.

Beginning with a formula for self-assessment, Yeager takes the reader through a self-discovery process that leads to the development of a comprehensive self-marketing plan.

Once on course, the reader gets practical information on resumes, interviewing techniques and how to assess the prospective work environment to be sure it really is a good match.

Finally, Yeager offers advice on how to survive and thrive on the job — survival skills for success that other career management books do not offer.

Let's work, and watch, together

Farrakhan.

His name made me angry, annoyed, upset, fearful.

How dare people at the University of Massachusetts — on the heels of Civility Day — bring such an evil man to our campus?

That was two months ago.

Minister Louis Farrakhan is a man badly wanted by many black students at UMass. They say he has a strong economic message for blacks, and will bring pride to black students. They say he should be allowed to speak here, and welcomed with open arms.

David R. Mark

I don't think we should welcome him with open arms. I'm not sure if I want him to speak here at all.

Farrakhan is anti-Semitic, and is far from a great man. The word great is important because different people on campus have different ideas about Farrakhan's use of the word great.

Farrakhan's claim that Hitler was a great man may have been taken out of context (he said he meant great as in powerful, not wonderful), but if I said the slave traders were great people, meaning they were powerful people who had an immense effect on the American economy and American history, I would be called racist.

Farrakhan is a good man who has said bad things; a man who helps one group even as he hurts another.

The question at hand, however, is not whether Farrakhan is anti-Semitic. It is whether he should be allowed to speak here, or if the administration should step in and say no.

It's wrong that there is racial violence and slurs and assaults and jokes and hatred on our campus. It's wrong that the Third World Caucus in the student senate faces termination because of its foes, that the Black Mass Communication Project, Nummo News and Drum Magazine face extinction, because of apathy and uncaring attitudes, and yes, perhaps a great deal of racism among some people on our campus.

There are not enough black students here, or black speakers, black history courses or black awareness. It's all wrong.

What is also wrong is that the black community, perhaps intentionally (I guess not) has placed a noose around the necks of the students of this campus in wanting Farrakhan.

Black students are right in saying they don't need our permission to bring their speaker to campus, and that they are tired of being forgotten or overlooked when speakers who offend them come to campus. But black students are wrong in bringing a speaker to campus who offends another part of the campus community. They are wrong because they have accepted the philosophy, perhaps unknowingly, that two wrongs (or in this case two dozen wrongs) make a right — that what goes around comes around, and that white students should swallow their own bitter pill.

Call it a self-fulfilling prophecy, but blacks and Jews at UMass are beginning to look at each other the wrong way. The rift between us is growing, the tension mounting, the anger escalating, the fears growing, and the chance of violence against one group or another is something we may have to deal with soon.

It's wrong that in order to make a point about free speech, UMass students have to suffer this level of anguish. There is so much wrong surrounding the Farrakhan controversy that I can't see how any good can come from his visit.

Am I saying we should let Farrakhan speak? I'm not happy with the situation, and I would never invite him myself; but, now that he's coming, we should all watch him together, and hope someone learns something from what he says. The important thing is that we work together and stop the tension and anger coming from both sides now.

UMass should remember Milk

Harvey Bernard Milk was born on May 22, 1930. He grew up in a middle class family on Long Island, had a fairly uneventful childhood and knew from the time he was 14 that he was gay.

In the early 70s, Harvey and his lover, Scott Smith, moved to San Fransisco and opened a small camera shop on Castro Street. Almost immediately, Harvey began to get involved in grass roots politics such as helping organize the annual "Castro Street Affair" parades and coordinating a boycott of Coors beer. (This was in response to the openly discriminatory hiring practices of the beer company.)

Matt Ouellett

From 1973 to 1976, Harvey mounted somewhat "Quixotic" campaigns to be elected as city supervisor. Although he was not elected, with each campaign he strengthened his visibility, humor and skills as a politician, and his reputation of caring and of including everyone.

The watershed opportunity for Milk came in 1977 when Mayor George Moscone redesigned the election system so that city supervisors were elected by specific neighborhoods instead of at large. This new approach allowed Milk to embark on his fifth campaign from the platform of the newly created fifth district, which included the heavily gay Castro area of the city.

In 1977, Harvey Milk was the first openly gay person to be elected to the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco. As a supervisor, he advocated "rank and file" coalition building between ethnic minorites, feminists, gays, and labor union members. He acted as the consummate pragmatist, representing a broad constituency on such issues as rent control, public transportation, and the rights of senior citizens. Milk also advocated for an ordinance to protect gay rights.

During 1977, Harvey Milk was thrust into the national spotlight as an articulate and powerful statewide spokesperson for the gay community in the fight to defeat the Briggs Initiative (a.k.a. Proposition –6) which would have banned homosexuals from teaching in schools. Milk was to reach his zenith of power as a politician during this time as he helped orchestrate a remarkable turnaround in public opinion that defeated Proposition –6.

On November 27, 1978, Supervisor Harvey Milk and Mayor George Moscone were assassinated by an ex-Supervisor, Dan White, in their offices at City Hall. Convicted and imprisoned, White served five and a half years before his release on January 7, 1984. White committed suicide on Oct. 21, 1985.

Dan White's case set a precedent for pleading guilty by reason of insanity. It was subsequently dubbed the "Twinkie Defense." White claimed that he was driven to madness by virtue of consuming too many Hostess Twinkies.

White was sentenced to only seven years. Many people in the gay community believe that if one of the victims had not been a gay man, White would have been sentenced to two continuous life terms for first-degree murder.

Harvey Milk was a historical figure in the eyes of the gay political movement and should be commemorated for his lifelong struggle. No one in the history of the gay movement has had as much impact on the community as Harvey Bernard Milk. I encourage everyone to join me in commemorating his life with a candlelight vigil today at 5 p.m. at the Haigis Mall.

Vitamins may be the newest weapon in the war on pollution. Lab tests by Richard Larson at the University of Illinois Institute for Environmental Studies show that riboflavin (vitamin B-2) helps clean up water contaminated by certain pesticides and industrial wastes. One of the B-complex vitamins, riboflavin is a photosensitizer that can safely dissolve compounds like phenols and aniline, which often pollute waterways and landfills. Larson's next test will be to "feed" vitamins to polluted ground water from a coal gasification plant.

Solidarity for Palestine

I wonder how many UMass students realize that today is the UN-designated day of International Solidarity with the Palestinian people. I doubt you will hear or see much coverage of this in the mainstream media. The US may not seem duly concerned about Palestinians, but today many people all over the world will express their concern for the plight of a people under occupation. Indeed, tonight on this campus there will be an event to celebrate our solidarity with the Palestinians and their struggle.

Boyd Hilton

It is a historic time for Palestinians; an Independent State has been declared by the Palestine National Council, indicating that Palestinians wish to live in their own homeland alongside Israel. At the same time, the Uprising or Intifada taking place in the occupied territories is still raging as we approach its first anniversary in December.

Palestine may at last be alive but now it needs to be allowed to develop its statehood alongside Israel. The question of how it can do so will be addressed tonight when two highly distinguished speakers will discuss this topical issue.

There is no analysis of international issues available on a regular basis. The portrayal of the history and current events of the Middle East is clear proof of that. But tonight's speakers are dissenting voices. Hampshire College Professor Eqbal Ahmad will be reporting on what went on recently in Algiers and will be discussing the Palestine National Council's declaration of an independent state. The acclaimed Palestinian Poet Fawaz Turki will give a unique and personal view of the position of the Palestinian people, with relation to the continuing Intifada.

This is a rare opportunity to discover the perspective of the Palestinians first-hand. It is a chance to hear voices that are continually stifled or misunderstood. If we listen to these voices we may well begin to perceive a whole new reality behind the well-worn phrase "Middle-East Conflict."

There can be no more crucial time than now to go beyond the tired cliches and realize that this is a genuine struggle for the self-determination of an entire people. It is time for us to show our solidarity, whatever our ethnic or religious origin, with the Palestinians.

Abortion drug dehumanizes

I am appalled by the glorification by Meredith O'Brien of the new drug RU 486 ("A new option for pregnant women," Nov. 28) RU 486 is a cleaner, quicker, and safer way of committing abortions. It sounds remarkably similar to the glorification of the cleaner gas chambers used for the slaughter of countless Jews, gypsies, and Poles during Nazi Germany.

When the term fetus is tossed about liberally, it reminds me of how slave owners dehumanized slaves. It is easier to commit atrocities on objects than on humans. A fetus is not an object, and as the underground railroad freed slaves before the Civil War, groups like Operation Rescue fight for the unborn.

My sister became pregnant at 14, but did not take the easy way out. I now have a beautiful niece who enriches my life in ways I cannot explain. Although her carrying and raising a baby is a constant struggle for our family, I thank God she did not make a second mistake.

Poor turn out shames University

On Nov. 20 I went to see The Harlem Boys Choir at the Fine Arts Center. It was a brilliant concert; the young boys are incredibly talented as well as inspirational.

However, the crowd was an embarrassment. Unfortunately, there were no flyers, and it wasn't even acknowledged in the FAC Fall schedule. It was an insult to these performers.

The choir is a group of professional young boys who have performed in Europe and Japan, and who have sung at the White House, Radio City Music Hall, and Carnegie Hall. UMass should be proud to have had this choir sing at the FAC — but you would never know it by the turnout. Next time the Arts Council and such committees bring real talent to the University, I hope they work on their publicity.

Older Astley passes the 'Test'; Camouflage can't hide blandness

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Staff

The Sugarcubes "Motorcrash"
This Icelandic band has swept upon our shores amist a great wave of media hype. The fourth single from their debut album is characterized by the moody vocals of lead singer Bjork. Her unusual voice and the primitive drums add a mystic quality to this danceable single. The overall effect may be a bit different from the usual pop fare, but the Sugarcubes are much deserving of all the attention.

Jon Astley "Put This Love To The Test"
Rick's older brother tries to steal the spotlight away with this first release from his second album. Previously a song-writer, Astley exemplifies 80s pop with a sparse keyboard line and a slight sexual tilt to the lyrics. Although his voice is weak, with this fun single Jon shows where the talent in the family really lies.

Shriekback "Get Down Tonight"
Gone are the days of serious Shriekback. With this remake of the 1975 K.C. and the Sunshine Band hit Shriekback has ushered in a new era of more accessible, fun and psychedelic music. Lead singer Barry Andrew's voice works well with the new musical surroundings. There's even a rap included in the swirling masterpiece. This is one remake you shouldn't ignore.

Camouflage "The Great Commandment"
Obviously this band is ignoring an even greater commandment: thou shall not clone. The song is a cheap rip off of Depeche Mode, only Depeche Mode would never record such rubbish. Preying on all the usual tricks, Camoflage drag us through the usual techno-pop/ depressed lyrics route and the result is predictibly dull and unimaginative.

Sam Kinison "Wild Thing"/ Tone Loc "Wild Thing"
The Trogg's number one hit from 1966 is the latest casuality in the remake fad that is ravaging through many unsuspecting oldies. Both of these remakes stray quite far from the original. In the hands of obnoxious comedian Sam Kinison, "Wild Thing" becomes a heavy parody and laughable at best. Tone Loc's "Wild Thing" is a smooth rap song with a great groove, but is no better than the average rap tune. With the original sounding as good as it does why bother remaking it, especially with results like this.

Talking Heads "(Nothing But) Flowers"
This re-release from last spring can be summed up in one word, brilliant. The Heads take a humorous look at a world that could occur at the hands of a naturalist through the eyes of a "typical" American. The African drums and rhythmic guitar add a perfect background for David Byrne's light voice. "(Nothing But) Flowers" is nothing less than fantastic.

Eighth Wonder "Cross My Heart"
Actress Patsy Kensitt and her band try to redeem themselves as serious pop musicians with their first US release and fail miserably in the process. The most striking feature of "Cross My Heart" is the idiotic lyrics that could have been written by a preschooler. Kensitt's voice is weak, irritating and the rest of the band are equally untalented. This single will leave listeners wondering how Eighth Wonder ever got a recording contract.

ENGINEER-IN-TRAINING:
An Investment In The Future
The Engineer-In-Training (E.I.T.) program is designed to provide the newly graduated engineer with an understanding of our industry, corporation and products. As an E.I.T., you will spend your first year working with experienced engineers on projects in our Boiler Design, Stress Analysis and Proposal Engineering groups. You will also gain three months of "hands-on" experience working with our Service Engineers at a customer jobsite. We have several openings in our E.I.T. program for:
Mechanical Engineers (Entry Level)
You must possess a Bachelor's in Mechanical Engineering with an emphasis in Thermodynamics Fluids and Heat Transfer Analysis. Familiarity with the Boiler Industry and Energy Systems is preferred.
When you come to Riley, you will be joining a team of men and women who bring experience, professional dedication and commitment to their work. You may be engineering boiler and fuel burning systems for coal, oil and gas, or you may be designing units fired by such unconventional fuels as bark, bagasse, coffee grounds, petroleum coke or beet pulp. Riley's engineering expertise has been proven in the resource recovery (municipal solid waste) and fluidized bed combustion boiler markets.
An engineering career with Riley leads to either a managerial or technical career path within the engineering function. Whichever path you choose to follow, this "dual career ladder" allows for professional growth and increased responsibilities. For those with a technical background, positions in project management, estimating, sales and field service are open to you as career options.
E.I.T.'s at Riley gain a special understanding of the company's operations, and insight into how their talents and interests can best advance their careers with our company. Our E.I.T program is an investment in the future – for you and for Riley.
Contact the placement office for an interview on Tuesday, December 6.

Disney distortion helps avoid a record-breaking Christmas

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Hi there kids! It's Disc Junkie here with some sensible Christmas shopping ideas; records to ask Mom and Dad for, to ensure there's no unwanted copies of Historectomy by Daft Leper or whatever they're called, left kicking around the living room floor or better still, broken over the offending purchaser's receding hairline. Yes friends, with the help of my handy shopping list you too can create your own generation gap in seconds and banish annoying relatives from your house forever.

What's the best way to achieve both these objectives with maximum shock value? Easy. Make the buyer believe that they're going to like what they're buying! And what could be more harmless, tacky and above all, Christmassy than the idea behind Stay Awake (A&M), a new compilation of classic Disney tunes reinterpreted by some of your favorite artists? But lend an ear to this glistening slab of vinyl and you'll discover that there's a sickness behind the slickness. Tom Waits turns "Heigh Ho," the dwarves marching song, into a southern chain-gang style rap complete with deranged choo-choo trains and assorted machinery noises, while the stuff from Pinocchio — especially the "Desolation Theme"— as rendered (or dismembered) by Wayne Horwitz and Bill Frisell brings new meaning to the term "Acid Jazz."

Of course Stay Awake is not without its dull moments. Yippie fave James Taylor, the human embodiment of tedium, lends his staggeringly characterless voice to "Second Star On The Left," and Ringo Starr makes a predictable bad joke out of "When You Wish Upon A Star"— Starr, geddit?! But these errors on the behalf of the compilers are few and far between. You'll find enough bizarre wackiness on this album to last you well into the new year, so this Christmas Eve — don't listen to your parents — Stay Awake!

And if that doesn't drive Aunt Imogene to the nearest sanatorium then Sugar-shit Sharp (Caroline), the new Pussy Galore EP, definitely will. Actually much of this is remarkably tuneful for PG, who one would normally associate with the NY garage punk noise/trash school of bands a la B.A.L.L. or Sonic Youth, but quite frankly, I doubt Grandma would agree. Who cares? Tell her to get it for you anyway!

But maybe the direct approach isn't for you. Maybe you're the kind of person who uses words like esoteric and sublime a lot. Hey, no problem! I've got just the thing, namely the self titled debut LP from Black Sun Ensemble (Reckless), a pretty weird bunch of musicians who fuse together such diverse influences as Hendrixian psychedelia, Bartokian classicism and some other really cool stuff besides. Particularly effective is Bridget Keating's haunting Cale-style violin which deftly weaves its way in and out of the mesh of guitars. It'll definitely put the dampeners on anyone who tries to get you into the "spirit" of things with their embarrassing party games this Christmas.

Next week: Disc Junkie's definitive guide to what was hot, and what was not in '88.

Jazz Ensemble I will perform works by student composer and arrangers at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Thursday at 8 p.m. The Chapel Jazz Ensemble will also be featured at this free concert.

Soviet Central Committee meets, internal harmony main issue

MOSCOW (AP) — The Central Committee, the policy-making body of the ruling Communist Party, convened yesterday to consider proposals for revamping the central government's relationship to the 15 Soviet republics.

Critics say such revisions, which would come after weeks of controversy over proposed constitutional amendments, would concentrate too much power in the Kremlin.

The official news agency Tass said yesterday that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was delivering a report to the 300-member body, but gave no further details.

The Central Committee meeting, known as a plenum, is a prelude to Tuesday's meeting of the Supreme Soviet, or parliament, but it is not known whether it will take up the issue of ethnic unrest now sweeping the southern republics of Azerbaijan and Armenia. At least six people died in protests there last week.

The news agency said the party meeting is considering "measures to effect political reform in state development," but made no mention of the unease in the Caucasus.

The proposed constitutional changes have stirred controversy particularly in the Baltics, where the Estonian parliament on Nov 16 declared the republic "sovereign" and claimed authority to conduct its own business except in regard to foreign policy and defense.

The parliaments in neighboring Lithuania and Latvia stopped short of approving similar measures, but activists there still oppose more centralized power and are agitating for defeat of the constitutional changes.

In addition, thousands in the southern republic of Georgia have protested the proposed amendments and many have expressed support for Estonia's action.

Saudi Arabian proposal seen as threat to OPEC oil pricing

VIENNA, Austria, (AP) — Saudi Arabia's proposal to lower the benchmark price of crude oil from $18 to $15 a barrel threatens a tentative accord aimed at reducing the world oil glut and driving up prices.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Aisham Nzer, said late Sunday the proposal was designed to prevent prices from falling below $15. But other ministers fear that a minimum price could become the ceiling price.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries currently maintains a benchmark of $18 a barrel, but prices recently have been running at $14 or less.

Each $1 rise in the price of crude oil theoretically means a pickup of 2.5 cents a gallon in retail gasoline prices, although oil companies do not always pass along the full increase.

The ministers had been scheduled to resume their formal discussions Sunday, but they were postponed until yesterday.

A senior Iranian delegate to the conference, Feredoon Barkeshli, said the Saudi plan "is a major divergence from OPEC resolutions so far" and "can totally sabotage the agreement."

"Iran is not going to accept this type of idea," he said.

Barkeshli said that among OPEC's 13 members, Algeria, Nigeria and Libya also oppose changing the $18 benchmark. Venezuelan Oil Minister Julio Cesar Gil said his country favors maintaining the $18 price.

Barkeshli said the Iranian oil minister, Gholamreza Aghzadeh, had agreed to a tentative proposal that kept the benchmark at $18.

Senior linebacker John McKeown was the only All-Yankee Conference first-team selection for UMass this season.

■ Minutemen turn things around in '88

Palazzi finished the season with a 53.8 completion percentage and 2,102 yards passing for 15 touchdowns. He threw 17 interceptions, nine of them came in a two-game stretch immediately prior to the Delaware game.

He also rushed for 700 yards and five touchdowns. He picked up quite a bit of that yardage by keeping the ball on the option play.

Other times, he pitched out to senior tailback Kevin Smellie, who racked up 887 yards and finished as the team's leading rusher.

Palazzi's favorite target in the air was junior split end Chip Mitchell, who finished with 33 receptions for 638 yards and six touchdowns.

The leader on defense, McKeown, finished off his career with 543 tackles.

This season, McKeown ended up with 177 tackles, and was the only UMass player named to the All-Yankee Conference first team.

"This season was typical of the way I played and the way the seniors played," McKeown said.

And for McKeown, Buttler, Salmon, Palazzi, Smellie, Ted Barrett, Mike Barrette, Silvio Bonvini, Tim Bryant, Jerome Croom, Jay Dowdy, Kenny Girouard, Tom Hall, Michael Prawl, Steve Robar, Andrew Thomas, Mike Trifari, Craig Wagner and Dimitri Yavis, it was just about the best possible way to end a career.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, a lot of people will remember only that final game.

■ volleyball

holding only one win (nine total games).

True, UMass wasn't picking up the necessary momentum it needed for the A-10 tourney, but since none of the loses were conference matches and wouldn't affect the tournament rankings, UMass wasn't in all that bad of shape.

"We just weren't playing up to our potential," Ford said.

Having already clinched the no.4 ranking in the A-10 made the final six weeks easier to handle. For the tournament, UMass had a clean slate— it was day 1 all over again but at the A-10 no one guarantees a day 2— you earn it.

It was a very quick tournament. UMass still hadn't found the handbrake to stop its downward slide, as the Minutewomen fell in just about an hour to the Lady Mountaineers of West Virginia.

"I wasn't surprised they beat us. I knew we weren't playing up to the level we had to to beat them," Ford said.

Despite the disappointing ending, Ford tried to point to the positive points of the season.

"They're some of the nicest kids I've ever worked with," she said.

But now she no longer can afford to look back, Ford must think about the future.

"We're going to miss them (seniors Ann Marie Larese, Juliet Primer, Barbara Meehan, Christine McEnroe, and Julie Smith) but I'm really looking forward to starting over again."

UMass will find itself in a familiar position— climbing the peaks and valleys.

A 180-degree turnaround for UMass football

Minutemen's regular-season record improves from 3-8 to 8-3

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts head football coach Jim Reid was walking through the airport in Lexington, Ky., late Saturday night, preparing to come home after his team's final game of the 1988 season.

"You know what the worst thing about the playoffs is?" he said. "It's the fact that 15 teams who had great seasons have to end their seasons with a loss."

A short statement, but one that accurately summarizes the situation the Minutemen find themselves in.

UMass went 8-3 this season to tie Delaware for the Yankee Conference championship and reach the NCAA Division 1-AA playoffs for the first time in 10 years.

Senior quarterback Dave Palazzi rushed for 700 yards this season, often by keeping the ball on the option. Other times, he pitched out. . .

But many people won't remember that. They'll remember that the Minutemen blew a 14-0 first quarter lead and watched Eastern Kentucky score 14 points in the final quarter to win the first round of the playoffs, 28-17, and end UMass' season.

In fact, after the EKU game, Reid was concerned about what his players will remember about this season.

"I told them that I hope to God they remember the good things," said Reid, who was named Yankee Conference Coach of the Year last week.

"The Maine game, the Harvard game, the Rhode Island game, and especially the Delaware game," Reid said. "That's the game where we learned the most."

That game could be seen as the fork in the road for UMass. Delaware had owned the Minutemen for 12 seasons, winning every game between the two teams.

But Oct. 22 in Newark, Del., UMass found itself trailing by three points, but with a first-and-goal from the 5 with a minute left. It was going to be the first win over the Blue Hens — until the Minutemen turned the ball over.

And when that happened, a lot of people forgot the progress that this team had made. It seemed like a return to last year, when the 3-8 Minutemen simply couldn't make the big play when they had to.

Suddenly, they were 4-2 in the conference, and a shot at the title looked bleak. But UMass rebounded to win its last four games and earn not only a share of the title, but a playoff spot.

"We didn't win any games easily," said senior linebacker John McKeown, who joined Bill Buttler and Nick Salmon as this year's tri-captains.

The turnaround from last season, as big as it was, boiled down to a simple thing called attitude. From Day 1, Reid told anyone who would listen that he loved this team, that they were different.

Through the first five games, of which UMass won four, Reid continued to preach humility and not let the team members get too happy with themselves.

And as the Minutemen found out, the reward was well worth it.

"To turn things around like we did the season, it's the greatest thing ever," senior quarterback Dave Palazzi said. "Just to go to the playoffs was great."

Especially after what the players experienced last season. Pre-season favorites to win the conference in 1987, UMass promptly lost its first game of that season to Maine. Looking back, Reid and his players determined that the upset took place because the Minutemen took their opponents lightly. Not letting that happen this season was a main priority.

"We came back from last year to have a winning season," Palazzi said. "That kind of thing carries into the rest of your life. It did a lot for my character."

Palazzi's character may have improved, but so did his numbers.

The Leominster native rewrote a good portion of the UMass record book, and is now the leader in seven categories, including most yards of total offense in a career (6,688), most yards passing in a career (5,402), most passes completed in a career (409) and most passes attempted in a career (765).

"I had a lot fun here," Palazzi said. "I'll never forget the memories."

UMass volleyball team sees peaks, valleys

Senior outside hitter Juliet Primer, along with the rest of the Minutewomen, travelled the up-and-down road this season. UMass went 19-10 before losing to West Virginia at the Atlantic 10 tournament to end the year.

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team's season was like an unstable stock market, plotted on a line graph it would look like this:

First weeks— a promising blend of talent and experience starts UMass on a rise, September— undefeated until the last day of the month. UMass still climbing, Oct. 15— the peak of the UMass season, the Minutewomen down West Virginia for weekend sweep of conference opponents, the final six weeks UMass loses nine of its last 13 and is caught in a slump, Atlantic 10 tourney UMmass is bounced in three games by the team it beat at the plateau of the season— West Virginia.

Like an inverted V, UMass' season went sharply up. . . and down.

"We were very optimistic in the beginning of the season. . . in every match. We weren't repeating the mistakes we made in the previous match," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "I really do believe we kept improving right up to West Virginia [Oct.15]. It wasn't a fluke we beat them, we played well. But then we started to go downhill."

Led by a veteran, five-senior squad UMass took no prisoners in the first half of the season. The Minutewomen won their first nine games, including a brutal five-match tournament at Colgate University.

UMass was riding high— it was 4-2 in the A-10 by mid-October and continued to amass the "Ws', rolling out to a 15-2 record.

UMass had conquered some very tough competition such as Brown, Princeton, West Virginia, and Rutgers Universities.

The Minutewomen weren't especially tall, their tallest player was 5'9', they weren't especially fast, but in the beginning UMass used hard work to more than make up for the lack of speed and height. Each week the Minutewomen were finding a way to win— they ekeed out all four of their five-game matches.

But Oct. 22 will be pointed to as the day of the crash. UMass had finished Rutgers off in three games the previous day and were preparing for Temple University, who sat somewhere at the bottom of the A-10 standings.

The Lady Owls came to Amherst and crashed Cinderella's ball in three games. The loss wasn't as stunning as was the convincingness of it. UMass was trampled by a team they were expected to beat. From there it seemed UMass had problems putting its personal pieces together.

The Minutewomen lost seven of their final 11 matches— all them on the road.

"I think there was a slight burnout factor," Ford said, adding that a lack of depth may have also hurt the Minutewomen.

UMass had gone to two straight tournaments and both times came home

Scoreboard steals the show in home opener

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

When Bill Veeck was owner of the Chicago White Sox in the late 1970s, he came up with numerous outrageous ideas. One of them was the exploding scoreboard.

If he were alive today, Veeck probably would have been proud of what happened Saturday night at the Curry Hicks Cage.

In the season-opening game between the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team and Southern Connecticut, the four-sided scoreboard which hangs over center court did a self-slow burn right in the middle of the game.

It was noticed early in the game that the lights on the board were dimming. Then during a radio timeout with 13:53 left in the first half, and the Minutemen leading 10-7, smoke began to pour out of the top.

Referee Eric Geldart decided that, for the safety of all those involved, the board had to be removed. It was lowered to the floor and disconnected, forcing officials to come up with alternative ways of keeping the score and time for the rest of the game.

A small table clock was used to keep the time, and the score was kept on paper. The time and score were announced regularly over the public address system, with both coaches having assistants yelling the time from the table to their benches.

It was determined that the cause of the problem was a motor inside the scoreboard that had burned out. It could have been worse. A couple of months ago, the million-dollar board in the new Charlotte Coliseum came crashing to the floor one night after a concert. Luckily there was no one inside the building at the time.

There was concern as to whether the board would be fixed in time for tomorrow's Cage doubleheader (both the women and men entertain Boston University), but it was back in place yesterday atop the 4,024-seat Cage, so it appears that all will go as planned.

Nonetheless, Setturday's events will live on as another chapter in the wild history of Curry Hicks Cage.

Murder suspect's body found hung in Buckland

Partially decomposed body found by a deer hunter

By the Associated Press

BUCKLAND — A teen-age suspect in the slaying of a college student was found hung in the woods Monday, a month after his disappearance frightened residents and forced police to curtail Halloween celebrations.

The body of Mark Branch, 19, was found at approximately 8 a.m. by hunter Kevin Purrington of Buckland as he stalked two deer in the dense woods of Hog Mountain.

"I heard something snap up above," Purrington said. "I looked up and I saw the body . . . I made it down that mountain in record time."

The spot was about a mile from the road where Branch's car was found on Oct. 25, the day a search warrant was issued for his arrest in connection with the stabbing death of Sharon Gregory, 18.

Branch was identified through a wallet found on his body, said Franklin County District Attorney Judd Carhart at a news conference.

Carhart said Branch and Gregory were acquaintances. He called the slaying "an extremely violent murder involving numerous stab wounds."

Carhart said the cause of Branch's death was tentatively ruled a suicide and tests were being conducted to determine how long Branch had been dead. He said the body appeared partially decomposed and said he believed the youth had died several weeks ago.

He declined to speculate on a motive for the slaying or the evidence that had led police to suspect Branch as the killer.

"That is a matter, and will always be a matter, of conjecture," Carhart said, adding: "This chapter of this tragedy is terminated. There are no further suspects, and the case is closed."

Branch was the subject of intensive searches with dogs and helicopters while rumors terrified Greenfield, a town of 18,000, where Branch and Gregory were from.

The body of Gregory, a Greenfield Community College freshman, had been discovered on Oct. 24 by her twin sister in the bathtub of their Greenfield home.

As Halloween approached, community nervousness was increased by published reports that Branch was a fan of bloody horror movies, particularly the "Friday the 13th" series in which the character Jason slashes his victims.

At the urging of town officials, Greenfield held the traditional trick-or-treating for children a day early and limited it to daylight hours.

Concern flared again in early November when a Buckland home was burglarized three miles from where Branch's car had been spotted and the only items taken were food, winter clothes, and a knife.

Police from New Hampshire to Connecticut said they received reports of possible sightings of the young man, who had worked as a grocery store clerk. In Gardner, 40 miles east of Greenfield, police said a frightened child called them asking if "Jason" was in town.

On Nov. 14 and 15, a team from Harvard Medical School's Crisis Management Group met with teen-agers and parents in Greenfield and surrounding towns in an attempt to calm fears.

The slaying was the third violent death of a young woman in the area within the past 18 months, McCarthy said, but arrests were made quickly in the two earlier slayings.

Slain gay activist Harvey Milk remembered in night vigil

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Silence filled the air last night as more than 150 people bowed their heads and lifted candles in memory of slain gay activist Harvey Milk.

The Old Chapel Bells, scheduled to ring at 5:30, were never heard. Nevertheless participants in the Harvey Milk Vigil celebrated his life with songs, speeches and reverence.

"I don't know why [the bells didn't ring]," said Amerin Falk, the president of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Alliance, "we had it all set."

The vigil, a joint organizational effort by the UMass LBGA and the Faculty/Staff group for Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Concerns was held on the concourse of the Fine Arts Center to commemorate the life and accomplishments of Harvey Milk.

Milk, who was the nation's first openly gay city official, was assassinated in his office 10 years ago by Dan White. White was a former city supervisor who, after resigning his position, returned to city hall and assassinated both the mayor and Milk.

"Tonight we honor a memory," Commuter Area Govenment President Jay Festa told the crowd. "We bring alight the flames of hope into the twilight just as Harvey Milk's bursting energy lit up so many confining, dismal closets.

"Harvey Milk took up the personal challenge of self acceptance," Festa said, "but he also took up the challenge of open, public political action." At the end of his speech, Festa announced his candidacy for the SGA presidency in the spring. Jim Humphreys, a professor in the mathematics department and member of the faculty/staff group, gave the first speech. "[Harvey Milk] was not a likely hero," he said, but "He became a hero because he essentially turned his back on all the things he had been told he couldn't do."

Gary Blumenthal, a resident assistant in Sylvan and member of the LBGA, was the second speaker last night.

He described Milk as "a man dedicated to the ideals of the community, he had simply ideas of what a community should be like, a simple request for straights and gays, blacks and whites to live together in peace. It was an ideal that Milk worked hard for, but even 10 years later the realization is not even on the horizon.

"Each light that burns here to day is a light that shines against homophobia," he said. "a light that burns against gay bashing and a light that burns against discrimination of all forms."

Maura Cullen, a resident director in John Quincy Adams who attended the rally, likened Milk to Martin Luther King and John F. Kennedy. "He's a symbol of freedom and survival," Cullen said, "that may sound contradictory, but he represents my survival.

"You won't read about him in history books," she said, "it's goes with the missing information and biased history we all grew up with — but he changed my history.

"They may have killed him," she said, "but they didn't kill his spirit, that's what we're celebrating 10 years later."

DVP to chip in for Farrakhan's visit

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The Distinguished Visitors Program has officially agreed to bring Minister Louis Farrakhan to the University of Massachusetts.

In a closed meeting last week, DVP voted 9-2 to contribute $9,000 towards Farrakhan's visit next semester. DVP had tentatively agreed to sponsor the visit a week earlier.

However, Phi Beta Sigma fraternity, chief advocate for the visit, has until Dec. 21 to raise the rest of the money needed.

"The amount is in the neighborhood of $2,500," said DVP co-chairman Patrick Berkley, but the exact figure has not been determined.

"We're inviting any other groups to participate to try to make it more of a community project," he said.

Phi Beta Sigma, a predominantly black fraternity, originally approached DVP with the proposal to sponsor the visit.

DVP voted on Oct. 18 to provide $11,000 for the speaker's honorarium. The vote was deemed invalid less than a week later.

Harvard professor quits amid plagiarism charges

BOSTON (AP) — A graduate student reading 20-year-old medical journals discovered plagiarized passages that have resulted in the resignation of one of the nation's preeminent psychiatrists from the faculty of Harvard Medical School, a Harvard official said Monday.

Dr. Shervent Frazier, a former head of the national Institute of Mental Health, resigned November 23 as a Harvard professor and director of McLean Hospital, a psychiatric hospital affiliated with the University.

The resignation followed an investigation by the medical school's Faculty Conduct Commitee, which "concluded that plagiarism occurred in four papers written by Dr. Frazier and published between 1966 and 1975," according to a letter from Dean Daniel C. Tosteson to the medical school faculty.

The letter, dated November 23, was made public by the university Monday. It said none of the papers was reporting original research.

Both Frazier and Tosteson were unavailable for comment Monday. Dr. S. James Adelstein, dean of academic programs at the medical school, said Frazier did not dispute the committee's findings.

"He has accepted the evidence of the committee," Adelstein said. "But he has ascribed the vents to his method of note-taking and composing papers. He said that when he read a paper, he would copy parts of it out, and when he was going to synthesize a paper . . . he put the cards together and was not always as careful as he should have been."

Adelstein said the articles were brought to the attention of the medical school in August by Paul Scatena, a graduate student at the University of Rochester who was researching the medical literature on pain.

Three of the four papers are about phantom pain, the burning sensation that patients sometimes feel from a limb that has been amputated. The fourth is on "principles of psychiatric emergency management." The plagiarized portions were taken from earlier articles in other scientific journals, including 'Scientific American' and 'Clinical Neurosurgery.'

Adelstein said all four papers "were intended as teaching instruments" and appeared in medical review journals or textbooks, including the 'American Handbook of Psychiatry.'

"If you look at these papers, what you see is that there are paragraphs within them that are more or less verbatim some other places. It's the kind of thing that's very difficult to detect. . .It would be difficult under normal circumstances for someone reading it to know that there was any plagiarism."

Frazier, 67, was a professor of psychiatry at Harvard from 1972 until 1984, when he left to become director of the National Institute of Mental Health in Rockville, Md. He held that post for two years before returning to Harvard to head McLean, one of the nation's leading psychiatric hospitals.

A native of Shreveport, La., Frazier received undergraduate and medical degrees at the University of Illinois. He also holds a master of science degree in neurological sciences from the University of Minnesota.

He has worked at the Mayo Clinic, Presbyterian Hospital in New York and Baylor University, among other institutions. He is former commissioner of mental health and mental retardation in Texas an former chairman of the American Psychiatric Association's Joint Commission on Public Affairs.

Tosteson's letter to the Harvard faculty says the university notified the journals, co-authors, editors and other institutions where Frazier held academic appointments at the time the papers were published.

Harvard spokesman Peter Costa said, "The university takes very seriously any charges of plagiarism because that's what we're about - the search for truth and knowledge."

Amherst town meeting votes to enter C5-A suit

By LISA JOHNSON
Collegian Correspondent

Opponents in a lawsuit against the Galaxy C5-As received another boost Monday night when Town Meeting approved an article to support the Selectman's action to enter in the case.

A substitute amendment was approved by a majority voice vote.
The non-binding article supports the Selectman's decision to enter an Amicus brief into a court case in Springfield Federal District Court and requested a corrected environmental impact statement that would include Amherst.

"The protesters we've met have little or no concern with the noise or pollution of the planes," said Barrett. "It deals with prejudice against our military."

The case filed by Valley Citizens claims the environmental impact study conducted by the Air Force does not include the frequent touch and goes of the training flights. They are requesting a more complete study and want all towns under the flight paths included. Amherst is one of the towns to be excluded from the study.

The group hopes a second environmental impact study would show unlivable conditions for residents close to the air base and under the flight paths. If the study was negative, they could then fight to have the C5-As removed.

"The C5-A flights mean serious air pollution for Amherst. They're noisy and dangerous. Why aren't they training in another less populated area?"

— Irwin Spiegelman of Valley Citizens for a Safe Environment

The C5-As are one of the largest cargo planes in the world.
The Air Force is using Westover Airforce Base in Chicopee as a training base for C5-A crews. The training flights simulate landings and take-offs sometimes as often as 20 times a session.

There are currently 10 planes at Westover with 16 expected by February.

"The C5-A flights mean serious air pollution for Amherst," said Irwin Spiegelman, a Valley Citizens for a Safe Environment member. "They're noisy and dangerous. Why aren't they training in another less populated area?"

Steven Barrett, a South Amherst resident, spoke against the article.

"They fly over my house and don't bother me or my family or anyone else I know on Southeast Street," he said.

The case filed by Valley Citizens claims the environmental impact study conducted by the Air Force does not include the frequent touch and goes of the training flights. They are requesting a more complete study and want all towns under the flight paths included. Amherst is one of the towns to be excluded from the study.

The group hopes a second environmental impact study would show unlivable conditions for residents close to the air base and under the flight paths. If the study was negative, they could then fight to have the C5-As removed.

The first case was thrown out of court and the Valley Citizens are now repealing the decision. They approached Selectmen about two months ago for their support.

Selectman Richard Minear explained why the Board of Selectmen entered into the case. "The only possible relief that the town has in this issue is a revised environmental impact statement," he said. "The statement can not be reopened unless the Valley Citizens win their case."

Belchertown has also agreed to enter into the case.

Charges of funds misuse on agenda

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

For the first time in recent memory, the agenda for tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting has no proposals near the top of the slate on the Student Government Association co-presidency controversy. Instead, several items concerning finances head the discussion.

Senators could try to suspend the rules to try to resolve the conflict, but senators have apparently realized they are locked in a stalemate. The only fresh idea on how to resolve the controversy is a proposal by Sen. Bob McDevitt which calls for new presidential elections within the senate. This move appears seventh on the agenda.

Tonight's meeting will see the unveiling of the fiscal year 1990 budgeting proposal for the $2 million Student Activities Trust Fund by the SGA Budgets Committee.

Financial improprieties

The first of the monetary proposals concerns alleged financial improprieties by Sen. Jay Festa. Senators W. Greg Rothman, Brian Darling and Stephen Lutz are the authors of the move, which asks the senate to censure Festa.

Asked about the censure, Rothman said, "It has to do with Festa spending money over the summer for the United States Student Association convention." He said Festa had also used student money for dinners and "other expenses."

Rothman said he would like to see see the senate denounce what he termed "fiscal irresponsibility" by Festa. Festa could not be reached for comment.

Hockey arena

Rothman, Darling and Sen. Ken Rudy are also the makers of the next measure, which endorses the building of a hockey arena on the University of Massachusetts campus.

"I'm really excited about that motion," Rothman said. He said the move would send a message to the Board of Trustees and the Massachusetts State House that UMass wants this arena."

If this move passes, it would represent a turnaround from the Oct. 19 senate meeting when it denounced the arena because student fees will rise approximately $100 per year to pay for the arena.

"I don't like the idea of us paying the fee, but it's a user fee. No one that's in school now is going to have to pay for the arena," Rothman said. He said he had no alternatives to the fee, but "every once in a while you have to pay for what you get."

Professional staff

Next on the agenda is a proposal asking Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson or his designee to appear before the senate to defend any renewals of professional staff contracts funded from the SATF.

The SATF is currently facing shortfalls, in part because of a declining number of students, who pay $108 per year into the fund.

Jessica Mitchell, chairperson of the Budgets Committee, is co-author of the proposal with Sen. Aram Hamparian.

"The reason Aram and I did this is that the SATF is currently approaching deficit, so basically we want to do is keep a check on any hirings of professional staff," Mitchell said.

She said she was not looking to eliminate any positions yet, but the Budgets Committee needs the power to do this when necessary to balance the budget.

Madson was chosen to defend the hirings, she said, "because he's the only person who's in charge of professional staff."

Madson could not reached for comment.

Next on the agenda is a Hamparian/McDevitt move to condemn a recent change to the Code of Student Conduct The proposal asks for a reversal of the change and justification of it by Chancellor Joseph Duffey. McDevitt said this may be withdrawn and rewritten.

Glodis announces run for SGA presidency

As a sidelight to the ongoing Student Government Association presidency controversy, Sophomore Sen. Guy Glodis said yesterday he will run for the office in the next election.

Glodis said he will kick off his campaign with a rally Friday at noon on the Student Union steps in support of the proposed Mullins Hockey Arena.

Glodis, the chairman of the newly-formed Students for the Mullins Arena, said he is hoping for a turnout of at least 500 at the rally.

The arena has come under fire from the Undergraduate Student Senate because it will cause a rise in student fees to pay for the arena.

"I say that's a feeble excuse," Glodis said of the oppostiion to the arena.

"If we have to pay for something we should at least have something we can use," Glodis said.

"I think we need some strong leadership and unity," he said, adding that he could work with the left and right in dealing with the administration. Glodis finished third in last year's presidential election.

Freedom from foam encouraged by TM

A Foam Free Zone article passed by Town Meeting Monday night is all bark and no bite.

The original article proposed by Foam Free Zone, an environmental group, would have made all restaurants and stores replace all non-recyclable plastics products with biodegradable material.

The compromise article that passed said the town should work toward the goal of reducing non-recyclable plastics and educate restaurants and vendors of the hazards produced by chloro-fluro carbons (CFCs) which are found in some types of styrofoam.

The federal government in cooperation with private industry will ban the use of CFC products in this country beginning Jan 1, 1989.

CFCs have been found to deplete the ozone layer which protects the earth from hazardous ultraviolet rays known to cause cancer.

The University Dining Commons have already taken steps to comply with the federal law. They stopped purchasing styrofoam cups at the beginning of the semester and are letting the supply dwindle down. Disposable cups will be replaced with paper ones.

Man pleads innocent to slashing death of child

FRAMINGHAM (AP) — A Wellesley man charged with slashing his 6-year-old son's throat before stabbing himself pleaded innocent to a murder charge yesterday and was ordered to undergo 20 days of psychiatric evaluation.

Robert Lee Harvey, 31, who was dressed in hospital clothes and had a bandage around his neck, sobbed uncontrollably as Framingham District Court officers led him out of the courtroom.

Judge Robert C. Campion ordered that Harvey be held without bail and undergo 20 days of observation at Bridgewater State Hospital to determine if he is competent to stand trial for the murder of his son, Benjamin.

On Monday, police found Harvey and Benjamin's body in woods in Wayland after Harvey's estranged wife reported that her husband had failed to return with their son Sunday evening, Wellesley police said.

Wayland police were asked to aid in the search because Harvey had often taken his son to the scenic 300-acre Rice Road conservation land.

"She had a feeling that he would be here. He had come here frequently, and used to take the boy for nature walks. She asked us to look for his vehicle," said Wellesley Police Lt. Donald Whalen.

Police called off the search about 1:30 am Monday because State Police dogs were unable to track a scent in the night's heavy rain.

Searchers resumed after dawn and Susan Webb Harvey, Benjamin's mother and Wellesley's animal control officer, monitored their progress by listening to the cruiser radios.

When police discovered Harvey about 8:30 am, he stuck his knife blade-up in the ground and jumped on it, wounding himself in the neck, police said.

Whalen said liquor and medication bottles were found at the scene. He said the prescription medication could be used to treat a heart condition or depression.

Harvey and his wife separated six weeks ago. Court records show Webb Harvey received a restraining order against her husband in Dedham District Court on Oct. 13 and the order was continued until November 15.

But the restraining order was dropped when no one appeared for an extension hearing on Nov. 15, a spokeswoman at the court said.

Cop training changes looked at BOSTON (AP) — The state Criminal Justice Training Council will decide this week whether to change police cadet training to include a heavier dose of academics and less emphasis on physical training.

The proposals, to be considered by the council today, come from the interim director Peter Agnes Jr., who assumed the job this month after one cadet died and 15 others were hospitalized for kidney problems linked to dehydration during heavy exercise.

Agnes banned modified stress training under which recruits were taunted and threatened and forced to undergo long exercises. He said that kind of training will not be re-introduced.

"The rationale for the stress program is not something I understand," The Boston Globe Monday quothed him as saying.

"I've never had a convincing case made to me for its validity."

Instead of stress training, typical police encounters would be acted out in classrooms to prepare recruits for duty.

AIDS educator uses honest humor

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

"In today's passion fashion, wear condoms," reads the message on her desk, saved from an AIDS fortune cookie.

A safe sex package, holding condoms and directions for their use is pasted with a purple label, "Don't worry, be happy."

Gretchen Krull, Coordinator of Peer Sexuality Education at the University of Massachusetts, is combining honesty with humor to change students' sexual attitudes and behavior.

Meeting with small groups of about 15 students in their dorms, sororities, and fraternities, this fiesty health educator challenges young men and women to talk about the sexual choices they face, and the consequences they must stop ignoring. Through open communication in informal settings, she said, misconceptions about AIDS can be resolved.

An estimated one out of 300 American college students carries the AIDS virus, according to preliminary results from a study by the American College Health Association and the federal Centers for Disease Control. UMass provided blood samples for this survey.

Gretchen Krull, Coordinator of the Peer Sex Education Program at University Health Services.

Krull, who has led AIDS workshops at UMass for two years, said although the analysis is not yet complete, "the figures are not out of line."

"College students think they are totally immune," Krull said, " but there are people on college campuses who are HIV positive." She estimates that two to three percent of all college students may be infected with the virus that causes AIDS.

"Students already know they should use condoms, but they don't always know how to use them, or they don't always feel comfortable talking with their peers about using them," she said.

What we know in our heads, she added, doesn't necessarily transfer into our behavior ."Just because I know I can't get AIDS from a toilet seat, doesn't mean I'll change my sexual practices to protect myself.

"People are willling to take the risk," she said, "because they enjoy being sexual, and because they see it as something they're supposed to do. It's the adult thing to do, to have sex."

Because of there is a fine line between educating and frightening, Krull said, she tries to keep her 1 1/2-to-2 hour sessions "upbeat and positive, so people don't feel bad about their sexuality."

However, Krull said she is concerned that her workshops "reinforce the norm that most people are sexually active. The reality is that the majority of students we speak to are sexually active, so we need to address them. But we also need to let people know that it's legitimate to be abstinent at certain times in life. We need to be giving people the option to say no, especially since there's not a lot of cultural support for that decision."

Handing out "Abstinence makes the heart grow fonder" fortune cookies, along with ones proclaiming "Say yes to sex and enjoy," enables her to reach both groups.

Last year, Krull trained students to become AIDS educators.

Now, although peer counselors do work on campus, none have chosen to lead AIDS workshops.

Peer education was more popular 10 years ago, she said, but today, "people are out to get a degree and get a job, so they're locked into fulfilling core requirements." The peer education course, though worth three credits, satisfies no general education requisites.

As a result, Krull has turned to resident directors to help run classes in their dorms.

Yet, workshops still do not reach enough students, Krull said. Only about 600 persons attended the AIDS sessions offered last year, she said.

UHS suggests ways to beat menstrual cramps

By SARA GALER
Collegian Staff

Have you ever wondered why you get cramps?

Most cramps are caused by chemicals in the body called prostaglandines, said Ann Grose, a health educator and nurse practitioner at University Health Services. During ovulation, these chemicals are released, causing the uterus to contract. The effect produces cramps.

Certain products may increase menstrual pain, Grose said. She cited four sources outside the body that are widely believed to increase menstrual discomfort: salt, sugar, alcohol, and caffeine.

The severity of cramps may change over the course of a woman's life. Some cramps appear at adolescence and are later outgrown, while others do not develop until later in the woman's life, Grose said.

"A woman's weight and sexual activity do not seem to affect the severity of her cramps," she said. "Certain women may get more cramps if they're sedentary, and others may get less if they're active, but the evidence is inconclusive."

To help prevent cramps, Grose recommends taking medication before the pain starts. "Motron, a prescription drug, and Advil, an over-the counter preparation, are both recommended and prescribed by Health Services."

Relaxation techniques, which have been shown to reduce stress, may also be effective in reducing menstrual pain, said Grose, "since stress is an important factor in determining the probability of cramps."

"Some women find that deep breaths, rest, hot water bottles, or even orgasms may help," Grose said. In addition, relaxation techniques used in childbirth classes, such as Lamaze classes, are helpful in reducing menstrual pain.

When nothing else seems to work, the birth control pill is often prescribed, said Grose. "Since the Pill prevents ovulation, it can be very effective in reducing menstrual pain.

"I get the feeling that if they called the Pill anything but "the birth control pill," it would be given more often," she said. "Many women who aren't sexually active feel funny taking a "birth control pill.'"

Grose said that if a woman is having any type of problem with her period, she should come to Health Services to be examined.

"Rather than worry about something, it's better just to come in and talk to us," she said.

All services are free under the University Health Plan and Grose said, while Health Services is booked for routine exams until mid-December, a patient will be seen earlier for a specific problem.

Director and actor discuss the making of Stepmother

Richard Benjamin

By JIM COLE
Collegian Staff

Jon Lovitz is one unique individual. The easygoing star of "Saturday Night Live" is just making his move into the world of film. It's one that requires him to shift his focus from comedian, to actor . . . sort of.

Richard Benjamin, on the other hand, has been changing his role over the past few years as well. From acting in serious films like Goodbye Columbus to the comedy hit Love at First Bite, he's been bitten by the Directing Bug.

Separately, these stars have much to tell, but put them together, and it equals lunacy, as I discovered at a press conference for their new film My Stepmother is an Alien. Benjamin has just completed directing Lovitz in the new film, and it's fortunate that the two get along so well when involved in the long and difficult process of filmmaking.

"He's impossible," Benjamin said of Lovitz. "His attitude, personality, everything."

Lovitz just smiled, responding, "No, he loves me." Benjamin nodded, and it's clear these two have a great working relationship, and are both enthusiastic about their latest project.

My Stepmother is an Alien, which opens Dec. 9, is a lighthearted, special effects-laden comedy starring Dan Aykroyd as a widower and screwball scientist whose experiment of sending a signal into deep space seems a failure — until Kim Basinger shows up on his front door, and quickly proceeds to marry him. No one suspects that she's an Alien (not even Lovitz, who plays Aykroyd's swinging brother) except Aykroyd's young daughter.

What attracted Richard Benjamin to this particular film? "There was a certain risk to it," he said. "It had a lot of elements, and I liked the idea of working with special effects, balanced with comedy and a human story."

University Players' Therapy gives comic catharsis

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO, II
Collegian Correspondent

Beyond Therapy
University Players

What do a bisexual, a waiter, a die-hard Snoopy lover, a homosexual, premature ejaculation and a very confused woman all have in common? They are all Beyond Therapy.

Poor Prudence has answered an advertisement in a local paper for a quiet evening at a nice restaurant. There she meets Bruce who tells her that he is a bisexual. However, Bruce wishes to broaden his horizons. After Bruce tells Prudence a little more of his life, she has just about had it. Bruce also becomes extremely annoyed and the quiet evening ends with a water fight.

Both Bruce and Prudence have been going to therapy for some time now. Prudence's therapist is a foul-mouthed sex fiend, while Bruce's therapist has the intellectual capability of a two-year old. The next time Bruce and Prudence go to the restaurant they end up hitting it off better. Finally, Bruce decides to invite Prudence over for dinner at his house.

Bob is Bruce's homosexual lover of one year who is very jealous at the current turn of events in Bruce's life. The evening turns out to be a disaster. Bruce takes Bob to his therapist and Bruce and Prudence go out to the restaurant they met at before.

Charlotte, Bruce's therapist, tells Bob that he should go to the restaurant and vent his anger with a toy gun and "shoot" Prudence and Bruce. Bob askes Charlotte to come along for emotional support.

Bruce and Prudence are having a great dinner until Stuart, Prudence's therapist, decides to give Prudence one more chance at happiness with him. Bob bursts in with Charlotte and "shoots" Bruce and Prudence. After a somewhat heated discussion, all five of them sit down for a nice dinner. After dinner, Bob has fallen in love with the waiter, Andrew; Charlotte agrees to help Stuart; and Bruce and Charlotte get married.

All of this may sound like very serious issues, but they are quite humorous. The play is very simple, yet the comedy never stops! A great performance job was done by all the actors. Keep an eye out for Tone Nunes, Kara Banks, Robyn Heisey, Josh Galitsky, Bill Larkin, and Jeff Johnson tonight when the final performance of Christopher Durang's Beyond Therapy is presented at Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

August Wilson's musical Ma Rainey's Black Bottom comes to the Fine Arts Center this Friday at 8 p.m. Wilson won a New York Drama Critics Circle Award for the play, cited as "Best Play of the Year." For tickets call 545-2511.

■ Stepmother

Benjamin was involved in the project from an early stage, and even contributed to the script work, meeting many times with the writers. About that, he said, "You can't be polite! From polite meetings come polite scripts." That seems the case, as the script went through many drafts until Benjamin was satisfied.

As a director, it's hard for Benjamin's acting background not to be influential. From the early 60s to the late 70s, he worked in both stage and screen, and his roles go from serious in films like Diary of a Mad Housewife and Westworld to comedic in The Sunshine Boys, Housecalls, and even a short-lived NBC T.V. series "Quark." Since his directorial debut in 1982 with My Favorite Year, starring Peter O'Toole as a drunken icon in the early days of television, Benjamin has made films that cover all genres, including Racing with the Moon, The Money Pit, and Little Nikita.

Looking back on each directing job, Benjamin said, "Each film is such a learning experience. (With each movie) I thought it would get easier, but it doesn't. You know more, and the more you know, the more you can do. The film language that all the masters knew is more apparent." He compared the role of director to an artist, saying, "the canvas is infinite."

Yet despite the huge scale of a film, the actors are what count, and past experience was invaluable, he said. "Being an actor before was a tremendous help. It's important to make the actors free, allow them to expand and not be afraid to take risks. When you're afraid, you get 'small,' and I tried to create an atmosphere where it's okay to fail — because you learn."

Lovitz seemed to agree with all his director had said, yet he certainly had thoughts of his own about this off-beat film. He was sold on the script the minute he read one particular scene, and said to himself: "Do this film!! You get to kiss Kim Basinger!!" When asked if it was worth it, he answered, with a smirk, "What do you think?"

Lovitz has had a colorful history, best known from his stint on "Saturday Night Live." There, he developed distinct characters like Tommy Flanagan of Pathological Liars Anonymous, and Master Thespian, a Shakespearean ham. He made his first film appearance in last summer's hit Big, and though he is moving towards more film roles, he hasn't abandoned SNL. He plans to do two more seasons, and had to juggle his appearances last season while he was making Stepmom. "But, with the writer's strike, I was able to stay out in California longer," Lovitz said. "This obviously made the process easier."

Yet Lovitz still kept the crew busy with his antics. On one occasion he sent his director into a panic when he "borrowed" the Rolls Royce used in the film's climax to take Benjamin's son and Alyson Hannigan, the 13-year-old newcomer who plays Aykroyd's daughter, to McDonalds. The key word that went through Benjamin's mind on finding them missing: "Fear."

Yet through it all, these two have great memories from the film, and Benjamin found working with Hannigan: "an untrained, real little girl — a delight."

But at times, especially in some dramatic scenes, Benjamin used a less lighthearted approach. "I had to get tough. I didn't like to, but I had to. To get her concentration right, I had to make her do it. 'I'm not satisfied,' I would say, and sometimes I . . ."

"You kicked her," Lovitz finished.

Benjamin smiled in agreement. "Yes, you had to hit them once in a while."

Both laughed. This seemed to sum up the relationship, both working, and casual, between these two personalities. When things settled down, Benjamin responded to the big question. "How do I like my movie? Well, I like it! It's been quite a trip."

The New England String Quartet, post-graduate quartet-in-residence at UMass, will give their first concert of the year this Friday at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. The program will feature a selection of works illustrating quartet development from the classical period to baroque to contemporary. The public is invited to this free concert.

Editorial/Opinion

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

I'll go to England . . . later

You may have wanted to accomplish two things at once. I don't mean learning seven chapters and starting a paper in one night, wanting to date two people on one Friday night, or watching The Wonderful World of Disney and 60 Minutes on Sunday at 7 p.m. I mean fulfilling more than one dream at a time in a hectic life where it seems impossible to accomplish anything before senility settles in. So you prioritize, and hope you make the right choice.

Alise Harfield

Attending college was one choice of mine. It was a decision made long before the advent of high school, a that some 85 percent of my graduating class made in June of 1986. Then, it seemed people went because (a) everyone else was, (b)their parents said they should, or (c) they truly desired to, at the time.

Now I am a a third year, category (c) student. I want to be able to accomplish other things while at an age to enjoy them.

I've always wanted to visit Europe, but especially England.

I can't be writing this right now. I should be catching up on Shakespere and astronomy, researching a project due next week, finishing a novel for discussion, washing dirty laundry . . .

Rationalize. It's okay to write; it's a hobby I enjoy as much as eating and sleeping. I can start homework later on.

Why do I account for every second in every minute of every hour, day in, day out of college? What happened to free time? I was never like this, never this bad. I'm forever in a hurry: rushing through dinner to get to homework, reading as much as my eyelids allow before gravity pulls them down, falling into bed only to wake up after what seems like a blink of sleep, rushing through a shower, getting to class, and then repeating the cycle. The days become as regular as and Ex-Lax addict.

I want these last two years of undergraduate school to get over with so I can start grad school. One goal. Once there, I'll wish more time away so I can get out to the world and make money. Then, I'll wish each week away so the holidays come sooner and bring opportunity not only to rest but also to contemplate the next goal, probably marriage, then onto motherhood, and in between I want to travel to England . . .

Every now and again I notice something beautiful like a mess of red and orange rusty leaves that I see as I run to work, or the face of the "man in the moon" I follow en route to the library. Then I recall passing by friends, neglecting to stop and chat, rushing my parents off the phone, and passing up going out in order to finish one assignment. I wonder why there are benches in parks with swingsets next to them. Why would people choose to sit on a still bench when they could be riding high on a swing? Shouldn't we always be active?

And what about Europe? By the time I complete every goal I have in mind today, I'll witness London from a wheelchair. My granddaughter will push me around the city, and umbrella attached to the back of the seat to shelter me from the rain. My arthritic bones will be rickety from the fog. She'll yell to me what the tour guide says, and with luck there will be a new battery in my hearing aid. All for the experience I've wished my life away for.

Maybe I ought to enjoy the means to such ends . . . while I'm still young enough to dream of them.

To whom it may concern

Goodbye Shakespeare, hello Chou Tso-jen

You have to appreciate courses like these: Comparative Literature 355 — Modern African Literature; Portuguese 325 — Medieval and Renaissance Portuguese; English 480D — Literature of the Americas; Russian 255 — Masterpieces of Russian Literature in Translation; Judaic Studies 312 — Readings in Classical Hebrew Texts; Chinese 456 — Classical Chinese Prose.

Did you know that people actually wrote in medieval China? I thought the only works written before the 18th century came out of Britain. I mean, gee whiz, I had a taste of the classics in high school. I browsed through the Canterbury Tales skimmed a little bit of Paradise Lost, and I think I even read Romeo and Juliet twice in its entirety. Of course, there were American classics such as Huckleberry Finn and Moby Dick floating around my high school as well. But I never even heard about any Asian or Latin American writers.

Not too long ago I'm sure that non-Western literature courses were few and sparse in a college curriculum. The emphasis was on English literature from Beowulf to maybe Virginia Woolf (if you had a professor that was liberal enough to teach a woman writer), along with several classic American texts. But, who decided that these were the the classics anyway?

Recently, many new courses have been introduced in which professors are teaching works that they consider to be classics from other cultures, or works from Western culture that don't fit the mold of what we have considered to be classic literature.

Move over Melville, make room for authors like Susan Warner. Heads up Faulkner, you've got competition from Chou Tso-jen. With Japanese, Chinese, Latin American, African, etc., literature courses being offered here, we are given the opportunity to read works from many different cultures and we can determine for ourselves what the real classics are.

Bob Bobala

As wonderful as this is, a couple of problems do arise from the availability of diverse literature courses offered at universities across the country. First is that some people are tempted to shun the British and American classics because in some instances they seem to be racist or sexist.

That creates a big dilemma for me. Here I am, making a serious effort to study Paradise Lost for the first time in my life. I'm pondering the great moral questions. I'm examining Milton's purpose — to "justify the ways of God to men." And as if I didn't have enough trouble already, what does a friend of mine tell me? "Milton is sexist."

Now what should I do? Drop out of Major British Writers so I can take Japanese 144 — Japanese Literature in Translation? Would that do me any good?

The problems of racism and sexism which have existed — and still exist — in Western society are not exclusive to the West. Are these new courses in diverse literature designed to present cultures that are void of sexism and racism? I sure would be hard pressed to find literature from a culture where neither sexism nor racism existed.

Whether I'm reading a work by a big Anglo-Saxon name like Shakespeare or an Eastern writer who is still obscure, the text is going to offer me both good and bad views of his or her culture. I wouldn't want to make a point of excluding any kind of literature from my studies. The important thing is that the curriculum that I am offered is not overly biased toward one culture's literature over another's.

I have to admit, I feel pretty fortunate to be at an institution where I have the opportunity to study not only British and American literature, but Chinese, Japanese, Latin American, Russian, and African literature as well. To me, this is a basis for a good liberal education.

But that reminds me of my second dilemma: I sure have a lot of reading to do.

POW-MIA letter draws fire

Editor's note: The Collegian has a strict policy against letters responding to letters. However, Alan Ditmore's letter ("POW-MIA flag offensive," Nov. 18) drew such a maelstrom that we felt it necessary to acknowledge the response.

"Ditmore suggests that the University give equal flagpole time to 'progressive' groups. . .I suggest the University erect a new flagpole and call it 'the flagpole for the group or persons offended by the flag flown the previous week'. . ."

Andy Moynahan
Southwest

"There are thousands of people living in a limbo worse than any hell I can imagine. Their sons, husbands, fathers, brothers, or friends have not returned from Vietnam...to take down the POW-MIA flag would indicate that we Americans have given up on those very men who would not give up on us."

Eric Shauber
Southwest

"You may or may not agree with the reasons for US involvement in other wars, but those who served deserve our respect. It is the leaders we should fault when we fault policy."

John Arabadjis
Dept. of Physics and Astronomy

"I suggest he [Ditmore] go talk to some Vietnamese refugees, whose families were tortured or killed by the Viet Cong, and ask them their opinions of this 'progressive' group. . ."

Tim Angers
Southwest

"The banner's message not only reminds us of the sufferings endured by POW's but also our need to provide accountability of all MIA's, dead or alive. . .[We] have to wonder if Alan Ditmore's view of the POW-MIA flag would be different if he had experienced a personal loss due to the Vietnam War. . ."

Doug Capodanno
Larry Lampson
Sunderland

"There is only one way he [Ditmore] can have his wish and see the ensigns of the Nicaraguan and Vietnamese regimes upon the flagpole and that is to leave behind the liberties we defended. With the numbers of refugees leaving Nicaragua and Vietnam, there will be plenty of room for one more in those unfortunate countries."

Richard Colton
Dept. of Biochemistry

In other news. . .

Bradley Weidman thought he could bank on the sugarbowl remembrance of a 1930's child movie star when he named his new soft drink the Shirley T. What the 26-year-old entrepreneur from Encino, Calif. did not count on was the marketing savvy of Shirley Temple Black, 60, former Ambassador to Ghana and a Rebublican activist. Black, who has granted manufacturers 163 licenses in the past 50 years for everything from Shirley Temple dolls and music boxes to greeting card, is suing Weidman for using her name without permission.

Weidman, whose sales reached $200,000 last year, defends his drink's name by arguing that "Shirley Temple" has become part of the English language and thus is no longer a trademark. After all, he notes, when bartenders mix ginger ale and grenadine to make a Shirley Temple, they do not need Black's permission. The difference, Black counters, is that bartenders, unlike Weidman, are not trying to push a product.

Feelies find fame at last

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Who says suburban garage bands can't make it big? In the Feelies' case it took 12 years, three albums, a personnel change and a six-year hiatus for the Haledon, NJ, quintet to find the limelight.

Tomorrow, bassist Branda Sauter, guitarists Glenn Mercer and Bill Million, and drummers Stan Demeski and Dave Weckerman, will perform two shows at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

Their latest album, Only Life, is filled with the joyful guitars, murky vocals and frenzied beat that have now become the band's trademark. The work has earned praise from no less than Time Magazine.

The Feelies took shape in 1976, when Million and Mercer began playing with bassist Keith DeNunzio and (now colossal) drummer Anton Fier. 1980 saw the release of their first LP, Crazy Rhythms. Million and Mercer soon began performing with Sauter, Demeski and Weckerman under various labels; Yung Wu, The Willies and The Trypes are incarnations that still surface occasionally.

With REM's Peter Buck as producer, the second Feelies LP, The Good Earth, brought the present lineup to light in 1986. That year the band also released the four-song EP, No One Knows, and appeared in the Jonathan Demme film Something Wild.

If you haven't seen this band live, do so. This is one of the few acts who have proven both on stage and on vinyl that a little change is good.

■ Farrakhan

Farrakhan, the leader of the Chicago-based Nation of Islam, has often been accused of being an anti-Semite by the members of the Jewish community.

Farrakhan has put down the Jewish religion for years and is "vehemently opposed" to Jewish students, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, head of the UMass Hillel Foundation, told the Collegian last month.

Despite DVP's initial withdrawal, the fraternity was still determined to bring the controversial minister. "This is an institution of higher learning, and we want to hear what the man has to say," said Jay Dowdy, president of Phi Beta Sigma, when DVP announced the withdrawal.

Anthony Gee, a fraternity member, told the Collegian on the night of the Oct. 18 vote that the media has led the public astray on Farrakhan and has "has taken his meaning out of context."

Charles Sheffield, also a Phi Beta Sigma member, expressed outrage that some members of the community did not want Farrakhan to speak at the University.

"Are you jealous that a single Black man can fill every civic center in the country to capacity, including Madison Square Garden with Black men and women from all walks of life?" [sic] he wrote in an NUMMO editorial.

Coincidentally, the day Sheffield's editorial appeared in NUMMO, DVP rescinded its withdrawl and tentatively agreed to sponsor the visit.

Farrakhan is now scheduled to appear Feb. 3, Varghese said.

Burmese get GSS support

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate pledged its full support last night for the Burmese students in their plight to bring democracy and freedom of expression to Burma.

The unanimous vote to support the resolution, which is intended to provide moral support to ex-patriots and other sympathizers to the Burmese cause, also expresses the senate's disapproval of the authoritarian regime of General Ne Win.

Current leader General Saw Maung, says originator of the resolution and president of the senate Gita van Heerden, has systematically and violently oppressed the people of Burma and has had large numbers of students arrested and killed under his military crackdown.

In other senate business:

The senate voted to return a motion, outlining the University's rules for picketing and registration, back to the Chancellor for clarification and subsequent revision.

The UMass Hillel Foundation will receive $500 of its proposed $800 request o the senate for funding of the Jewish Arts Festival.

The fiscal year budget projections made by the senate last night covering 1989-1990 was tabled until the next meeting on Dec. 13 when it will be voted on.

Two women hurt in car accident

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Amherst police responded to a four-car accident in front of Hasbrouck Laboratory on North Pleasant Street Monday which left two pedestrians injured.

Three cars collided after Joyce Arditti, 29, and a companion attempted to cross the road at 6:32 p.m.

Attempting to avoid the cars, Arditti and her companion jumped into the other lane of traffic. Arditti was then struck by a fourth vehicle and was later treated at University Health Services for a knee injury.

In University police reports:

- A storage area in Gorman Residence Hall was reported broken into Monday. Six new swivel chairs were taken from the area.
- A 10-speed bicycle worth $200 was reported stolen from a bike room in Brooks Residence Hall Monday.
- A leather jacket, two gold rings, and a gold bracelet worth $930 were reported stolen from a room in Washington Residence Hall Monday.

■ Hewelt, UMass' rookie coach

"She's positive and a motivator. She pushes us to the limit," says senior co-captain Beth Wilbor. "It's been a tremendous learning experience."

Hewelt was not alone in coming to UMass. Joining her is assistant Mary Vail, a three-year starter under Hewelt at Indiana Tech before joining her as an assistant for the past two seasons.

Also on the staff are graduate assistants Jim Carr, Tim Kingston and Marcella Zalot, along with Tara Lewis, a co-captain on last year's team, who will be serving as a volunteer assistant. They will serve in various capacities from coaching, scouting and administrative work.

"I'm a master in the art of delegation," Hewelt says of her staff. "You have to get the young people involved. The only key is to let them get involved and use their skills."

Hewelt's coaching philosophy stresses not only attitude, but also direct attention to the fundamentals of the game. She said she looks to bring out the best in players, developing their skills to a maximum level.

It seems to be working. Even the seniors find that there is plenty to still be learned.

"Coming in each year with a new coach is like coming in every year as a freshman," Wilbor said. "I've learned a lot of new stuff. I wish I was a freshman again."

And when the players are that enthusiastic, it has to be something special.

■ women's hoop preview

That scheme appears to be working early on. In the season opener, a 60-52 win over the University of Vermont last Saturday, Freeman led the Minutewomen with 18 points, followed by 17 from McCusker, who was a member of the Atlantic 10 All-Freshman team last year.

But the inside game will not be the only facet. The Minutewomen will balance this with an equally effective outside game, led by senior co-captain Christel Zullo.

Zullo will run the show from the point. She was fifth in the A-10 last season in assists, averaging 5.6 per game, and her 162 assists last season is a new single-season UMass record.

The off-guard spot will be shared by a pair of capable juniors, 5-10 Michele Pytko and 5-8 Sue Serafini. Both display tremendous shooting ability, as Serafini was third in the A-10 last season in three-point field goal percentage at .345 (31-for-90). Pytko could also see some front court action.

Coming off the bench in the backcourt is senior Dianne Burke and sophomores Trish Riley and Colleen Hopkins. Riley and Burke both saw playing time last year, while Hopkins sat out the seasor with a knee injury.

Joining this year's team are a trio of freshmen who should help out the inside game. Jennyfer Moran (5-10) from Altoona, Penn. is "fundamentally sound with tremendous shooting range," according to Hewelt. Lisa Hair (5-11), from East Windson, NJ, and Pegeen Ryan (6-3), from Bayonne, NJ, will help out in rebounding and will help Freeman and McCusker in the middle.

In the Vermont game, the inside game was strong while the outside struggled, according to Hewelt. The key to the season will be getting the two working together so that they can feed off each other.

Hewelt is optimistic about the prospects of the season. "We've got some young ladies who are very talented, with some good skills. Now we've got to plug them into a system which will maximize their skills," she said.

And if Hewelt can succeed at that, her first season at UMass could be a good one.

■ swimming to host Tufts

Also under the gun is freshman Sean Rutherford. "If he can show me some commitment, he could be a Top 10 swimmer in New England," Yarworth said.

Overall, Yarworth said he is pleased with the team's progression.

Junior G.T.Ladd had one of his best meets ever against Boston College a week and a half ago and continues to improve. Juniors Brian McIver, Dave Ehle and Roger Kennedy are consistent front line swimmers who look to repeat their championship ways of the 1987-88 season. Tufts could ambush the Minutemen, but its not a safe bet.

"I see a small problem . . . with the general commitment to being the best they can be," Yarworth said, but otherwise, UMass is on schedule.

Men's, women's hoop teams brace for BU

Minutemen set to host Terriers tonight

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

Tonight is the home opener for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team.

Sure, the Minutemen have already played two games at Curry Hicks Cage this season. But when they take on Boston University at 7 p.m. tonight in the Cage, it will be the real home opener.

UMass lost to the Taby Club of Sweden in an exhibition game, but that's all it was — an exhibition game.

And Saturday night, the Minutemen defeated Southern Connecticut in the first game of the regular season. But since it was Thanksgiving weekend, hardly any students were around to enjoy it.

So for all practical purposes, this is it.

"I'm looking forward to it," UMass head coach John Calipari said. "It will be the first chance for the students to see us in a real game. And we'll get a chance to see how much the students can help us. I really feel they can give us a 10- or 12-point advantage."

UMass could have used twice that advantage against the Swedes in a 85-69 loss.

"During that game, Coach Cal had to spend so much time yelling at us for our mistakes that he didn't have time to coach," UMass captain David Brown said a week after that game.

But 18 days later, the Minutemen outscored Southern Connecticut 18-0 at the beginning of the second half and went on to post an 84-61 win.

"I saw some improvement in the second half Saturday," Calipari said. "We made some athletic plays, but we still scored the majority of our points in transition."

David Brown led the Minutemen with 18 points and senior forward Duane Chase added 16.

A pair of freshman guards, Jimmy McCoy and Anton Brown, also made a big impact against Southern Connecticut.

Anton Brown had 17 points, two assists and four steals, while McCoy contributed 13 points and a pair of assists. The two weren't even starters until recently.

"For the first 21 days, Chris Bailey and Rafer Giles were the starters," Calipari said. "I wasn't going to let Jimmy and Anton start, even if they were capable. But then it was apparent to me and to the entire team that they deserve to be playing. You can't be prejudiced against them just because their freshmen."

David Brown, Duane Chase and Ben Grodski will join McCoy and Anton Brown as tonight's starters.

They will face a Boston University team that lost its first game 88-87 to Indiana State.

Jeff Timberlake led the Terriers with 18 points, six assists, and seven rebounds, and Tony DaCosta added 14 points.

"This is our first test," Calipari said. "We're going to have to play hard and execute or we'll get beat. We're going to need an all-out effort."

Minutewomen aiming for respect, improvement early

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team kicks off its home schedule tonight against Boston University at the Curry Hicks Cage with a new and positive attitude.

So far, the Minutewomen are 1-0 on the year. Plenty of reason to be positive.

First-year head coach Kathy Hewelt arrived on the scene earlier this fall after six years at the Indiana Institute of Technology. She will be looking to turn around a team that hasn't been particularly successful as of late.

Despite being the fourth coach the team has had in four years, Hewelt looks to wipe the slate clean and start off fresh, hoping that her approach to the game will bolster the Minutewomen to new heights in 1988-89.

"We hope to bring all of the various aspects of our program together to move UMass women's basketball to a high level of respectability, especially in the Atlantic 10," Hewelt said.

Respectability, and constant improvement as the season progresses, are the only goals of this year's team.

"I'm making no predictions. We're taking it on a day-to-day basis," Hewelt said. "Our goal is day-to-day improvement. We want to get to the point where we can believe we can win every time we step on the court."

So far, Hewelt has seen that steady upward slope in the team's play, which she hopes leads to brighter things in the future.

"They've been learning and growing. They're even surprising themselves," Hewelt said.

This year's team will be a blend of experience and youth. All but two regular players return from last year's squad that finished 11-18 overall and 6-12 in the conference, and they will be joined by three freshmen of promise.

Gone from last year are the top two scorers. Tara Lewis, who averaged 12.2 points a game, has graduated, but will be with the team this year as a volunteer assistant. Jeanine Michealsen (9.2 ppg) transferred to James Madison University.

The strong point of this year's team, according to Hewelt, should be inside, where there are three veterans over six-feet. Junior Helen Freeman and sophomore Keyburn McCusker, both 6-foot-2, will handle the bulk of the inside work, while senior co-captain Beth Wilbor (6-0) will move to her more comfortable three-spot as an outside shooter.

Wilbor is the leading returning scorer and rebounder, having averaged 7.8 points and 4.4 boards a game last season.

"We have a strong inside game. We like to run a double low post, which fits right into our scheme," Hewelt said.

UMass men's swimming to face Tufts

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Now that the pressure of the 41-consecutive game win streak is over, the University of Massachusetts men's swimming team can concentrate on the task at hand: winning all the meets it can while getting ready for the New England Championships in February.

"Training, training and more training," UMass coach Russ Yarworth explained.

Since all teams in the region will go to the New Englands, regardless of records, the Minutemen plan to take the meets as they come without any special preparation.

Today (4 p.m.) UMass will be at Tufts University in an attempt to rebound from an season-opening loss to Boston College.

"[Tufts] used to kick our butt," said Yarworth, but lately, its the Minutemen who have been doing the kicking.

Yarworth said, "I don't anticipate too much trouble," so he said he is focusing on improving his swimmers. Sophomore Jim Robertson will be slotted into the 1000 yard freestyle, his first meet in the long distance event.

Robertson has been a very pleasant surprise for UMass, becoming a front-line swimmer for the Minutemen. Also seeing a change is freshman Mike Yunker, who will be raced in the 50 yard freestyle.

Yarworth is also looking for some general improvement from others. He said he would like to see some "better mechanics" from junior Peter Koback in the breast stroke, and a little more production from John Gardner.

Hewelt wants to bring winning attitude to UMass

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

For the last few years, the position of women's basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts has been almost like that of manager of the New York Yankees.

For the fourth time in four seasons, there will be a different face in charge of the Minutewomen tonight when they make their home debut of the 1988-89 season against Boston University at Curry Hicks Cage.

UMass' first-year women's basketball coach, Kathy Hewelt.

But Kathy Hewelt promises that, unlike her predecessors, she will be around for a while.

"I've got a three-year contract, and I'll be here three years no matter what," Hewelt says. "I've got a firm commitment from the University in terms of turning this program around."

Hewelt was hired earlier this fall after last season's coach, Ethel Allman, resigned to pursue other interests.

The UMass job is the latest in what has been a successful coaching career thus far for Hewelt. After graduating from Oakland University in Rochester, Mich., where she was an All-Conference selection in basketball and softball as well as a member of the 1978 U.S. Basketball team, she took the position of assistant coach there in 1979-80 before moving on to the University of Dayton as an assistant the next season.

In 1982, Hewelt got her first and only other head coaching position at the Indiana Institute of Technology, and remained there until accepting the job here.

"I was at Indiana Tech for six years, and we did some great things (117-59 record, four straight 20-win seasons and two District 21 championships) while I was there," Hewelt said. "But the University of Massachusetts job was a challenge that sparked my interest."

With her, she has brought a whole new attitude and new approach which she has attempted to instill into her players.

"It's a whole new way of thinking," Hewelt said. "It's positive and demanding, but it will be a lot of fun."

In her short time here, the response has been positive from the players.

"She brings a different attitude," says senior co-captain Christel Zullo.

Senate shoots down Silkoff/Rabinowitz

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Approval of Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz as Student Government Association co-presidents will not be considered, according to an overwhelming vote of the Undergraduate Student Senate last night.

The measure passed, also changes SGA election rules so that only one person may run for the office of SGA president in the future.

The measure does not, however, rule the March 15 elections, won by Silkoff and Rabinowitz, null and void, and liberal senators have vowed they may bring up the ratification question again.

"It doesn't say the election is nullified," Rabinowitz said. "We haven't given up yet. The senate cannot run away from this."

Sen. W. Greg Rothman, one of the leaders of the battle against Silkoff/Rabinowitz, disagreed. He said he thinks the issue, after more than eight months, is finally settled.

"I think the issue is now over, but I'm concerned because of how these people think," he said.

Sen. Jay Festa, who ran on the same ticket as Silkoff/Rabinowitz, endorsed the measure, but said it concedes nothing.

"Procedurally, we can bring up the ratification any time," Festa said. He added he did not see a need to ratify now because Silkoff/Rabinowitz are effectively acting as SGA presidents. He said he endorsed the move because it did not make a statement about the validity of the elections.

"I put my name on it as long as the words 'null and void' were left out," Festa said. "[Those words] would have made a statement."

Speaker Robert Fadel restated his position, and the position of the Student Judiciary, in saying ratification could not be voted on. "I would rule it out of order," he said of any attempt to ratify Silkoff/Rabinowitz.

He sucessfully suspended the rules to hear the proposal. Introducing the motion, he said, "This is not an easy motion to make. It was initiated by a whole group of people who acknowledged that the time for compromise is past. Let's just bury it, let's put it behind us." He said Sen. John Dunlap had suggested the solution.

Sen. Brian Crawford opposed the solution. "The problem I have is not with the motion itself, but with the process." Crawford said the senate should not ignore the election.

Silkoff agreed. She said the senate was acting "in complete ignorance of its purpose" — to serve the students. "The senate is not respecting the vote of the students," she said. "The students looked at the controversy back in March and voted for us anyway."

Silkoff said she was surprised by some of the people who endorsed the measure. "They seem to have reached a point where they didn't feel they had any other options," she said. "I thought they had a lot more integrity."

She, also, said she had not given up.

"There are plenty of ideas brewing," she said.

The next election

The move also sets up new elections for March 14, 1989, and several senators have already announced their candidacy. Fadel, who is acting president now, said elections in the interim are a possibility, but he said he sees them as unlikely.

Emergency phones make UMass a safer place for all

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

The hazards of walking alone on campus are many, but for University of Massachusetts residents and staff, help is just a phone call away.

Ten yellow "Help" phones on campus topped by luminescent blue lights provide a 24-hour emergency communication link to the University police station, said Assistant Director of Public Safety Lawrence Holmes.

"It's a component program called prevention," Holmes said. "All you have to do is pick up the phone."

The caller's location is automatically recorded and the police dispatcher has direct lines to the fire department, and other police departments in the area, he said.

The average response time for University police is three minutes, he said. "We try to minimize the length of response time to provide appropriate service to the requestor."

Holmes said the phones were first installed in 1980 in response to calls from student groups, five years later more were put in because of high demand.

They are located in remote areas on campus where problems have developed, he said.

"It's hard to find a [public] phone at night," he said. "We want to heighten the awareness of the public and work with them to help them not become a victim of crime."

The phones help to prevent the occurrance of crime on campus by encouraging reporting, Holmes said.

"I certainly think they have an impact," he said. "The fact that there are phones out there provides a sufficient deterrent value."

Graphic courtesy of the University of Massachusetts Department of Public Safety

The ten emergency help phones are located on Thatcher Way, at Memorial Hall, at Kennedy Tower, in lots 44 and 21, and at the parking booths in lots 62, 63, 64, 65, and 71.

"We've had calls reporting someone breaking into a car," he said. "If the phone wasn't there, we couldn't have received the information in a timely fashion."

The phones are made of vandal-resistant material and their cost is $1000 a year, funded by the Student Affairs office, Holmes said.

"They are well-received by the public," he said. "They're worth all of the money expended on them."

If funding permits, the University is planning to install more phones on a yearly basis, ultimately bringing the campus total to 95, Holmes said.

"It's a good program and it works," he said. "Their use is not something you can measure. That one [call] would be justification for having them there at all."

The penalty for misuse of a phone is equal to the penalty for pulling a false fire alarm, he said. Offenders will be brought to court and prosecuted.

Other safety measures incorporated by the department are the use of damage-resistant, sodium vapor lights installed inside and outside campus buildings, he said.

"They're a cheaper light source," he said, "But a better light source. They improve the safety and security levels both inside and outside of buildings."

AIDS, where it started brings us to where we are

By SAM SILVERSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Our dangerously apathetic response to the the AIDS epidemic was fueled by the "historic accident" which introduced the virus within isolated populations of homosexual and drug users in the United States, according to a public health expert.

"It's fascinating, and horrifying... this provincialism," said Dr. June Osborn, dean of the University of Michigan School of Public Health. "There's an enormous temptation to pretend that AIDS is a disease that effects 'somebody else,' — to create a wall. But we can not immunize our society from these groups any more than we can immunize an individual against the disease with medicine.

"We've got big trouble coming, and it's heterosexual trouble. We are all concerned," said Osborn.

Osborn's comments capped the first University of Massachusetts AIDS Research Colloquium, where a collection of student and faculty researchers discussed their efforts to understand the disease, yesterday afternoon in the Cape Cod lounge. The event, sponsored by the UMass AIDS Research Unit, was planned to coincide with World AIDS Day.

Osborn began by outlining the extent of the AIDS crisis in the United States and worldwide. With more than 80,000 known AIDS sufferers (expected to swell to 270,000 within the next four years), the United States is considered the global "epicenter" of the epidemic, she said. To slow its spread in this country, steps most soon be taken to reform our national public health system, direct the research efforts of the medical industry, and help educate the public, she said.

"Nobody expects a cure within the next 10 years, at least," said Osborn. "But we already have something better than vaccines, and that's education. We need people in the most affected communities who can help — it's truly a matter of communicating." continued on page 4

Bad weather, stripped bolts threaten the launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Despite threatening weather, NASA pressed ahead yesterday toward a launching today of space shuttle Atlantis' secret satellite mission, but a new problem cropped up — tow stripped bolts on the spaceship.

A reliable source reported the 21-man Mission Management Team decided during an afternoon meeting to proceed with the countdown even though weather officials were reporting an advancing storm reduced the odds of launch to one in five.

Another look would be made at the weather before technicians begin fueling the shuttle's fuel tanks late last night.

Meanwhile, the source, who requested anonymity, reported the launch pad crew discovered two bolts had been stripped on an access panel leading to a cluster of small engines used to steer the shuttle in orbit.

He said the stripped bolts were replaced by studs that were glued down with a special epoxy. If the glue does not hold, he said, the launch might have to be delayed a day or two.

The source said the studs would be checked about 7 p.m. last night to see if the glue was working.

A leaking tire on the shuttle's main landing gear was a less bothersome concern.

The management team met to assess the worsening weather forecast, which called for winds up to 24 mph, heavy clouds and the possibility of light rain at the planned launch time.

UN denounces US denial of visa for PLO chairman Arafat, 151-2

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The General Assembly yesterday overwhelmingly deplored the US denial of a visa for Yasser Arafat, the first step toward forming a protest meeting in Geneva to hear the PLO chairman next month.

The vote in the 159-member assembly was 151-2. The United States and Israel voted against the resolution, Britain abstained, and other nations were absent.

Arab diplomats, who sponsored the resolution, said later that they planned to move swiftly to introduce another resolution shifting the General Assembly to Geneva in mid-December to hear Arafat speak on the declaration of an independent Palestinian state.

The resolution adopted yesterday requested UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to report back on the US response today.

Cyclone kills 100s in Bangladesh

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — A cyclone battered low-lying coastal areas of southern Bangledesh and eastern India, killing at least 317 people and razing hundreds of mud huts, officials and news reporters said yesterday.

At least 275 fishermen were reported missing in Bangladesh.

The casualty toll is expected to rise after reports arrive from hundreds of the tiny islands and remote villages which were cut off when communication lines snapped during Tuesday's storm.

Officials at the Cyclone Preparedness Center in Dhaka said the cyclone killed 288 people in southern Bangladesh.

UMass education matured and catapulted Stern

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Ann Swanson Stern, rejecting several top private colleges where she had been accepted, chose to come to the Univerisity of Massachusetts in the 1960s as an out-of-state student from Maryland.

"UMass gave me a very profound appreciation for the richness of American society I didn't know about, being well-to-do and white with a background of private schools," she said. "I had no understanding of the world and I felt it couldn't continue. I would be at risk as an adult. I needed to know different kinds of people and different ways of being."

ALUMNI PROFILE

Stern majored in English and graduated in 1969 with a master's degree in bilingual and elementary education and a doctorate in educational administration and supervision.

She now works for the Cambridge School System as a staff developer; which includes writing the curriculum, working with the teachers and students at several schools, and helping teachers develop programs and strategies to try out in the classroom.

"I think I have the best of both worlds. I have a mandate to continue learning. Part of my job is to invite people to experiment with me, and I get to work with kids," she said.

"We focus on the process of making the curriculum work for children of all backgrounds so that the children celebrate what they are and what their differences bring to the classroom," Stern said. "A great part of our work is focused on multi-cultural education. Working with children of a lot of different backgrounds is a part of my job I love."

Stern did not plan to teach when she began her education. "It was absolutely clear I did not want to teach," she said. Her father was a college professor, and her mother was a teacher. She had gotten the impression that being a teacher meant grading a lot of papers, which was not what she wanted to do for a living. She said, "I got a doctorate thinking I might go into administration."

The only part of her job she dislikes, she said, are the funding problems that occur each year. "I mind the constant threats to education. Education is so undermined by Proposition 2 1/2. UMass is facing the same thing right now," she said. "The children are dis-enfranchised. They can't vote. They can't fight it. I don't believe in cutting those kinds of social services. It's too bad we don't put money into that resource instead of into defense," she said.

Stern said she taught for a couple of years with Molly Bang, who has written a number of children's books and received honors for The Paper Crane and Ten, Nine, Eight.

Stern said Bang came under separate contract to work in the Cambridge School System and together they taught hero and heroine adventure and folk tales to children in the seventh and eighth grades.

The lessons were an eight to 10 week program using materials which represented strong women role models and main characters of different races, colors and creeds. She said they analyzed the stories, and then had the children write and illustrate their own.

The process involved peer consultations, peer support and self editing, all of which Stern said she strongly approves. She also prefers judging papers as opposed to correcting and grading them.

"I look back now and think if I had had some guidance I probably would have gone to law school," Stern said. "I also wanted to play the piano. I played when I was younger. When I finished my doctorate 10 years ago I thought I would go back. I overlooked the fact that I had acquired two babies in the process."

She said, "It never occurred to me to go and be a reporter. Going back, I would never have changed my major. I would choose it again, regardless of what I was going to do."

She said, however, there were courses she wanted to take but she lacked the courage to take risks academically. "I played it safe and stayed with what I did well," she said. She wished she could have been a more flexible student, and said she is still very self-conscious when writing about herself. "If I could have reacted to my own writing and not just to somebody else's it would have been good for me as a writer."

Stern said she once tried to write a children's book with her father, but it lacked that special something she had observed in other children's books. Although it was a failure of unfinished writings she said, "I think the far greater danger is not to start them at all."

'...start where your interests are and keep building from that.'- Ann Swanson Stern Getting where she is today, Stern said, "had nothing to do with planning, which is not advice I would give to anybody. It was quite haphazard. The only thing I can say that runs through the whole thing is that I liked what I was doing.

"If I were to do it differently I think I would try and free myself to get involved in more things," she said.

Stern did spend a semester on exchange in Madrid, during her junior year. She described the trip as a wonderful and worthwhile experience made even more valuable because she went as a student. She met more people and learned more about the culture in Spain than she could have if she had she gone any other way, she said.

In fact, Stern took the remainder of the year off in order to stay there, teaching French and English to businessmen at night and English to small children in the daytime.

Stern said, "I had this mania to graduate with my class," so she took summer courses to make up the credits. She said she now realizes how crazy that was, and said, "what better way to be spending your time?"

Stern's best advice on making the most of one's education is "start where your interests are and keep building from that. Until that happens, learning doesn't occur."

In the past few years, business has come alive at 'dead mall'

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Nestled quietly among the restaurants and service centers of Route 9 in Hadley sits the Mountain Farms Mall, known among students as the "dead mall."

Operations Manager Charles Lange said allegations that the 16-year-old mall is dormant are unfounded.

"In the last three years," he said, "we have had a steady increase in business. We have almost filled the entire inner section of the mall."

Lange said there are only two retail spaces left to be filled, but Sam O'Connell, manager of The Gym, said the two large "anchor stores" are empty.

"From [The Gym] I can see three small spaces that are empty as well," he said. O'Connell said his two-and-a-half-year-old gymnasium has had steady business since it began, relying mostly on members for its income.

"We get no business from foot traffic," he said.

Lange, who owns the General Store, said four years ago, the mall had only four stores. Since then, business has improved steadily, he said.

Lange said there is "no marriage" between the Mountain Farms and Hampshire malls. When the "other mall," as Lange referred to it, was built in 1980, business at Mountain Farms began to decline, Lange said. Today, he said, Mountain Farms gets about one-third as much business as Hampshire.

Joan, an office worker at the Rug Store, said their business has been improving steadily in the last couple of years, but the store derives its income primarily from advertising, not window shoppers.

Other stores in the mall include an arcade called Just Fun, the Card and Gift Outlet, Mike's Speed Shop, a guitar shop, and a temporary discount clothing store which Lange said will soon be replaced with a comic book shop. Commercial space is also being leased to corporations such as Amherst Process Instruments, Validata and Heritage/NIS.

The weekly flea market at the Mountain Farms Mall attracts business from surrounding communities, Lange said. Last Saturday's sale had over 216 private dealers of "new, used and abused" merchandise. He added that shoppers came from 50 to 60 miles away.

With an increase in retail space and the addition of corporate leasing, Lange has high hopes.

"We're looking forward to an even bigger, better year next year," he said.

Do you have questions about SEX you wish you could ask someone?

ASK US

When is a woman most likely to become pregnant? Is it the first time she has sex, when she has sex standing up, and during menstruation?

The fact is, a woman can become pregnant after any single act of sexual intercourse. While it is true that ovulation — the release of an egg from a woman's ovary — is most likely to occur midway through her cycle, the reality is that ovulation can occur at any time, even during menstruation. Pregnancy can occur following ovulation, and that is why it is important to use contraception every single time you engage in sexual intercourse.

What is the morning-after pill? How can a woman get it?

The morning-after pill, Orval, is a pill containing the synthetic hormones estrogen and progesterone which can be used to prevent implantation of a fertilized egg in the event of method failure or unprotected intercourse. In order to be effective, this pill must be taken within 72 hours of the unprotected intercourse. Ovral does not cause an abortion if a woman is already pregnant. For a woman to be considered for this pill she must either call or come up to Urgent Care at Health Services as soon as possible.

What if I miss my birth control Pill?

If you forget to take a pill, take it as soon as you remember, and take the next pill at the regularly scheduled time even if it means you are taking two pills at the same time. If more than 12 hours has elapsed when the missed pill should have been taken, another contraceptive should be used for the rest of the month to make sure you are protected against pregnancy. The next month's pill pack will again provide full protection. Call Health Services if you have any further problems.

Ask Us is prepared by the Peer Sexuality Education Program at University Health Services. Questions should be sent there.

The internationally-known AIDS authority encouraged the audience to simplify their terms when talking about the disease, claiming that poor communication results in skewed statistics. "We're all a little confused as to what we're talking about right now," she said. "We must not pin our public health policies on data without basis."

A federal anti-discrimination law, favored by President Reagan's AIDS commission and President-elect Bush (but not by Reagan), would also go a long way toward helping the research community do its work, according to Osborn.

"A strong federal anti-discrimination mandate is needed to give muscle to these efforts. There's no sense doing research surveys without one..."

"We've had a very peculiar [lack of action] going on in the present administration. It's time to get cracking," continued Osborn, "and figure out how to care for our people... or we're barely a society worth saving."

"We're just letting people die on the streets — a long way away from saying we're concerned about individual worth."

Locals urged to press S. Africa to release blacks

A white University of Massachusetts graduate student is doing all he can to help blacks in his homeland — South Africa.

Paul Coplan, who is working toward a master's degree in public health and nutrition, is asking UMass students and local residents to send letters asking South African officials to stop the sentencing of four blacks convicted of treason and seven convicted of terrorism.

The convictions were announced Nov. 18 and the sentencing is scheduled for Monday. The punishments for the crimes will most likely be death by hanging, Coplan said.

The letters say the accused are not criminals, but black leaders struggling for Human Rights. They were protesting the government from which blacks are excluded. "They were working toward political participation through non-parliamentary means," he said.

"All they've done is organize strikes, boycotts, and demonstrations," Coplan said. "The South African government is using the judicial system to squash these political activities."

The student contrasted the possible sentencing with that of a South African white supremacist who was admitted to a psychiatric hospital for 30 days of observation after being charged last week with murdering six blacks. In South Africa this is the first step to being exonerated on the basis of mental instability, Coplan said.

Letters to the South African leaders should be addressed to State President P.W. Botha, Private Bag X 83, Pretoria, S. Africa 0001 and Minister of Law and Order Adrian Vlok, Private Bag X 463, Pretoria, S. Africa 0001.

Dutch company aids in polymer research

By STEPHEN PANGIONE
Collegian Correspondent

The Dutch chemical company Akzo N.V. will spend $1.2 million over the next three years in a partnership with the Polymer Science and Engineering Department of the University of Massachusetts for research in new polymers.

Akzo decided to start the research program here earlier this month after ruling out the option of building their own center.

"We had a choice between building a facility and starting a program," said Dr. Jan Vleggaar, head of Akzo's corporate research effort in the United States. "We chose to start a program, and we're presently farming out 100 percent of the research."

The Polymer Science and Engineering Department is the only program at UMass that does not offer undergraduate degrees. They train graduate and doctoral students in developing and researching new synthetic polymers, such as biodegradable plastics.

Akzo chose UMass because it is one of the few universities in the country that has such a program, and the research program is considered one of the best, according to William J. MacKnight, acting department head. Akzo has also set up a similar program at Virginia Polytechnical Institute.

The $1.2 million Akzo will spend here will be used for the purchase of new equipment for the department and for researching newly developed polymers, MacKnight said. Akzo will also provide the University with some of its own scientists to aid the research and to consult with students.

In return, the Polymer Science Department will provide Akzo with a fundamental understanding of the principles behind a new idea, MacKnight said. "If they see some new knowledge developing, they'll take it and use it for a product," he said.

Also, Akzo will be looking for new employees from the students at UMass. There is "a pool of potential personnel among the polymer scientists and chemists being trained at the University," Vleggaar said.

Sunlight triples the risk of cataracts, research says

BOSTON (AP) — Frequent exposure to intense sunlight can triple the risk of common form of cataracts, but hats and sunglasses largely eliminate this hazard, according to new research.

While experts have long suspected that strong sunlight is bad for the eyes, the new research provides some of the most powerful evidence yet that too much sun causes cataracts.

"If there is enough sunshine for you to get sunburned, then you should be protecting your eyes," said Dr. Hugh R. Taylor, who directed the study.

The researchers said the real culprit is ultraviolet B radiation, the same portion of the sunbeam that causes sunburns and increases the risk of skin cancer.

Cataracts, which cloud the lens of the eyes, are a major health problem, resulting in more than 1 million operations in the United States each year.

In the latest research, Taylor and colleagues at Johns Hopkins University estimated the annual ultraviolet exposure of 838 Chesapeake Bay fishermen. Their exposures varied, depending on how much they fished, the time of year they were on the water and whether they wore hats, and glasses, among other factors.

Doctors found no association between sunlight and cataracts of the nucleus of the lens. However, they found that it was strongly associated with cataracts of the surrounding cortex of the lens.

Cortical and nuclear cataracts each account for about one-third of all cases that require surgery. Not enough fishermen in the study had a third variety of eye damage, known as posterior subcapsular cataracts, to determine whether they also are caused by sunlight.

The study, published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, found that the greater the men's exposure to ultraviolet light, the greater their risk of cortical cataracts.

The researchers divided the fisherman into four groups, depending on the intensity of their exposure. The quarter with the highest annual had three times the risk of those in the group with the lowest exposure.

The research showed that people who had cortical cataracts received, on average, 21 percent more ultraviolet light than those who did not. Doubling the annual ultraviolet exposure increased the cataract risk by 60 percent.

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Sidney Lerman of New York Medical College wrote that prevention of light damage to the eye "is the best and simplest approach to the problem."

Taylor said that other studies by his group show that wearing a hat with a brim or visor cuts ultraviolet exposure to the eye in half. All glasses, including ordinary reading glasses, cut exposure significantly, although they vary in effectiveness.

The best, he said, are plastic lenses that are specifically designed to block ultraviolet rays. These can stop virtually all of these rays from reaching the eyes.

He said that ordinary, untinted glass spectacles stop about 80 percent of ultraviolet radiation, while similar plastic lenses keep out 90 percent. Run-of-the-mill cheap sunglasses block out about 95 percent.

Taylor said that the effectiveness of sunglasses at keeping out ultraviolet rays has nothing to do with how hard they are or how much the cost.

"Some of the very cheapest sunglasses can block almost 100 percent of UV," he said, "and some of the very expensive ones will still transmit through a lot of it. There's a whole lot of variation in between."

Man detained for murder of 2 Mass. women

THE VALLEY, Anguilla (AP) — Police in this British colony said yesterday a man has been detained in connection with the "double murder" of two Massachusetts women whose bodies were found on a deserted beach.

Police Commissioner Joseph Payne said a resident found the bodies on rocks along a deserted beach Tuesday morning seven miles east of Anguilla's capital of the Valley.

Anguilla is a self-ruling British-owned island with 7,000 inhabitants located in the Eastern Caribbean.

He identified the women as Susan Galvin and Martha Alsup, of Watertown. He said the women were dressed in bathing suits and were believed to be in their 30s.

Payne said a local man has been detained for questioning and will likely be charged "in connection with the double murder." But he refused to disclose further details surrounding the deaths.

Payne said the bodies were examined by a coroner and brought to a funeral home in The Valley.

The commissioner said he and Anguilla Gov. Geoffrey Whittaker visited the beach Wednesday morning and informed the US Embassy on the neighboring island of Antigua.

"They left Monday morning to tour the island," said Connell Harrigan, owner of Connell's Villa Hotel where the two women had been reportedly staying since Sunday.

Harrigan said the womens' car was left abandoned near the beach.

Boston man claims employees refused to save drowning friend

BOSTON (AP) — A man whose friend drowned in a boating accident claims his friend might be alive today if two workers at a Dedham store where he sought help had not laughed at his pleas for help.

The manager of the store, Sears in the Dedham Mall, acknowledges there was confusion and miscommunication but said the workers, a clerk and a security guard, ran to the river to try to help.

The man in in the river, Alberto Beltran, 40, an eye and ear technician from Boston, drowned Saturday evening.

Beltran's friend, who ran for help, Tomily Torres, 36, a social worker from Boston, told the Boston Globe that Beltran might be alive if the workers in the catalog section had heeded his pleas.

Metropolitan Police said they could not verify Torres' account of what happened.

Torres said he fell into the river when he stood to reach for bait and that Beltran tried to help him back into the boat but panicked when the boat dipped and took on water.

While swimming to shore 15 feet away, Torres said he looked back and saw Beltran jump into the water. Beltran had disappeared by the time he reached the shore, Torres said, and he ran across the four-lane Route 1 and into a side door of the Sears store.

Torres said he repeatedly begged for help, speaking rapidly in English and Spanish, but the two employees took him by the arms and escorted him outside the store.

He said he ran back in the store yelling, "Please call the police. Please call the Fire Department. My friend is drowning," but the employees laughed at him.

He said he then ran into an office and began taking off his clothes to draw attention to his plight, and the Dedham Fire and Police departments were notified.

Metropolitan Police said store personnel apparently spent 10 minutes with Torres before calling police and that officers and firefighters got to the river within 15 minutes.

A telephone operator at Sears called police at 5:12 p.m., Metropolitan Police said.

Tom Wezowicz, operating manager of the Sears store, said he was working Saturday and "I think confusion reigned."

He said an employee called his office between 5 and 5:30 to say a man had run into the store soaking wet, saying he had fallen into the river and that "police had sent him over for clothes," which Sears was to provide free.

Wezowicz said the caller expressed no urgency and that 5 or 10 minutes later, he got another call, saying, "You better come down here. This guy is really irate."

Wezowicz said he hurred downstairs and found Torres sitting on the floor with only a towel around his waist, apparently hysterical and yelling incoherently while medical technicians tried to calm him and police stood by.

The manager said he found out later that a Sears operator had called police about 10 minutes earlier.

Judge sets bail at $1 million for Sudbury man accused of murder

FRAMINGHAM (AP) — A judge set bail at $1 million surety yesterday for a 34-year-old Sudbury man accused of killing his infant daughter, a court official said.

Framingham District Judge Robert Campion also set a Dec 7 pretrial, probable cause hearing for David Azar in the death of a 3 1/2-month-old Geneva Azar, said clerk-magistrate Anthony Colonna.

The baby was dead on arrival when taken by authorities to Marlboro Hospital Sunday afternoon, according to a police report.

Azar surrendered to Sudbury police Wednesday evening in the company of his attorney.

"We called his attorney, and asked that he bring Mr. Azar in," said Sudbury Detective Sgt. Peter Langmaid.

"He had been questioned earlier in the house and in the station as part of the investigation. We asked that he be here at 6 p.m., and he was."

Langmaid said police received a call for medical aid at the Azar home Sunday afternoon.

Langmaid said Azar and his wife, Suzanne, have two other children.

Azar was jailed in Cambridge pending next week's hearing.

Greek growth ban is an unfair solution

A request by University of Massachusetts student Sen. Bob McDevitt to reconsider a Town Meeting ban on growth of the fraternity-sorority system was defeated earlier this week.

The ban, which changes the area along North Pleasant and Phillips streets from campus residence zoning to general residence, places a noose around the beleaguered Greek system at UMass by both preventing expansion and eliminating hope for houseless fraternities and sororities.

Peter Dow, the president of the building corporation at Alpha Chi Rho, summed it up best: "You saw the end of all new fraternities on campus tonight."

Despite problems over the past two semesters with Beta Kappa Phi (BKO) and Alpha Tau Gamma (ATG), the fraternity-sorority system as a whole has been, since 1915, a benefit to the University, aiding in campus beautification and sponsoring blood drives.

Supporters of the zoning measure argue that curtailing greek growth along that busy area is necessary because of a lack of parking, annoying levels of noise, and immense levels of trash on fraternity and sorority lawns.

While representatives for the fraternities and sororities agree these are problems, there is a lot of disagreement over how to solve the problem.

Frances Fortino, sponsor of the original article, said, "We've been trying to work with UMass for four years and longer. We've received little cooperation."

Fortino and others may feel the article is the best resolve, but we feel Interfraternity Council member Amer Syed has a better solution:

"We've organized neighborhood clean-up projects and we have our own parking lots, so the parking problem doesn't stem from us," he said. "My fraternity spent $7,000 this year to beautify the front lawn and we're implementing noise restraints and quiet hours."

If other fraternities and sororities follow suit, as some of them have, then there should be little need for the article. We hope the members of Town Meeting and the Greek Area can open communication lines and work toward a more equitable solution.

The Town Meeting decision is wrong, and the Greek Area should unite against it. The town is more than willing to play band leader in the anti-Greek processional that may one day lead to elimination of the system. But if the Greeks expect to challenge the decision made by the town, thay will need to make more noise than they did Monday.

What's the matter with me?

What time of year is Christmas really?

It is December.

Before, the arrival of this final month of the year used to bear some special meaning to me. It still does, seeing as how it marks to rapid approach of the end of the semester.

Jim Clark

Even before college though, December was the month that meant only one thing — Christmas.

I really loved Christmas. I still do, to a certain extent. But nowadays, the commercialization of the holiday is making it harder and harder for me to swallow — and it's too bad.

Christmas really is a time of year to enjoy. You get together with your family, exchange gifts and have good cheer. I look forward to Christmas every year for the simple fact that it's the only time that my entire immediate family, from my brother-in-law down to my little last niece, is together.

Yes, Christmas should be a special time. It would be, in my eyes, if it just kept to its own time of year. But now, Christmas is starting to spread thinner and thinner. And it's all a matter of greed (read: money).

To me, nothing is more sickening than going into a mall or a store early in November and seeing Christmas decorations all over the place.

Of course, Christmas is not the only occasion that the stores take advantage of. One of my worst fears is going to a store at the end of August looking to do some Back to School shopping, only to be informed that it was time for the Halloween sales. Back to School, I would be told, now takes place in July. Terrific.

But stores are not alone. It almost seems that the entire world has suddenly lost its concept of time. Of course, time is relative, physicists tell us, and it's what you make of it. But it seems the 12 days of Christmas have become more like 12 months. It never ends.

I was riding the bus yesterday to campus. I saw one house that already had its Christmas tree up, while several others were decorated. All of downtown Amherst was in the spirit, with big red bows and green garland wrapped around every light pole on the main drag, and one of the trees on the Common was conveniently decked out in tiny white lights.

In November.

And television is guilty as well. It's bad enough that TV manipulates our way of thinking. But now the visual media industry is doing its share to ruin one of the best holidays of the year.

When I was a kid, I could look forward to watching Rudolph, Frosty and the Grinch just a couple of days before the big event. It's bad enough that outsiders have intruded; we now can feast our eyes on A Garfield Christmas, John Denver's Christmas Special, etc. What next? A Tom Brokaw Christmas?

Please.

But even TV has been caught in the "time warp." Checking my TV Guide the other day, I saw all I needed to see. Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer — December 4. Enough said.

Fortunately, there are some of us who still cherish wrapping the joys of Christmas into one big ball. To me, there is no better way to get into the spirit than to go out a day or two before, pushing and shoving my way through angry mobs to get all my shopping done. It comes in handy, usually because I'm still wired after spending the previous week taking finals.

But for the most part people are changing their ways. There are more in the world who get everything done the day after Thanksgiving, or even before. They've never enjoyed the wonders of last-minute shopping, having to decide if Uncle Fred would really like a Seattle Seahawks sweatshirt, mainly because it's the only thing left on the shelves that hasn't been destroyed.

I really don't know what's happened. Has there been this giant shift in time since I was a kid? Maybe it's the greenhouse effect. Maybe scientists never really figured out the leap year business properly. Daylight-saving time. Massive jet lag. Whatever.

All I know is that this trend is destroying what has been one of my favorite times of year.

But while we're at it . . . I turn 21 in March. Do you think I could start celebrating next week?

Mark misses the mark

In reading David R. Mark's editorial ("Let's work, and watch, together," Nov. 29,) I was surprised to find after many weeks of controversy surrounding the coming visit of Louis Farrakhan that the main issue is still being misrepresented. Mark states at one point that "The question at hand . . . is whether he should be allowed to speak here" and later that UMass students will have to hear Farrakhan "in order to make a point about free speech."

The primary objection to Farrakhan's visit has nothing to do with free speech. Louis Farrakhan, as a citizen of this country, is entitled to the same right to free speech as anyone else.

The main issue is whether or not student or university money should be used to bring him here. If it cost nothing for Farrakhan to come here, or if those who support him were paying all costs, many who have opposed his visit would be content to simply not attend his lecture. Others, however, outraged by his past anti-Semitic remarks, would understandably voice their opposition through demonstrations.

Only a handful of members of the Distinguished Visitors Program have decided for us that louis Farrakhan qualifies as a "Distinguished Visitor," and as a result will spend thousands of dollars of our money to bring him here. Do we really think they are spending our money wisely? If so, who might we accept as jour next "Distinguished Visitor?" Would the leader of the American Nazi Party or someone in the Ku Klux Klan apply?

Stifling speech prevents reaching intelligent answers

I'm afraid.

I'm a little ticked off.

You see, many people on this campus seem to forget that we have this annoying little guarantee called freedom of speech. As a columnist, I have a very hard time forgetting it. If I did, I'd be cutting my own throat, so I don't mind admitting that I am being a selfish little upstart whenever I espouse freedom of speech.

Pamela McCarthy

I like being offended.

You all are probably thinking that I'm ready for the rubber room and the cute little jackets that let me hug myself. "Pamela," you're probably thinking, "the only columns you're gonna write from now on will be in crayon."

Thing is, when I'm offended, I start to think. I start to pick apart the offending argument, movie, book, etc., and show how my side could be considered valid. You may decide that it isn't valid — hey, you may even think I am an evil influence on the human race. Once you think that, you've got a job ahead of you. You have to start to think about what was wrong with my argument. You have to show me where you think I went wrong. Maybe one day I'll discover I was wrong about something. (It has happened to me on occasion.) Maybe one day, you'll decide that you were wrong. Either way, argument and debate will bring us closer to a solution.

Hey, here's an example: Farrakhan's coming. Oh, you know the guy I'm talking about. He's that anti-Semitic, black power advocate. Certain people would hate to see come here.

I've heard some state that he shouldn't come. I've heard some others say that they don't know what they are talking about and should keep their mouths shut.

What hasn't occurred to anyone is that Farrakhan has a right to speak here.

A few weeks ago, I wrote a column on abortion. I managed to offend most of the University of Massachusetts population. That's my job. What if someone thought that because I was advocating murder (according to them), my column should not have been run? What if someone who was against abortion wrote a column about it and was told it wouldn't be run because it was sexist?

In fact, it really amazes me how people will glory in the freedom of speech until they get offended by someone exercising that very right. Then it's different. Oh, lord, stop that story, ban that book, edit all the "bad" and "dangerous" parts out of that movie.

Well, I've got a question for you. Who decides what is "dangerous" and "bad?" What qualifies any one person or group to do this? I don't care who they are, I don't care how many people are behind them. Chances are, they may have offended someone today. And I'd be willing to bet money that they'd screech in horror over someone trying to keep them from expressing themselves.

People may never find out why each side believes what it does. People may never learn of alternatives, because we'd never get to them. We'd be silent and afraid of offending anyone.

If you run across something that gets you angry and offended, do one of two things. Either ignore it, or present your own side. But for God's sake, don't try to surpress it, or edit it to your liking. That's plain self-centered. Assuming that you know best and that you have the ultimate answer to the argument is little too arrogant for intelligent people.

Just my opinion

Random thoughts find this world in some disarray

I was thinking:

The world is a messed up place. George Bush is president-elect, Dan Quayle could be president someday, and a cheeseburger at McDonald's is 85 cents now.

I want everyone to know that there are people who are skinheads, but who aren't neo-Nazis. Some are really cool, some aren't. They are individuals. Some of them even have started a group called SHARP — Skin Heads Against Racial Prejudice.

Why is the air conditioning still on in Herter Hall?

The Undergraduate Student Senate is always in turmoil. I think they would argue over whether Campus Center is white or grey (like it matters).

John Goulding needs more groupies, Bob and I can't do it all. Please apply at Thompson Hall, his office.

People should do more thinking.

I know many people complain about how early the retail sector and media try to start the Christmas season, but it bugs me too. Especially when "It's a Wonderful Life" airs the night before Thanksgiving.

I looked at that book which tells every American what they should know. Who cares what nucleic acid is. Why should someone be able to quote Anthony's speech in "Julius Caesar" by Shakespeare. Who cares what an ampersand does in the English language.

Peter Leon

There are a lot of good movies coming out now, but why is there such a difference in price depending on where you are? It costs $5.75 in Boston to go to a movie. In Manhattan, N.Y., it is $7. At Hampshire Mall it costs $2.75, with a student ID. I know that labor is more expensive in cities, but come on. Maybe it is just that the movie houses in cities are greedy capitalists out to make huge profits for themselves . . . naaah, couldn't be.

Did everyone get to the see the Grinch Monday night? Did y'all play the "who" drinking game? Good . . .

By the way Happy Chanukah and Kwanza to everyone. Let's all try to remember that there are people who don't celebrate Christmas.

Does anybody ever read my columns? Or is this right now in a gerbil cage in the dorms somewhere?

Reading over the reprinted speeches of Louis Farrakhan, I found (from what was printed) that he isn't anti-Semitic. Instead he is wrong for emulating Adolf Hitler. He said Hitler turned Germany into the greatest fighting force of the 20th century. This is good? Turning people into a killing machine is not something to find as a good quality in a person. Besides, Hitler wanted to create a world full of white Aryans. This would seem to preclude any black people from being around.

Just remember: "When the oppressed oppress the oppressed they not only do the work of the oppressors, but they make certain their own doom."

UMass can do better than Duffey

Look at what's going on. . .

A hockey arena is being built when existing facilities need renovating; the size of the freshman class will be cut by 500-600 next year, and a professor hiring freeze is still in effect while a monument is to be built in Central area; the Polymer Research Center has been postponed "indefinitely" while a million dollar project "information center" is being built across from the Newman Center; a committee met and suggested fees be more than 30 percent of the tuition, Chancellor Joseph Duffey's solution is to raise the tuition.

We need a chancellor who will remember the purpose of the University of Massachusetts as well as all state colleges — to provide students with an affordable, quality education.

What we need is a chancellor who will make sure that more than the road to his house is repavod on schedule. Morrill, Goessman, Hasbrouck and Thompson should have had their renovations completed before the start of the semester, not October.

The library's budget should not have been cut $420,000 and justified by the state's budget problem when students are going to have to pick up the tab for the other $27 million of the $52 million arena.

What we need is a chancellor with a backbone to remind the state government of the reason for this University, instead of the facade Duffey is supporting.

EWC needs administration's support

Some people believe that women are already the social equals of men, but the three rapes and one murder reported at the beginning of the semester, right here in our hometown, tell us that is not true.

Daria Casinelli

It didn't matter how much money the two women at Smith College had, or how strong Virginia Ferrer was (stabbed to death by her abusive boyfriend), or how honest and brave "Susan" is (whose rape at the University of Massachusetts was reported on Oct. 11).

They are still part of the less-than-equal majority, and as long as women remain less than equal, rape and battering will continue to happen.

The most effective way to stop rape is to raise the social status of all women. Right now, in our capitalist society status comes from job titles and money not child-rearing abilities and humanness. Within our University the agency that does, or did, the most to increase all women's access to education and jobs, as well as to help heal rape victims, is the Everywoman's Center.

The EWC's mission is "to promote educational access and equity for women in higher education." Its services include "an extensive information and referral system; 24-hour comprehensive services to victims and survivors of rape, battering, sexual assault and sexual harassment; advocacy and educational programming designed to meet the needs of women of color on a primarily white campus; counseling, assessments and referrals for women experiencing problems with eating disorders and alcohol/substance abuse; and academic and personal support and advocacy for women who want to return to school."

All in all the EWC is the best you can get for your money when it comes to working within the system to increase the status of women and fight rape. One wonders then why the administration is so eager to get rid of it. The above quotes are from a letter by the director of the EWC, Carol Wallace.

Wallace and others are protesting budget cuts that will force the EWC to eliminate two of its programs and the proposed "administrative realignment" of the EWC outside of the Division of Educational Access and Outreach (DEAO). What's most troubling about the budget cuts are that the EWC is absorbing 50 percent of the cuts within DEAO, a division with five units. What's most troubling about the "administrative realignment" is that no one's been told where the EWC will be aligned to. Since there is no place more appropriate for the EWC than the DEAO, supporters fear that this is a ploy to quietly eliminate the only University agency that deals with the causes of rape.

To stop rape we can urge Chancellor Joseph Duffey to fund the EWC. Yet have we done all we can to stop rape?

What do our University's administrators gain by the elimination of the Everywoman's Center? They get looser budgets — ones that can include even more money for military research on campus — but if I were raped you can sure as hell bet its the EWC I'd call, not Rambo.

What about you?

Saxophonist Steve Gaudreau heads into Jazz Ensemble I rehearsal.

Journalist ends nine-semester stint with Jazz Ensemble I

By CORINNA J. MOEBIUS
Collegian Staff

Every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon Steve Gaudreau lifts his saxaphone from its white plastic case and walks over to the empty seat waiting for him. In a few minutes he will be surrounded by sound, the sound of jazz. Trumpets and trombones behind him, the director leaning forward as if to catch the syncopated melody . . . it's just another Jazz Ensemble I rehearsal, the one-credit class Gaudreau looks forward to.

To be in this top jazz ensemble at the University of Massachusetts, that will perform tonight at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, Gaudreau has to dedicate hours to rehearsals, concerts, tours and practicing. But for the senior Journalism major this commitment is worth all the time and dedication it requires. Now the lead alto saxophonist, Gaudreau is ending his ninth semester with the ensemble, which is directed by Jeff Holmes.

Gaudreau has been in the band since it started winning a series of national jazz competitions. Downbeat magazine awarded the ensemble gold medals at three Musicfest competitions in 1987 and 1988, also giving it the 1987 "dee-bee" award for "Best Collegiate Jazz Ensemble."

Gaudreau remembers when the band won the top award at the Notre Dame Collegiate Jazz Festival in Indiana. "Jeff was up there smiling, he was smiling through the whole performance — from ear to ear. Before we even finished tunes, people were screaming. When we finished our set, it was a standing ovation . . . it just felt so good."

Gaudreau said he sometimes wonders why he didn't major in music, since playing is such an important part of his life. A native of Foxboro, a town noted for its excellent high school jazz program, Gaudreau almost followed his musical peers in pursuing a fine arts degree. He said that during high school he was set on a major

Poetry penetrates star's image

By RICHARD A.BOUCHER,JR.
Collegian Correspondent

Wilderness
Villard Books

Wilderness is a collection of never-before-seen poetry and lyrics by Jim Morrison, lead singer for the 60s underground idols, the Doors. It was compiled by the parents of Morrison's late wife, Pamela Courson, and by Frank and Kathy Lisciandro, friends of Morrison's during the Doors period. Morrison, who died in 1971, willed his writings to Courson, who died four years later. The Coursons and Lisciandros have been working ever since to put together a proper collection of Morrison's writings, and only now have finished their work.

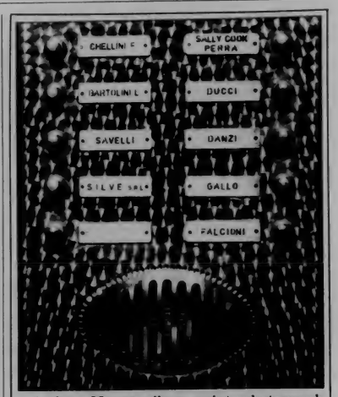
Before I bought the book, I knew I would encounter a very different type of writing, mainly because of what I've seen of Morrison the performer and the other ways I had always thought of him.

I was proven correct. After some reading of Wilderness, the oblivious rock clown was shown to be just a screen, a display hiding a genuinely contemplative and attentive person. The poetry in Wilderness brings to light a new appeal to Morrison as an artist of inestimable worth. His work demonstrates that he has a depth and insight into life that's surprising, considering the portrait he made of himself as the spacey, drug-crazed rock star. His inventive phrasings lend a Western, warrior or cowboy-like sense of observing or surveying the scene to the poem:

"The Wolf, who lives under the rock has invited me to drink of his cool Water. Not to splash or bathe, But leave the sun and know the dead desert night and the cold men who play there."

And he shows a good grasp of tempo: "I am troubled Immeasurably By your eyes/ I am struck By the feather of your soft Reply/ The sound of glass Speaks quick Disdain/ And conceals What your eyes fight to explain." When I was younger, I always assumed Morrison to be one of those "druggies." Well, some of the verse in Wilderness seems to confirm this, too. Witness Morrison's sobering grasp on reality here: "I received an Aztec wall of vision and dissolved my room in sweet derision/ Closed my eyes, prepared to go/ A gentle wind inform'd me so/ And bathed my skin in ether glow." Writing such as this fascinates me and makes me wonder about the kind of mind producing it. His writing is only descriptive for a second or two, then it dawns on you that you had to think about it for a bit to catch what he meant. He created his own expressions (street pizza — meaning a gored accident victim lying in the road) and takes free verse to its logical extent and beyond.

Wilderness, with a foreword written by Morrison long ago in anticipation of the day when his work would be published, is a fantastic read that's like a magnet that lets you get only so far away from it before drawing you back in, to see something new each time.



Arthur Mones silver print photograph "Venice" is part of an exhibit of his works in the display Ten Years of Photographs at Mount Holyoke College Art Museum opening Saturday.

Rapeman take mule to the edge; Thug give mammoth a black eye

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Does the name Steve Albini mean anything to you? To me it means two things — genius . . . and idiot. Albini used to be the front-man of legendary pneumatic noise terrorists, Chicago's finest — Big Black, whose Atomizer LP still stands as one of the best slices of psychotic rock'n'roll to emerge in recent years. But after '87's Songs About Fucking the band decided to call it a day, and Albini moved on to other projects, among them producing the mighty Bitch Magnet on their debut EP, Star Booty, and forming his own band, the dubiously titled Rapeman.

Disc Junkie

And this is where my problem with Albini begins, because despite his defense of the name (it comes from a Japanese porn comic where the "Rapeman" of the title is a superhero who rapes criminals, both men and women, as a punishment for their wrongdoings) whichever way you look at it, it's both derogatory to women and it trivializes rape.

So why don't I just dis this band? Because Rapeman have just come out with one of the best LPs of the year, that's why! Two Nuns and a Pack Mule (Touch & Go) is a brilliant, volatile and highly explosive record which kicks the shit out of their previous Bud EP. This is Big Black reborn, except with a previously unrealized funkiness. "Steak and Black Onions" could be described as a very twisted dance track with its sledgehammer beat and screeching guitar licks, while the snappily titled "Coition Ignition Mission" adds a rock'n'roll sensibilty to the band's magnetic concrete cacophony. And a delicious sense of humor is displayed on the Sonic Youth pisstake, Kim Gordon's Panties, which begins with a distinctly SY guitar sound, before getting bored and reverting to the more frantic style of Rapeman.

I remember seeing Big Black live a couple of years ago and they were laying paving slabs on the opposition, so it's going to be really interesting to see what Rapeman can come up with. Cracking stuff, shame about the name.

Electric Woolly Mammoth (Black Eye) is by Thug, three extremely disturbed guys from Down Under who are really into weird noises in a big way. This is the sound of your TV having a nervous breakdown; of an epileptic vacuum cleaner — in short, of every major appliance in your home . . . on acid. Thug don't play their instruments so much as torture them into confessing their sins. In the hands of Thug, synthesizers become incontinent babbling beasts, guitars are stretched to breaking point until they scream for mercy — which is just as it should be. The only thing I don't get is the presence of a couple of breezy, jangly pop songs at the tail end of each side of an album which, with a surgeon's precision, rips the innards out of the computer age. Perhaps they're there to say that at the end of the day, despite the name, Thug are human after all. Amen to that.

■ Gaudreau

on music, "but right at the last minute I didn't want to trap myself on one track."

Gaudreau chose Journalism for his major; he had been editor of his high school newspaper. He has a minor in Psychology.

From freshman year on, Gaudreau has had to juggle his attention between the band and his other classes. "I would want to do really well in school, so for a few weeks at a stretch I'd be studying every night and trying to bring my grades up. And then I'd remember — well, wait a minute — I've got to practice, too, and I can't let that go. So then I'd start practicing during the time I was supposed to be studying," he said.

Despite the inevitable frustration in trying to keep up with what he has to do and what he wants to do, Gaudreau said he is satisified with his arrangement. When it came to music, "I just wanted to play," he said.

Gaudreau said he has had the opportunity to grow musically by participating in Jazz Ensemble I. "Just exposure to more artists . . . the experience of playing with a jazz ensemble, going on tour (for four years now) — it's really centralized my idea of the art," he said.

He said by introducing friends to big band jazz, he has, in a way, contributed to their musical growth. "Friends of mine that come to hear the band . . . come away saying that it was good, they didn't expect that. They think of jazz and they think of the old swing era. There's been a lot happening since then." Now, he said, friends are always asking him when the next concert is.

One way the ensemble hopes to get more attendance at concerts is through distribution of their tape Fever which they had digitally recorded last spring. The tape, produced through the band's trust fund, serves as a historical document of their sound and as a demo tape. It will be sold at tonight's concert for $6.50 to students and $8.00 to the general public. Gaudreau is a soloist in two of the works on the tape.

Sometimes friends suggest he "should get out of the band, it's just a waste of time," Gaudreau said. His answer to that is: "If you're saying that to me, than you don't know me very well. Even if I'm no good at it, or if I can't make it or be the best, it's my means of expression. If I couldn't play this horn, what would I do? This is the perfect way for me to express myself."

Daniels' Homesick has no heroes

By SCOTT NANCE
Collegian Correspondent

Homesick Heroes
The Charlie Daniels Band
Epic Records

Charlie Daniels captured mainstream America a few years ago fiddling a bit of down-home lore in "The Devil Went Down to Georgia." It had a pop feel and it was an entertaining story. The Charlie Daniels Band's latest LP, Homesick Heroes, fiddles on with Jerry Lee Lewis-like piano and Daniels continues to spin down-home yarns to the tune of a hoe-down.

Daniels and his band "saw," as he would say it, some hot licks in places. The musicianship is certainly up to par, but unfortunately, a lot of these licks can't carry a whole song, and it gets repetitive, especially after more than one or two listens. "Get Me Back to Dixie" gets whiny and annoying, but "Boogie Woogie Man" and "Boogie Woogie Fiddle Blues" pass the test with a fairly good countryish-blues groove. "You Can't Pick Cotton" is excellent square-dance material. Daniels' voice does a good job sounding like the basic country-western bard.

The lyrics are like episodes of The Dukes of Hazzard set to music. The songs range from fiddle heroes to hillbilly feuds to "A Cowboy Hat in Dallas," a love song so inane it's funny: "Ain't no beach in Malibu/ Ain't no cars in Carson City/ Ain't no water in Waterloo/ And there ain't a guitar pick in Nashville/if I ain't in love with you."

Perhaps it seems to be meant in a humorous vein, but "Uneasy Rider' 88" might be considered offensive: "And that beautiful girl was just a beautiful man/ I'm going back to where the women are women and the men are men."

With the exception of a few bright spots, I've heard it all before, both the tunes and the lyrics. Only if you've followed Charlie Daniels for a while or if you want to listen to something that's "typical" country-western is Homesick Heroes for you, because there's nothing heroic about it.

■ Minutewomen hold on, remain unbeaten

After a bucket by Laura Boettcher, who led the Terriers with 14 points, the Minutewomen reeled off their first big spurt of the game, all points coming from junior center Helen Freeman.

A turnaround jumper tied the score, and then Freeman took a feed from Riley for a three-point play to put UMass up, 31-28. Another tough inside hoop gave the Minutewomen their biggest lead of the game, 33-28.

BU chipped back behind Boettcher and Lynn Bay (7 points), but Christel Zullo shook off a tough first half, scoring 11 of her game-high 15 points in the second half to keep UMass rolling.

With the score tied at 42-all, the senior co-captain went up strong with a rebound and later hit a pair of free throws to give the Minutewomen a tenuous four-point edge. But a pair of buckets by Theriault around a Bay free throw made it 47-46 and set up the finish.

Despite the good start for UMass, Hewelt still sees a lot of improvement before the Minutewomen get to where they want to be.

"We have a long way to go before we're a good basketball team," Hewelt said. "We need to make good, positive decisions. Our judgment is very poor, but it will get better."

The Minutewomen committed 24 turnovers in the game, but forced 24 on BU's part to even things out.

For the game, Freeman and McCusker joined Zullo in double figures with 11 and 10 points, respectively. McCusker also pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds, including 10 of the defensive boards.

Hoop-la: UMass will have a brief rest before getting back into action on Saturday, when it travels to the University of Hartford for an afternoon contest (2 p.m.).

"We need a little bit of a rest. We've been going hard since October 15," Hewelt said. . . The Terries go back to Beantown winless in two tries.

Celtics clobber New Jersey, 133-100

BOSTON (AP) — Kevin McHale scored 26 points and the Boston celtics avoided their first month with a losing record since Larry Bird joined them in 1979 by routing the New Jersey Nets 133-100 last night.

The Celtics extended to 61 their streak of winning months by boosting their record to 8-7, with all their games played in November. Their last losing month was April, 1979, when they were 1-5. Bird, expected to be sidelined until March after heel surgery, joined them the next season.

Boston, which never trailed, began the game with an 11-3 surge and led by at least 10 for the final 42 minutes. The Celtics were ahead 41-19 after the first quarter, when they made 16 of 22 shots and had 11 assists compared with New Jersey's 4-for-17 shooting and one assist.

The Celtics led 68-42 at halftime but went cold after matching their biggest lead, 87-54, with 5:23 left in the third quarter.

New Jersey finished the period with an 18-6 spurt, led by Roy Hinson's seven points, to close the gap to 93-72.

An 11-4 run in to start the fourth quarter drew the Nets within 97-83. But the Celtics got seven of the next nine points, taking a 104-85 lead with 8:02 left, and capped the victory with a 16-4 run as they outscored the Nets 40-28 in the fourth quarter.

McKeown and Palazzi gain honors

A pair of University of Massachusetts football players have received top honors, it was announced yesterday.

Senior linebacker John McKeown was named to the Kodak All-American team for Division I-AA. McKeown last week was named first team All-Yankee Conference.

Also, senior quarterback Dave Palazzi will receive the George 'Bulger' Lowe Award as the top offensive player in New England for 1988.

Palazzi is the fourth UMass player to be honored in the 50 years that the award has been given. He broke most every UMass passing record this season, including career records for most yards passing, most passes completed, most passes attempted and most totals yards of offense.

Minutemen stopped by Terriers, 78-76 . . .

Late UMass rally falls short in the end freshman Anton Brown paces UMass with 17

By MATT GERKE
Collegian Staff

During the second half of last night's game, the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team got a glimpse of the way things could be.

But in the final eight seconds, it got a quick reminder of the way things still are.

Freshman guard Anton Brown's two free throws with :08 left capped off a second-half rally and pulled UMass to within a point of Boston University, 77-76.

BU's Jeff Timberlake was immediately fouled and hit the first of two free throws and when he missed the second, UMass captain David Brown appeared to have the rebound. But Brown lost it, and, after a scramble, a jump ball was called.

BU was awarded the ball, and was able to kill the final eight seconds and beat the Minutemen 78-76 in front of 3450 fans at the Curry Hicks Cage.

"I was trying to rush down court and he got a hand on it," David Brown said.

"I don't know how many times in practice I keep yelling 'Two hands, two hands,'" UMass head coach John Calipari said. "I want them to rebound with two hands and catch with two hands. He went after it with one hand."

The loss spoiled a second half surge that allowed the Minutemen, 1-1, to get close.

Anton Brown scored 13 of his team-high 17 points in the second half as UMass erased the Terriers 46-32 halftime lead.

"Anton had a great game," Calipari said. The Terriers opened their lead up to 52-38 points with 16:13 left in the game, when Timberlake hit a 10-foot jumper from the right side.

Freshman guard Jimmy McCoy had a three-pointer and a pair of free throws as the Minutemen scored the next seven points to pull within 52-45.

BU's lead then got as high as 11, when Tony DaCosta hit a three-pointer to make it 68-57 with 7:36 left.

UMass whittled away, though, led by sophomore forward John Tate, who contributed seven points in the next five minutes. And when Anton Brown nailed two free throws with eight seconds left, the lead had been cut to one.

But Timberlake, a senior guard and captain, had something to say about that, and made the key first shot of a one-and-one free throw situation.

"Timberlake is a great leader," David Brown said. "Their senior guards were heady down the stretch."

In the game, Timberlake scored 22 points and handed out seven assists for BU, now 1-1. DaCosta, the other senior guard, contributed 11 points and eight assists.

But David Brown thought it was a junior forward, Ron Moses, who did the most damage.

"He did an excellent job," Brown said. "He took up space and I don't think he missed a shot. I think he was the difference in the game."

Moses finished a perfect 6-for-6 from the floor, and finished with 15 points.

Moses had eight of his points in the first half, when the Terriers jumped out to a solid lead. They were helped by the fact that UMass scored just two points in the first three minutes.

"We can't have that kind of start from the seniors," Calipari said. "The freshmen and the guys without much experience, I expect that from them. But not from the seniors."

"I also think I made a coaching mistake in the first half," Calipari said. "I don't think I played enough people. We were tired and their lead bulged to 11 and we had to fight to get back."

UMass almost pulled it off, but in the end came up short, literally and figuratively.

"We're not a big team but we really expected to beat them," David Brown said. "We thought their guards were excellent and their front line was adequate. Their front line was more than we expected."

Fast breaks: Anton Brown has scored 17 points in each of his first two college games . . .McCoy finished with 13 points for UMass while David Brown had 14 and senior forward Duane Chase chipped in 11.

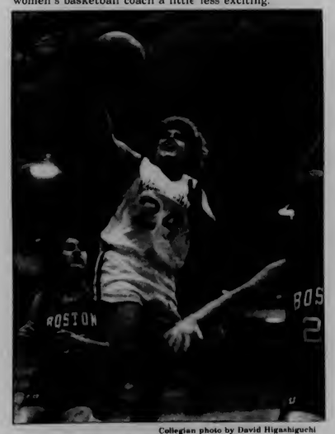
. . . but Minutewomen make it a split, 50-49

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

If she had had it her way, Kathy Hewelt would have made her home debut as the University of Massachusetts women's basketball coach a little less exciting.



Collegian photo by David Higashiguchi

Sophomore guard Trish Riley had eight points to spark the Minutewomen to a 50-49 win over Boston University yesterday at the Cage.

What instead transpired was a typical Curry Hicks Cage nailbiter that ended with the Minutewomen taking a 50-49 decision from Boston University yesterday.

With the win, the Minutewomen move to 2-0 on the season and keep Hewelt's record with the Minutewomen perfect. But that was never guaranteed until the last tick of the now-famous Curry Hicks scoreboard clock.

And as they always say, you take a win any way you can get it.

"We don't care how ugly they are, as long as we win them," Hewelt said.

Even if it wasn't the smoothest of ballets, it was an exciting contest at the end. The Minutewomen took a 50-47 lead with 2:06 to play and held on down the stretch to seal it.

Trailing 47-46, sophomore forward Keyburn McCusker put the Minutewomen on top to stay with 2:32 left as she grabbed her own miss and muscled it in past two defenders. After a BU timeout, Christel Zullo put UMass up by three, taking it into the lane from the left side.

Those would be the last points the Minutewomen would get, but the defense held the fort just long enough to make it stand.

Tia Theriault closed the gap to one point with a pair of free throws with 1:38 to play. Then, after each team missed opportunities, BU called a timeout to set up a final shot.

Taking advantage of the situation, Hewelt set up some strategy of her own, sending in senior forward Beth Wilbor to replace sophomore guard Trish Riley.

"We figured 12 (Theriault) would be the key player on that play. She had gotten that last basket over Trish," Hewelt said.

It was playing a hunch maybe, but it was a correct one. Theriault had the ball as the shot clock wound down to zero, and fired up a stray shot from the top of the key. Michele Pytko grabbed the rebound with three seconds left and called timeout.

"Beth's intensity and size made all the difference in the world," Hewelt said of the play.

On the inbounds, Pytko got the ball across court to Riley, who dribbled out the clock and the game.

All the dramatics at the end heightened what was actually a sluggish game at best. For the second straight outing, UMass held its opponent's shooting below freezing, as the Terriers beat the rim at a 29 percent clip (18-for-62). But the Minutewomen were shooting just 36 percent themselves, enough to keep the game close.

UMass set the tone for the game by missing its first eight shots, but the Terriers could only cash in for six points during that span. Zullo's coast-to-coast jaunt broke the ice five minutes into the game as the Minutewomen slowly brought themselves back into it.

Using good defensive pressure, UMass scratched back to a 14-all tie on Riley's coastal with 7:03 to play in the half. The Minutewomen had several fast break and transition buckets in the first 20 minutes to keep themselves going.

Minutewomen, 50-49

Massachusetts (50): Keyburn McCusker 5 0-0 10; Beth Wilbor 1 0-0 2; Helen Freeman 4 3-7 11; Michele Pytko 1 0-0 2; Christel Zullo 6 3-5 15; Sue Serafini 1 0-0 2; Trish Riley 3 2-3 8. Team Totals: 21 8-15 50.

Boston University (49): Laura Bostcher 6 2-2 14; Lynn Bay 1 5-8 7; Andrea Ashark 4 1-2 9; Tia Theriault 3 2-2 8; Marjorie Haney 0 0-0 0; Lynne Rizzardo 2 2-3 6; Shannon Breslin 0 0-0 0; Corinne Hughes 0 0-0 0; Renee Doctor 1 0-0 2; Marion Dukeman 1 0-0 2. Team Totals: 18 10-17 49.

Three-point goals: Theriault

"I thought our defensive pressure in the backcourt was very good. It really opened things up for us," Hewelt said. "Those transition baskets in the first half really sparked us."

Still, the best the two teams could do was a 22-22 tie going into the intermission. No UMass player had more than four points in the first half.

The Terriers took a brief 26-22 lead early in the second half before UMass drew back to 26-all on an inside hoop and a pair of free throws by Riley. The sophomore finished the game with eight points and four assists.

"Trish played a great game," Hewelt said. "She really got us going."

Students may still be in ATG house

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

The Collegian has learned that some members of Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity may still be living in the chapter houses, even though they were ordered to vacate the premises by Thanksgiving.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson ordered the members to move out in early November, after the University of Massachusetts stripped the fraternity of official recognition because of alleged hazing violations.

Director of Greek Affairs Carlene Riccelli said notices were sent to the members' new residences yesterday, reminding them they are supposed to be out of the two houses on North Pleasant Street.

Riccelli said her office will check later in the week to see if the members have complied with this latest reminder. She said it would be fairly easy to decide whether the houses are occupied.

"If you go by at 11 o'clock at night and the lights are on in the house, then they are living there," she said.

The Collegian has been by the house Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday nights at various times, often after 11 p.m. Every time, several lights were lit in at least one house.

Riccelli also said if people are walking around inside at night, it is a safe assumption brothers are living there. When the Collegian visited the area Tuesday night, a man, wearing underwear, could be seen in one of the windows of the house. Pictures and various wall decorations could also be seen hanging up on the wall of a room.

The Collegian called the house Wednesday afternoon. A man answered the phone: "Hello, ATG." When the Collegian asked for Derek Mannion, president of the fraternity, the man said Mannion was out doing "school stuff," but would "be back around 5 or 5:30 p.m."

However, when the Collegian called again yesterday, a man who answered the phone with just "hello," said Mannion was not in, and he didn't know when he would be back, since "you know, we've all moved out." The man said some members were in the house "cleaning up and studying." He did not give his name.

Riccelli said the vice chancellor told her yesterday that he had received several reports that ATG members were still occupying the house.

Madson said members would receive severe punishment if they were still living in the houses.

"If they're playing games and still living there, they're going to be disenrolled," he said.

Riccelli said the brothers who had to move into University housing have already picked up their room keys and have been billed for the housing.

Proposed budget cuts prompt action by UMass

• Student trustee, other students to visit two Town Meetings to protest budget cuts

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice and several other students are planning to visit two Town Meetings tomorrow to protest possible cuts to the University of Massachusetts budget.

Gov. Michael Dukakis is scheduled to be at the Springfield and Pittsfield meetings.

"We want the governor to realize that public higher education is a priority to the students and the taxpayers of Mssachusetts," Orefice said.

While no cuts have officially been made, Orefice said the latest word is that about $5 million will be lopped off the UMass budget. The reductions are part of a $20 million state-wide public higher education budget cut for fiscal year '89.

Orefice said students attending the meeting will be asking questions, not waving signs and trying to make disruptions. "We are not going in a confrontational manner," she said.

"We have a series of questions centered around the fact that we are paying more for our education and getting less services," she said. "We want the governor to realize that an investment in education now is an investment in our future."

Other UMass students who are scheduled to attend the meetings are Michael Greiner, James Smack, and Kevin O'Donnell, Orefice said. Graduate students have also planned to picket next week in protest of the cuts. [Related story, page 3.]

Greiner said this is just one part of a campaign to oppose the budget cuts. Other efforts will include letter-writing and visits to the Statehouse in Boston, he said.

"What we plan to do is take the bull by the horns and show the state government that people really do care about education.

"We need to make it clear that if these cuts come through, there will be some blood on the floor," he said.

Anyone interested in the trip to the meetings can contact Greiner at 545-0341.

• Chancellor Duffey urges faculty to inform media and legislature of possible effects

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey yesterday urged faculty to contact the media and the legislature to inform them of the possible effects of the recent budget cuts at the University of Massachusetts.

The Board of Regents of Higher Education notified Duffey two weeks ago that the school would have to slash $5 million to $8 million from its current fiscal budget. The UMass portion of the reduction is part of a $20 million to $30 million state-wide cuts in education.

"The situation is serious," Duffey said at a Faculty Senate meeting yesterday afternoon.

He said the recent slashing will hit hard since it comes in the middle of the fiscal year. The school has been plagued by cuts for the past 18 months, he said.

Duffey said UMass students now are paying $340 more in tuition and fees than last year.

"Their taxes have already been raised, and they're not getting more for it," he said.

Some of the repercussions of the cuts will be admissions reductions for incoming classes, closing class sections, and layoffs, Duffey said.

Two weeks ago, the University put a freeze on all state-paid positions until January.

Duffey also launched a bumper sticker and button campaign to raise awareness about the importance of education.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice pinned the first button on Duffey, which reads, "Cutting Colleges Cost$ the Commonwealth."

Orefice said student government representatives are planning to go to various town meetings to gather support as well as talking to legislators.

"We are an investment in your future," she said. "We're good and we deserve your support."

Festival of lights to be celebrated

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Chanukah is a celebration of light, according to Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

"Just about every major religion has a festival of lights at this time of year," said Perlmutter, director of the Hillel Foundation. "It corresponds to the lengthening of night. It is a kindling of hope and also a renewing of hope."

The festival of Chanukah, which begins tomorrow and lasts eight days, is rooted in a history of oppression more than 2,000 years old.

According to Rabbi Ira Rothstein of Manalapan, N.J., Chanukah celebrates "the deliverance of the strong into the hands of the weak." Antiochus, who ruled Syria and Canaan under the empire of Alexander the Great, forbad the practice of Judaism. Led by Judah Maccabee, the oppressed Jews drove the much larger army of Antiochus from Canaan, known today as Israel.

Rothstein said the history is only one aspect of the celebration.

"Chanakuh is a holiday of miracles and light," he said.

Police chief says movie sparked deaths

GREENFIELD (AP) — A teen-ager suspected of fatally stabbing a college freshman was compelled to commit "that ultimate act" by psychological problems and an obsession with a horror movie, their town's police chief said Tuesday.

Police chief David McCarthy said the parents of Mark Branch told authorities the 19-year-old, who apparently committed suicide shortly after the Oct. 24 killing, had been fascinated with the "Friday the 13th" horror movie series and its leading character, Jason, since he was in the second grade.

International drug rings busted in US and Italy

WASHINGTON (AP) — US and Italian authorities announced yesterday they have charged more than 200 people, including major figures in the Sicilian Mafia, in a joint undercover operation targeting international cocaine and heroin drug-trafficking rings in both countries.

Arrests were being made in Baltimore, Buffalo, Miami, Newark (N.J.), New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Rockford, (Ill.) In Italy, arrests were made in Palermo, Bologna and Florence.

Among the 75 people charged in the United States and 133 in Italy were some of the "top leaders" of organized crime, FBI Director William Sessions said.

An FBI spokesman, William Carter, said that by midday, 52 people had been arrested in the United States and 22 in Italy.

Sessions said the arrests culminated a "long-term, undercover operation" that he said "builds strong cases against top leaders" of organized crime.

The FBI said it used court-authorized wiretaps, physical surveillance and heroin and cocaine buys to develop evidence leading to the arrests here and in Italy.

The Italian news agency AGI said the two-year investigation that led to the raids stemmed from the "Pizza Connection" international drug ring that sold $1.6 billion of heroin, mostly through pizzerias in the United States.

A US court convicted 18 people in connection with that ring, and Italian prosecutors indicted 28 people for their alleged involvement. At FBI headquarters in Washington, Carter decided to comment about any tie-in between the Pizza Connection and the current probe.

New Mexican president sworn in in face of opposition protests

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Carlos Salinas de Gortari was inaugurated as president of Mexico yesterday despite opposition protests that his government is illegitimate and won't make the economic and political reforms the people want.

"This is an ill-fated day, because the right of the people to select their rulers is being violated," said Marcela Lombardo, who spoke to the congress before Salinas' inauguration.

Democratic Front delegates walked out just before Salinas was inaugurated, while members of the National Action Front held up signs saying "Fraud."

In his inaugural address Salinas said he was taking power at a time of conflict and change and promised "nationalist, democratic and popular" reforms.

"I will be prudent in never risking the destiny of country, but firm in maintaining order and constitution," Salinas said. "I will govern for all Mexicans."

Lombardo was applauded when she said that the front's candidate, Cuahtmoc Cardenas, had been cheated of victory in the election by the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Salinas took power from President Miguel de la Madrid at a special session of congress after the opposition speeches. The opposition had threatened to disrupt the ceremony if that was not permitted.

Whitmore to be picketed

Graduate students oppose budget cut plans

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Graduate students at the University of Massachusetts are planning to stage two demonstrations next week to protest the current budget crisis and its impact on education in the Commonwealth.

Members of the Graduate Employees Organization at UMass [GEO] intend to picket Whitmore Administration Building at noontime Tuesday, Dec. 6 to show their concern for the future of education here, in light of the proposed $5.5 million and $7.7 million to be cut from the budget this fiscal year.

Although no definite cuts have been ordered, the Board of Regents of Higher Education announced they wanted the UMass Administration to assess the the impact of such cuts earlier this month. Since the announcement, UMass officials have put a freeze on all state funded positions both new and vacant.

UMass—Amherst is one of the many state colleges, including UMass campuses in Boston and Worcester, that have been asked to provide an assessment of the proposed cuts to the Board of Regents.

A public forum is also scheduled for Wednesday in the Campus Center at 7 p.m., which will focus on GEO's ongoing campaign to organize a graduate student employees's union. GEO is working for better wages and working conditions for research and teaching assistants, upon whom they say much of the University's mission in education and research rests.

Scheduled to speak at the forum are Massachusetts State Sen. John Olver, D-Northampton, Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, and representatives of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the United Staff Association of UMass, and members of graduate employee's unions a Rutgers (N.J.) University and State University of New York at Stony Brook.

UMass officials also announced that several hundred people would have to be laid off in order to meet the cuts.

Cynthia Kaufman, a spokesperson for GEO, said officials may first cut the graduate students who teach many introductory courses at the University. She said the graduates feel very vulnerable because they are one of the few groups on campus that aren't unionized. Graduate students at Rutgers and SUNY-Stony Brook are represented by unions.

Kaufman, a graduate student in the philosophy department, said universities have come to rely on graduate students to teach courses and conduct research and the graduate students now depend on stipends from the University for their work.

Director discusses EWC's future

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

Everywoman's Center Director Carol Wallace responded to questions from students on the future of the center in light of recent University budget cuts at an open meeting last week in McNamara Residence Hall.

"The students are the Everywoman's Center," Wallace said. "The students are our programs; they are absolutely critical to our organization."

Last year, she said, more than 1,000 women took advantage of the counseling program and the center responded to calls from more than 17,000 women in the area.

The center is one of five parts of the Division of Educational Access and Outreach, Wallace said, but is absorbing 50 percent of its budget cuts, as required by the University.

"We are going to have [budget] cuts along with everyone else," she said. "But we have to keep this in perspective — the whole campus is going to be affected."

The first wave of budget cuts came in September, affecting state-funded student affairs programs, including EWC, Wallace

Engineering program for women fights drop-out rate

By JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

Though only 319 of the 1,876 engineering majors at the University of Massachusetts are women, less women than men succumb to the heavy workload and drop out of the program.

Nancy Hellman, assistant dean of the College of Engineering, and advisor of the Society of Women Engineers [SWE], attributed the lower drop-out rate to the difficulty in making the choice in the first place.

"For [women] to have taken advanced courses in science and math they have to be very strong, and very focused," Hellman said. Because of that "they are less inclined to leave the major."

Ellen Martin, president of the Society of Women Engineers at UMass, said the group works to encourage women to stay in engineering.

"A lot of women who start [later] drop out in their freshman year," she said. "[The major] is very discouraging and very difficult. A lot of men also drop out," she said.

To help new students adjust, a big and little sister network assigns an older student to each incoming freshman, said Hellman. "They try to provide as much or as little help as they might need," she said.

Big sisters send letters to new students before they arrive on campus. "Some very good relationships have developed through the program," Hellman said.

The College of Engineering also offers a career day for high school women, guidance counselors and teachers. Invitations are sent to all Massachusetts schools, Hellman said, and 200 people generally participate.

The event features a panel of engineers from each of the five fields of engineering offered at UMass, Hellman said, and members of SWE act as both tour guides and panelists.

SWE is a student section of a national chapter of the Women in Engineering Program, according to Hellman. "As students leave [UMass], they are encouraged to go into the national society," she said.

Martin, who will graduate in the spring, said the UMass chapter of SWE has organized workshops and seminars such as Resume Writing and Interviewing, How to Dress for Success, and How to Get a Summer Job in Industry.

SWE has a lot of contacts with industry, she said. "My sophomore year, [the summer job seminar] got me an internship at General Electric. I worked in their computer systems division," she said. "It was a really good job, I worked their last summer, too."

Hellman said she works closely with SWE to offer support and recognition for women engineers. An awards program, offered each May, features a reception, luncheon, speakers and the presentation of awards to six outstanding students and three alumni, Hellman said.

In the past, students have been given certificates, but starting this year, the United Technology Corporation of East Hartford will give each student a $100 "United Technology Outstanding Women in Engineering Award."

Hellman said she has also been working with General Electric, and the United Technologies Corporation to develop merit scholarships for entering freshman. These scholarships will not be based on financial need, she said, and may be worth as much as $5,000 per year.

"[SWE] is a support group for women. But you don't have to be a woman to join. Men are just as welcome," she said, adding that SWE is about to gain its fourth male member.

Kristin Olivero, a junior engineering major and secretary of SWE, said she is compiling a book of resumes of women majoring in engineering which will be sent to corporations interested in hiring engineers.

Students seeking a summer coop, permanent position, or six-month internship should contact Olivero at 546-1066.

Martin, who plans to attend graduate school next fall, said companies are actually calling her and offering her positions.

"If you really want to be an engineer and you're strong in math and science," she said, "you shouldn't be persuaded away from it."

Students to rally today for arena

A rally is planned for noon today in support of the proposed hockey arena and convocation center to be built on the University of Massachusetts campus.

The rally, to be held on the Student Union steps, has been organized by Students for the Mullins Arena Chairman Guy Glodis.

The arena has come under fire because it will mean a rise in student fees of about $100 per year.

Glodis said he is hoping for a turnout of 500 at the rally.

Biafra speaks at Blue Wall

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Tonight at the Blue Wall cafe at 7 p.m. ex-Dead Kennedys frontman Jello Biafra will give a lecture. Admission is free so there's no reason not to be there.

Along with Black Flag and the Germs, the DKs were at the forefront of the original West Coast hardcore movement which emerged during the late 70s in the wake of the punk explosion. The band scored a major critical success with the album Fresh Fruit For Rotten Vegetables which contained the now classic "Nazi Punks, Fuck Off!" It was uncompromising political statements like this which led to the DKs being dubbed "the most left-wing band in America."

But it was the 1986 release of the Frankenchrist album which brought Biafra and the Kennedys into the public eye for the first time. The album's artwork which included a reproduction of H.R. Giger's controversial painting, "Penis Landscape" prompted Tipper Gore and the Parents Music Resource Center to file charges of obscenity and Biafra found himself in court in California defending not only himself but the future of freedom of expression in music and indeed the arts in general. Biafra won the case but enormous legal costs forced him to dissolve the Dead Kennedys whose records had been banned by every major chain-store not only in the states but in Europe as well.

Since then Biafra has recorded a couple of spoken-word albums, on which he dissects capitalist America with great intelligence and a razor sharp wit. His claims are often pretty amazing too. A few weeks ago he commented on the US Presidential election saying that Dukakis, had he been elected, would have secretly continued research into SDI to appease his Republican backers. Strong stuff. So I strongly suggest that you go see and hear Biafra grind his ax on topics as diverse yet inveterately convolved as censorship, the arms race and racism. He may be a prophet of doom, but to my mind his prophesies are all too close to becoming reality.

Two tales of New York City

By ADAM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

Has New York City become the modern-day equivalent of Charles Dickens' London? A short stroll through the city's streets and one can't help but notice the homeless, the beggars, the "buskers," the prostitutes, the shady dealings - it's all there but the accent. And as New York continues to evolve into a two-class society, the resemblances can only be expected to grow more striking. Perhaps this is why we've been treated to two simultaneous releases, Scrooged and Oliver & Company, which are both updated and uprooted adaptations of Dickens stories. Both take place in today's New York, and both fit effortlessly into the new format.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Oliver & Company: The first production of Disney's revitalized animation program, the film is a characteristic Michael Eisner project. Since he took over as head of the conglomerate in 1986, Eisner has worked hard to create a more contemporary Disney (even going so far as to present Minnie Mouse as a Madonna Wannabe, the original Material Mouse). In a recent "Sixty Minutes" interview, Eisner admitted to the unprofitability of animation as an entertainment medium, but also made clear his commitment to the Disney heritage. He projects one full-length animated feature per year, a rate unheard-of in the industry. Thankfully, quality does not yet appear to be suffering at the hands of quantity.

Though some viewers may react unfavorably to the film's attempts at contemporary appeal (its soundtrack glitters with the likes of Bette Midler, Huey Lewis, Billy Joel and "Cheech" Marin), Oliver is nothing if not respectful of its history - an integral part of which was Walt Disney's irrepressible exploratory drive. It is a new world out there, and this film both recognizes it and embraces it. And despite what you may have heard, animation, story and characters are all up to Disney's very high standards.

ever done it, knowing the place was packed. My hands were shaking a lot as we started the set, but after you get into it, it works out well," explains Neal, guitarist for the New Haven-based band.

A lot of the band's ease as a two-piece probably comes from Ray Neal's solid ideas of what he looks for in music. "I don't think our intention has ever been to sound like anybody else, but I grew up listening to Yes," says Neal, musing on the band's musical philosophy, "I was big into the Clash, all kinds of good bands that have something to them. A lot of bands have a song or an album, but they don't have an identity. A band like the Who, that's the kind of band I respect. They change and develop."

Neal notes that Miracle Legion may be changing and developing once again with the future addition of another rhythm section. "The album we're doing now has some songs with the bass and drums. Soon I would like to combine the two-piece thing that we're doing with the band thing. There is a certain amount of power to a (full) rock band," Neal comments, referring to Miracle Legion's new album, due out in January, tentatively titled Me and Mr. Ray.

But Miracle Legion's guitarist is looking forward to getting out of what he calls the "sterile studio environment," and play Miracle Legion's scheduled free show at the Hatch tonight at 8. Miracle Legion concerts are "different every time," and are "kind of crazy — it's an entertaining experience."

But what craziness can the crowd at the Hatch anticipate? Ray Neal remarks, "It's never planned out. If anyone comes down, it won't be a waste of time. I think it's been said a million times, but (a rock concert) is a two-way thing; it's an event. I enjoy playing alone, but what happens when it all comes together with an audience is so incredible it beats out everything else."

The Gordon's and the Wooden Soldiers will open for Miracle Legion tonight at the free Hatch show. Show starts at 9 p.m.

Fashion design grad finds art in clothing

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

Last night artist Judith Shea talked about her works relating the human form and persona through clothing at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center.

The works on exhibit stretched eleven years of progress for Shea from primarily cloth works which hung from the walls to what the artist said she was taught to consider "real sculpture," meaning sculpture that stands on its own.

Shea graduated from the Parsons School of Design intending to enter the fashion industry but was disappointed to discover that the more successful people in the field generally had little to do with actually making clothes. "I wanted to make things," she said. "I refused to do anything to do with clothes for the next few years."

Instead, Shea got a job at the United Nations Building as an installation designer for the arts and crafts store where she handled folk art from all over the world. "That was the great art history experience for me," she said, learning "how things were made to function."

Afterwards, Shea returned to the Parsons School which had by that time merged with the New School for Social Research to become the New Parsons School. There Shea earned her BFA and began to rethink her possibilities. "I had always thought of myself as an artist from the beginning of my life," she said. "I started to make clothes that had to do with ideas and not with fashion."

She tried to market these clothes but was unsuccessful. "I was trying to express something about how I saw things, not how clothes make people look and feel," she said, which was what people were beginning to be concerned about at the time.

Shea said she found a place for her works with the Minimalist sculpture, performance art, Earthworks and anti-art establishment works. She then began to take ideas from her childhood and bring them to life in her art.

One work shows color theory through layered pairs of silk organza stockings derived from Shea's past when women's stockings were made of real silk. They were, "beautiful flattened forms that came in a box and if you lifted it out of the box it was a leg," she said.

NCR SALUTES: THE WINNERS OF THE STAKEHOLDER ESSAY COMPETITION

NCR

"Progressive companies have begun to think beyond the traditional relationship of the firm to society and have begun to manage all of the relationships upon which they depend for survival. Firms that don't follow suit may regret their short-sightedness."

Murray B. Low, Winner NCR Stakeholder Essay Competition

Some of today's most important ideas are held in trust by the leaders of tomorrow.

More than 2,500 such leaders, college students from all over the country, recently competed in an NCR-sponsored essay competition. The topic: "Creating Value For Stakeholders In Corporations And/Or Not-For-Profit Organizations." At stake: $300,000 in awards. And at even greater stake: a chance to affect the way the world does business.

NCR is proud to salute the first prize winner, Murray B. Low of The Wharton School, The University of Pennsylvania; and the second prize winner, Ron Gilbert of The University of Iowa. NCR also congratulates the 98 national and state award winners, as well as their schools. Their names are listed below.

Notes from the Campus Center basement

Resume building on, around and off-campus

The special Town Meeting in Amherst last month didn't show much for UMass. Obviously, the student population in this town is significant, but you'd never know it by our representation in the town's most important (and fun) governing body.

Yes, that's right. Town Meeting is fun. Much more fun than a student senate meeting, or a Board of Governors meeting. They decide on important issues, like making Amherst a Foam Free Zone. Since we're already Nuclear Free, we might as well go along and ban every other hazardous substance we don't like. Hopefully hairspray and overpowering aftershave are next.

Nancy Klingener

But seriously, getting elected to Town Meeting is easy. Select Board Chair Edith Wilkinson says in some precincts that include parts of the UMass campus, you can get elected with one write-in vote. For the career-minded political science major, it's a RESUME-BUILDER.

And as under-represented as we are, things are only going to get worse. Amherst recently changed its zoning, so that Town Meeting representation was counted according to population, instead of registered voters. But the state is requiring that in the zones of a large institution, like hospitals and COLLEGES, Town Meeting members be allocated by registered voters. Which means the $50 excise tax everyone got so upset about earlier this fall could be a reality, with more like it to come.

We might be the only college in the country whose football team scores more points than its basketball team. Really, the trip to the University of New Hampshire two weeks ago was fun — so where were you?! Not only was the UMass student body woefully under-represented, but the Minuteman Marching Band wasn't there. Instead, we had to listen to UNH's pitiful little troupe try to go through a routine, while grade school kids tossing footballs on the field got in their way.

The name 'Minutewomen' is just a little silly for the women's athletic teams. After all, there was no such thing as a Minutewoman. While Dolly Madison may have said "remember the ladies" in the drafting of the Constitution, the founding fathers didn't listen to her. At the time of the Revolution women didn't vote or fight or do anything more than hold the damn country together by running the farms while their husbands, sons and brothers fired the shots heard 'round the world. Try fitting that onto a sweatshirt.

Of course, some schools have it worse. At either UConn or Boston University (the Huskies and the Terriers) the women could be called bitches. And the Arkansas Razorbacks field hockey team could be the sows.

Rick Santos was elected editor in chief of the Collegian this week. Here's what he won: a position as CEO of New England's Largest College Daily (a RESUME-BUILDER). Headaches when the computer breaks down. Headaches when the staff starts fighting with each other. Headaches when an advertiser or a source takes offense at something in the paper. Headaches when it's a 28-page paper the next day, but most of the staff is sick or has an exam.

Congratulations, Rick.

Article misinforms

I appreciate the Collegian devoting an article to the local housing crisis ("Commission to address housing concerns", Nov. 28). However, I would like to correct some misleading remarks that were attributed to me. The article stated that I said landlords have all the leverage in Amherst. In fact, I said that Amherst renters are extremely lucky because the Town of Amherst affords them many protections that other communities do not have. Further, I told the reporter that students need to continue funding the Off Campus Housing Office because I believe they need to continue funding the advocates to work for them. Traditional real estate agencies work for the owner and the market; not for the renter. Finally, I appreciate the Collegian's highlighting of the area rental market, but that one article alone is not enough.

It's time to fight for our state schools

It is a recurring nightmare in the state of Massachusetts. Revenues fall short, deficit gaps grow wider, and the state begins to cut the budget. Once again, it looks like this nightmare will come true. The commonwealth has already begun to make overtures about cutting $20 million for public higher education statewide. That translates to a budget cut of over $5 million for UMass/Amherst alone. This money would come out of this year's budget.

Stephanie Orefice

Whenever there is a fiscal crisis higher education is one of the first things to go. The impression given is that public education isn't important. That may not be the reality, but it's the growing view among students across the state.

We should come out behind the shadows of Harvard and Boston College and prove we deserve the state support we need. Public higher education is an investment to the commonwealth's future. Over 85% of the state's public higher ed's graduates end up living and working in Massachusetts. They will contribute greatly to the future economy of the state. We've got to begin to make the citizens across the state realize that Massachusetts public colleges and universities are among the best in the nation, and will get better through their continued support.

So where do we begin? The most immediate thing one can do is attend one of the three town meetings Governor Dukakis is participating in across the state. The plan is to get as many students, alumni, and supporters of higher education to attend these meetings and ask the Governor questions about the proposed cuts and the state of public education in the commonwealth's priorities. Remember, that your tuition and fees have been raised $340 in one year, and now you are receive less support from the state. In effect you are paying more, and receiving less. Dukakis must be accountable to all his constituents, even students. So let's get his reactions and answers in terms of the cuts. He will be appearing Saturday, Dec. 3 at:

10:00 - 11:15 am in Springfield at the Springfield Greek Cultural Center (off Rt. 91)

2:00 - 3:13 pm in Pittsfield at the Taconic High School

Monday Dec. 5 in Lowell at Lowell High School 8:00 pm.

If you cannot attend encourgage your parents, neighbors and/or friends to. It is imperative that we show the Governor and the citizens around the state that we cannot stomach another budget cut and that we are proud to be a state school student. That pride will begin to rub off and work to our advantage.

Scrooged: This is Bill Murray's best star turn, and his first since 1984's Ghostbusters. His Frank Cross is a grumpy TV executive who never seems to recognize the obvious parallels between himself and the title character of his pet project, a very expensive television production of Scrooge. (He wants to staple antlers to the head of a mouse.) The highlight of the film is Carol Kane's Ghost of Christmas Present. She's Glinda with a mean streak. Her lilting, musical voice and childlike demeanor make her unpredictable violent outbursts all the more threatening. ("Bitch hit me with a toaster.") And the film's conclusion, which has Murray spewing out an endless stream of undoubtedly improvised material, is almost startlingly touching. His voice breaks, his eyes well up, and it's real. Scrooged is highly recommended.

Unsubstantiated Rumors and Self-indulgent Musings:

- 20th Century Fox did not even look at Fred Saperstein's manuscript for Metamorphosis, the sequel novel to his Cocoon, on which the hit Ron Howard film was based. As a result, the current Cocoon: The Return bears little resemblance to the author's intentions, for better or worse.
- John Travolta joins the cast of Disco II: The Revenge.
- Answer to last trivia question: The original title of Hitchcock's North by Northwest was The Man on Lincoln's Nose.
- This week's: What was the first film to win an Academy Award for makeup?

Tonight get to the Blue Wall early to see former Dead Kennedy Jello Biafra. His appearance is part of his not-to-be-missed Spoken Word Tour and it's free. And tomorrow night catch another free show at the Hatch — and this headlining band isn't a little-known cheesy rock bands either. I would pay money to see Miracle Legion who will play with The Gordon's and Wooden Soldiers. Both shows are sponsored by UPC.

LIVEWIRE

Soul Asylum will bring their Husker Du-like noise to Hampshire College's Saga Dining Commons Saturday night. Before this smashing show catch an afternoon show by fave raves Buffalo Tom at Chadbourne Dorm on the UMass campus.

Tonight a most unlikely couple will play at Universal Joint: Downstairs at Pearl Street. Soul screamer Barrence Whitefield & the Savages get together with hardcore Gidget Goes to Hell. Tomorrow Buckwheat Zydeco plays the Joint for two shows at 8 and 10:30. And finally New Riders of the Purple Sage play Sunday. Tickets $7.50. Of course every Friday and Saturday, upstairs at Pearl Street is the place to be for some serious clubing with "the area's finest deejays."

At Sheehan's tonight, The Ice Men play with Babe Pino and Big Bang Theory. If you can't make that, show up tomorrow night for Little Frankie & The Premiers. Note also that Sheehan's is having a special Blue Monday night with Chicago blues master Jimmy Rogers.

i-Culture, the area's favorite reggae troupe are paying another visit to Katina's tomorrow. The Guess Who, the rock band that made it big in the 70s with such hits as "It's too Late," and "American Woman," will play Katina's Saturday. Maniax play Sunday.

Brat packers get serious in 1969

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

The year was 1969; months after Robert Kennedy and Martin Luther King were assassinated, months after many of us were born. It was the end of the "Age of Innocence" as it became the dawning of the "Age of Aquarius."

It is also the subject of a new movie, 1969, starring Kiefer (Young Guns) Sutherland and Robert (Less than Zero) Downey Jr.

But in spite of the two stars' past roles, this is not a teeny-bopper movie. It is a serious drama about confusion and fear.

Sutherland plays Scottie, a poet and a dreamer who enters college so he won't go to Vietnam, and wants to bring peace to his neck of the woods. He wants to be a 'leaf,' because all the great ones — the Kennedys, Albert Camus, Eldridge Cleaver — were leaves.

But while Sutherland wants to escape by being a leaf and flying (or in his case driving his van) as free as the wind, his best friend and college roommate Ralph (Downey) experiments with a different escape vehicle — "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds."

Ralph wants to avoid the draft as well, but his drug habit and lackadaisical approach to school get him flunked out and embarrassed. He winds up in jail when he tries to steal his draft notice.

Downey plays the role well, in much the same way he played a confused, drugged-out youth in Less than Zero.

But it is Sutherland who catches the audience's eye. He plays the innocent, virgin, bright-eyed poet beyond the limits of his sometimes dull dialogue. His passion against the war, even as an older brother is drafted, makes his character seem real.

Unfortunately for 1969, too much of the plot is simplistic, built around emotional peaks and valleys. The movie does tug at your heart strings; it does little for history's sake.

The message may also be lost in 1969. We see confusion (as when Sutherland and his girlfriend Beth (Winona Ryder) give peace signs to soldiers as they drive by — the soldiers respond with a motley of peace signs and middle fingers, with some not sure which to give) but much of the reason 1969 makes sense is because of what the audience knows about the year 1969 before the movie 1969 begins.

This is one of thousands of Vietnam-era stories and perhaps the younger audience that sees this film because of its stars will miss the message in the shuffle. Unlike other historical movies, 1969 lacks a historical base from which the audience can see why things happen. We hear about Vietnam, but don't see many of its effects; we're left with a history based on a soundtrack.

It's this lack of history that is needed to make 1969 whole. Otherwise, Sutherland and Downey could be any two college students at any time — one an adult in a child's body, the other a child in an adult's body — with nostalgia coming from the bell-bottom jeans and odd hairstyles.

Haza mixes traditional yemenite tune with techno-pop to make master album

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Ofra Haza
Shaday
Sire Records

Question: What do you get when you cross a singer of traditional Yemenite songs with 80's techno-pop sensibilities?

Answer: Ofra Haza's domestic label debut, Shaday.

Haza is currently creating quite a stir on the world beat ethno pop scene, and the song "Im Nin'Alu" has cracked at least the independent stations. Can commercial success be far behind?

Shaday suffers from a kind of schizophrenia. The album was produced by two fellows, Izhar Ashdot and Wally Brill. The Ashdot produced tracks carry a strong Israeli flavor, as well as lush percussion and some technically impressive synthesizer and sampler work. These songs include the indescribable "Im Nin'Alu" and "Galbi." Mixing Hebrew, Yemenite, and English lyrics, they sizzle with Middle East exotica. Haza seems at home in any language, and her voice is used to strong effect. In particular, the title track is a haunting, ethereal piece which speaks of hardship and suffering, but also of survival. In fact, one of the several meanings of the Hebrew word "shaday" is "strength." If the whole album were like this, then all would be well and good. Unfortunately, someone decided that Haza needed to sound a bit more Western if she was to have commercial success, and to this end they saddled her with a British producer named Wally Brill. The arrangements on the Brill produced tracks, while technically competent, are no more inspired than any of the insipid muck that makes-up the bulk of Top 40 radio. Syrupy string sounds and cliched bell tones, mixed with some rather lame English lyrics turn Haza into just a generic Madonna clone. It's a shame, since the other songs on the album show that she can be a truly inspiring performer. This is not to say that all the Brill tracks are bad, for the there is one anachronism in his pop formula: a number entitled "Love Song" which consists of Haza singing lines from the Biblical book "Song of Songs" completely a capella. Her delivery is powerful and moving, and without Brill's vapid arrangements, she is free to soar with her ancient material.

Shaday is a good album, which is a bit sad since it could have been a great album. There is an earlier release entitled Yemenite Songs available, which is apparently more traditional. If Haza were allowed to make an entire album with Izhar Ashdot producing, it would probably be a blockbuster. As it is, Shaday is a decent record, and certainly worth the money if you think that you might have a taste for world beat ethno pop. On the other hand, if you are a Top 40 radio fan, you might find it interesting for the banal pop tracks. Whatever the case, Ofra Haza is worth checking out.

Similar observances combined with Shea's early obsession with clothing and its relation to the human form are the roots behind her becoming a figurative artist.

Later she would incorporate all she had learned in Balance, a work she said, "has strains of all the art I love in the world." It originally started out to be a madonna but, "the drapery in the front so enchanted me that I didn't want to cover it with the baby," Shea said. Influenced by Minimalism, she decided to represent the cube instead.

"Being influenced by other artists is something artists have always done," said Shea, who often pays homage to other artists in her own work. One such example is Endless Model, reminiscent of Contantine Brancousi's Endless Totem. Shea's works will be on exhibit at the University Gallery through Dec.14. Gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m.

Lack of resources seen as problem in drug war

WASHINGTON (AP) — The war on drugs is overwhelming a criminal justice system whose greatest problem is lack of resources, not legal protections afforded criminal suspects, a two-year American Bar Association study concludes.

"The entire system is starved: police prosecution, criminal defense, courts and correction," says the report by an ABA committee. "As currently funded, the criminal justice system cannot provide the quality of justice that the public legitimately work ing within the system wish to deliver."

Less than three percent of all government spending in the United States went to support civil and criminal justice activities in fiscal 1985, a previously released federal study has shown.

Those already thin resources are being overwhelmed by a massive — but largely unsuccessful — battle against illegal drugs, the ABA panel concluded.

It said that while courts are increasingly clogged, the drug problem "is growing worse, and . . . law enforcement has been unable to control" it.

The ABA study noted political disputes about the Miranda decision, but found relatively few problems in the field related to it. That decision, issued in 1966 by the Supreme Court, said police must warn suspects of their right to remain silent and to consult with a lawyer before any questioning takes place.

While the Miranda decision "has sparked heated controversy on a political level, the restrictions it imposes on custodial interrogation of suspects are not considered troublesome by either police or prosecutors," the panel said.

Eighty-seven percent of prosecutors surveyed for the study said no more than five percent of their cases were dismissed because of problems involving the Miranda requirements.

The exclusionary rule — under which evidence obtained illegally by police may not be used in court — also has caused few major problems, the study concluded. Some police officials, in fact, told the panel that the demands of the exclusionary rule have promoted professionalism in the nation's police departments.

Many Mass nursing homes said to fail in meeting gov't standards

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 40 percent of federally aided, skilled nursing homes in Massachusetts failed to meet government standards for sanitary food storage and preparation, and more than one-quarter did not meet drug administering requirements, according to federal review released yesterday.

The first-of-its-kind consumer survey of Medicare-and Medicaid-funded nursing homes nationwide, prepared by the Department of Health and Human Services, also said one of five skilled Massachusetts nursing homes failed to meet standards for maintaining residents personal hygiene.

The massive 50-state survey drew immediate criticism from nursing home advocates and critics alike and was weighed down with a string of caveats by the federal health officials who prepared it.

The report noted that the data reflected only whether the facility met government standards on the particular day of a state inspection, reflecting a "snapshot" of the home that does not necessarily reflect its current performance.

It also said the information did not reflect the severity or duration of problems leading to deficiencies. "A deficiency may represent an ongoing problem of a one-time failure of a single staff person," the survey said.

The department's Health Car Financing Administration released information on 32 key "performance indicators" selected out of more than 500 individual government requirements.

The following is a partial listing of the selected performance categories. The percentage that follows each category represent the failure rate for the 330 skilled Massachusetts nursing homes — ones that provide 24-hour nursing care — followed by the national failure rate.

Food is stored, refrigerated, prepared and served under sanitary conditions: 39.8 percent in the state failed to meet the standards; 42.8 percent nationwide failed.

Drugs are administered according to the written orders of the attending physician: 28.4 percent; 29 percent.

All common resident areas are clean, sanitary and odor free: 21.7 percent; 11 percent.

Toilet and bath facilities are clean, sanitary and odor free: 16.8 percent; 12.9 percent.

Isolation techniques are used to prevent the spread of infection are followed by all personnel: 19.6 percent; 24.7 percent.

Memory of drunk driving victim kept alive by gravesite visitors

DEDHAM (AP) — As winter comes on, naked trees, blowing leaves, and only slanting sunlight keep a constant chill on Brookdale Cemetery, but Anthony Scaccia's young friends still congregate at his grave.

They spend hours there, mostly talking. But they also leave flowers, loose change, pumpkins at Halloween, dolls, chewing gum, wreaths — anything they think Anthony, the victim of a drunken driver, would like.

Amid freshly dug plots, the site has come to be known as "Anthony's." It's a place where his friends meet to share funny stories, rehash the latest gossip and keep memories alive. It has also become a place where the pain of death can be confronted and, sometimes, eased.

"Before Anthony died, if I'd come home late and told my mother I was at the cemetery, she'd have been wary," said 14-year-old Billy Fox. "But now if I say it, she understands why we're there. It's a place to talk and think about things. It's a peaceful place to talk to Anthony."

Teen-agers are drawn daily to the simple headstone under which the 13-year-old was buried in October 1987. Etched with Anthony's name on the stone are a dirt bike and a fishing pole, emblems of his greatest passions.

"You don't want anybody to walk by and say, 'Oh, it's a typical grave,'" said Fox, who brings his friend toy soldiers and flags. "We want people to say 'Wow, that kid must have been real!'"

"They all sit around in front of his headstone and talk to Anthony about what's going on in their lives. They ask how he's doing up there and what it's like," said Anthony's mother, Dianne Scaccia. "Billy Fox said sometimes in the summer he lays out and stretches his arms across the grass and feels Anthony's hand."

Public Works Commissioner Dominic DiVirgilio has watched from a distance as Anthony's former classmates have gathered at the grave.

"I have never stopped or interfered, mainly because I know what they are going through," said DiVirgilio, who tends the grounds. "They've been going down to more or less deal with losing someone as young as that, to deal with death and reality. I've never seen it as anything other than respectful and healthy."

The outpouring of love and allegiance to her son does not surprise Diane, who has four other children.

"Anthony was a kind of special kid. He had a great many friends," she said Wednesday. "He was adventurous and the kids got into the habit of following him around and depending on him to plan out what to do. It wasn't unusual for us to wake up at 8 on summer mornings and have 16 or 17 kids waiting outside for him."

The night Anthony died, hospital workers brought blankets, pillows and food to the 30 concerned teen-agers who showed up to await word on their friend. School officials had to call in additional guidance counselors from neighboring schools to help students deal with their grief.

Dressed in black, Bridget Deery came Wednesday, as she does every evening, to visit her husband's grave. His granite tombstone, like Anthony's, cut a stark silhouette against the dull winter sky.

"Usually, you'll see four of five of them standing and talking. They'll be talking to him," said Deery, casting an eye toward Anthony's colorful gravesite. "They can't get over the loss."

Kids hanging out at the local middle school said they leave sentimental gifts for Anthony, things that might give him a chuckle or keep him from feeling out of step with the latest fad.

That obsession, his long-standing mental problems and his anger with Sharon Gregory, 18, over a psychological profile formed a "three-pronged motive for murder," McCarthy said.

"He had to complete that chapter in his fantasy of being Jason by committing that ultimate act," McCarthy said in a telephone interview. "That was what Jason was all about — grisly, gross murder."

Authorities declared the case closed when the deer hunter found the body of Branch hanging in a tree on Hog Mountain in nearby Buckland on Tuesday.

But McCarthy said the discovery alone wasn't enough to calm the tight-knit community of 18,000 people. The nightmare began when her identical twin discovered the Greenfield Community College student's body in the bathroom of the family's home and increased as the search for Branch stretched through the Halloween holiday and beyond.

"It was just unbelievable the way people managed to scare themselves," he said.

"This is a small town. We're trying to end this case and the only question the community has left is why," McCarthy said. "That's why we've got to talk about the motive for what happened."

Authorities had said little about why Branch was their only suspect over the past six weeks, A Greenfield District Court judge heard arguments Wednesday on a request by The Recorder newspaper to release court papers submitted by investigators seeking search warrants of Branch's home. The papers had been sealed at the request of District Attorney Judd Carhart.

Carhart did not oppose the release, but Robert Carlson, an attorney hired by the Branch family, urged they be kept secret to protect the privacy of those named in the documents. Judge Benjamin Apkin did not indicate when he would issue a decision.

McCarthy said he talked with Branch's parents and their pastor before making the police theories public "and they gave me 100 percent support."

McCarthy said officials have not been able to locate the psychological profile and are uncertain whether it had been done professionally or by the young woman, who at times had tried to psychoanalyze her friends and acquaintances.

"They had been trying to get help for Mark for 15 years," the chief said.

"But we know that Mark was angry about her having it and he wanted it back," he said.

Investigators also determined that Branch, who was not a friend but was acquainted with the victim "as all kids are in a small town," knew that the young woman would be alone in the house that morning, McCarthy said.

Pre-trial pardon for North ruled out by president

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan yesterday ruled out a pre-trial pardon for Iran-Contra defendant Oliver L. North, saying such a pardon would leave his former White House aid "under a shadow of guilt."

At the same time, Reagan said his decision to suppress certain evidence in the case was vital to protect "national security secrets."

The White House said earlier today that documents sought by North contain intelligence secrets that cannot be divulged. It said it is "up to the judge" to decide whether to dismiss the charges against the Marine lieutenant colonel if the classified material is relevant to his defense.

During a picture-taking session in the Oval Office with President-elect George Bush and special trade representative Clayton Yeutter at his side, Reagan was asked to say why he was blocking the use of certain evidence in North's trial. "The things we're blocking are things that duty requires we block," Reagan replied. "These are things that are national security secrets."

Asked whether this amounted to an attempt to, in effect, sabotage North's trial, he said, "No, this is something that from the very beginning we knew we would have to do."

Asked if he would be upset if the White House move had the effect of preventing North's prosecution, Reagan said, "The law must take its course."

Reagan, who told reporters last May that he thought both North and Rear Adm. John M. Poindexter eventually would be found innocent, was asked if he still believes that.

"Well at this stage I don't think I should comment on guilt or innocence or anything of this kind," he said. "I think the law has got to take its course."

"From the very beginning, I have said that to consider a pardon . . . even if I did that . . . would leave them under a shadow of guilt for the rest of their lives he said. "I think we have to let the judicial process proceed."

Police search for more bodies after four dead women found

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — Police dogs scoured the banks of Interstate 195 in southeastern Massachusetts yesterday in a search prompted by the discovery of four dead women in this area in recent months.

The county prosecutor has expressed fears that the deaths are related and linked to the disappearance of several women from the Weld Square area, known by police as a center for local drug trading and prostitution.

"There were four young women, they were all found nude in a single proximate area," said Thomas M. Gibney, speaking for Bristol County District Attorney Ronald A. Pina. "You'd start to wonder about the circumstances of finding four separate bodies in such close proximity."

State Trooper Jose Gonsales said one of the victims was strangled and the cause of death in the other three cases in not known. He and several other authorities were down-playing early reports of a possible serial killer.

But there were strong similarities in the cases.

"I feel pretty confident they are connected somehow. There may be more than just the four women," Pina said.

The search began quietly on Monday when the Connecticut State Police provided two dogs trained to search for bodies. On Wednesday, a similarly trained dog from the Massachusetts State Police joined the search, which was spawned by the discovery of two bodies in July, one in Dartmouth and the other one in Freetown, and discovery of another body along Interstate 195 in Dartmouth last month.

said. The center is now under a budget freeze and Wallace said she doesn't know whether the second round of cuts will affect EWC.

This semester, EWC is required to cut one full-time position and save $33,000 to meet the cuts, she said.

The Women's Admission and General Education Support program [WAGES], which helped low-income, non-traditional students return to school, was terminated because of budget cuts, Wallace said.

Because the program was cut, she said, "There are no programs on campus that can deal with these issues."

Wallace said more non-traditional students are returning to school and "[the end of WAGES] contradicts everything we know about the changing demographics of the college campus today."

Next semester, she said, EWC will attempt to gain greater student support through its public relations program by distributing flyers and posters to all residence halls in order to encourage awareness of the center and its efforts.

"Community service is part of our mission," she said, adding that she felt public relations will increase support for EWC.

The visit was sponsored by the Sylvan Women's Club.

Board puts off space allocations

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors planned to approve allocations for office space in the Campus Center/Student Union complex last night, but because of poor attendance by BOG Space Committee members, the board voted to delay office allocations until March 15.

The Space Committee, which makes the annual allocations, goes through a two-month process in which they accept applications for offices from Registered Student Organizations, evaluate the needs of the groups involved, and make recommendations to the full board for allocations.

Offices are in demand in the complex, with groups fighting each year for the available space.

Zohar Porat is coordinator for the Space Committee. She said at last night's board meeting that because of very poor attendance at committee meetings, they had not been able to get anything done.

"Every time I held a meeting, I did not get quorum," Porat said. "If we try to make a rush job of this process, it would be unfair and not very well done."

The move to delay space allocations passed unanimously.

Governors arguing in favor of the proposal said although groups badly in need of space will be made to wait even longer, the extra time will give the committee a better chance to evaluate the needs of the RSOs.

Although no governors voted against the proposal, several voiced opposition to it because of the problems it causes for RSOs.

Gov. Guy Glodis asked if attendance would really be better next semester, or if the same delays would occur. Porat answered that she was not positive, but she said she thinks the present committee is willing to work hard on the allocations.

She said in the few meetings the body has held, they have mapped out what they plan to do next semester. She said the main concern now is allocation of space for WMUA, which is seeking the office currently occupied by the magazine Spectrum. She said WMUA's allocation could happen before the March 15 date.

"As far as I know, there are no other RSOs that are in as desperate a situation as WMUA's," she said.

In other business, budget projections for fiscal year 1990 were presented. The budget will be voted on next week.

■ Chanukah

"It is about the miracle that we, as a people, are still here to retell the story more than 2,000 years after [Judah] Maccabee. Chanukah is about the miracle that we can place our candles in the windows of our homes, without fearing for our lives."

According to Hebrew scripture, the returning Jews lit a menorah, or candelabra which was fueled by olive oil found in the recovered Temple in Canaan. Since the oil had not been discovered by the Syrians, it had remained holy. A one-day supply of this oil is believed to have kept the light burning for eight days.

Perlmutter said the menorah is now "the major ritual object involved in Chanukah." Modern menorahs consist of nine candles. The center candle, or shamash, remains lit throughout celebration. The other candles are placed in the menorah, one each day, from right to left. They are then lit with the shamash from right to left.

As a Jewish holiday, Perlmutter said, Chanukah is not as important as Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur or Passover, and has received "more public attention because it comes so close to Christmas," he said.

Traci Swartz, a senior theater major, agreed that the Chanukah is overshadowed by the Christian holiday.

"I think it's mostly important to younger kids," she said. "Chanukah is forced to compete with Christmas — Christmas has such a high profile commercially."

Despite such competition, Rothstein said Chanukah is still a celebration of Chag Haurim, the Festival of Lights.

"We hopefully realize," he said, "that the light of our heritage and tradition will continue to guide us, no matter how dark and dreary the road of life becomes."

DRUG RAID – Stephen Nolan, 33, of Derry, N.H. is driven away from the federal court in Concord yesterday. Nolan was one of 21 people arrested in what officials say may be the largest drug bust in New England – $200 million in cocaine and laundered money.

■ fraternity

She said some members received exemptions from University housing, but stressed that although those people could live in off-campus housing, they could not live in the fraternity houses.

The University first received reports of alleged hazing at ATG early in November. Several parents and students contacted the Dean of Students office, the office "looked into the matter," and ordered the pledges to move out of the fraternity houses.

Because ATG is affiliated with the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, a two year program, the pledges lived in the houses.

University housing provided vans to help the pledges remove their belongings.

The University also asked Amherst police to intervene. The police have refused to comment on their investigation, still in progress, except to say they now have more than two suspects.

The University is also conducting an investigation through the Dean of Students and the Greek Affairs offices.

Fraternity members have refused to comment on the hazing charges.

Christel Zullo and the Minutewomen will tangle with the University of Hartford tomorrow at 2 p.m.

■ men's basketball

"I don't worry about the other team, I worry about our team," Calipari said. "We just have to go out and play. If we play above ourselves and they don't play too good, we win. If they play great and we play good, we'll lose. But I'm happy with the way things are progressing."

Fast breaks: UMass made 15 of 17 free throws in the second half against Boston University, and was 6-for-6 down the stretch.

"We shot fouls shots well when we had to," David Brown said. "And that's not usually the characteristic of a UMass team."

Calipari said, "We'll win if we continue to shoot free throws like that."

The Minutemen have gotten outscored 63-75 in the first half but hold a 97-64 advantage in the second half.

■ women's basketball

Hoop-la: Junior center Helen Freeman is the leading scorer for the Minutewomen, with 29 points in two games for a 14.5 average. She also has three blocked shots, all against BU. Sophomore forward Keyburn McCusker is next with 26 points (13.0) and leads in rebounding with 25 (12.5 per game). . . senior Christel Zullo and junior Michele Pytko each have nine assists.

The Minutewomen will not open their Atlantic 10 schedule until after the new year, when they travel to the University of Rhode Island on January 3. After the Hartford game, they will be home for a pair against Holy Cross (Dec. 7) and the University of New Hampshire (Dec. 10). They will take part in the Bath Ironworks Classic at Portland, ME. with the University of Maine, Providence College and Georgia State on Dec. 28-29.

Indoor track to kick off season

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Both the men's and women's indoor track teams begin their seasons this weekend. The Minutemen will be at the Southern Connecticut Invitational Saturday and the Minutewomen will be just a long triple jump away at the Smith Invitational on Sunday.

Most teams like to start off their season with a bang. But in a sport that is geared more toward performing well in the championship meets at the end of the season, O'Brien will give some of his top runners a break, at least until next weekend.

"He's giving us a little break so we will be rested for the Harvard Invitational next week," UMass distance runner Joe Livorsi said.

Freshman Derek Moore, a native of Brockton, who was one of the premier indoor high school runners in Massachusetts last season, will make his debut for UMass this weekend.

He will also be joined by the Walters brothers, Evan and Kevin, who will get a taste of what collegiate competition is like in the sprinting events.

The sprinters have been coached by UMass assistant Mike Sanders, who is also a freshman in a sense. This is Sanders first season with the Minutemen.

"He's [Sanders] been helping O'Brien with the sprinters," Livorsi said. "He's been really good for those guys."

UMass basketball teams hit the road

Minutemen face A-10 rival Rutgers

By MATT GERKE

The warm-ups are over, and the first two games are out of the way.

The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team will jump right into the meat of its schedule tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Piscataway, NJ, when it takes on Rutgers University in the Atlantic 10 Conference opener for both teams.

"Thank goodness its not Temple or West Virginia," UMass head coach John Calipari said. "We wouldn't be ready for that."

As it stands, UMass will be facing a team that hasn't played in a week. The Scarlet Knights opened the season with a 82-65 victory over Rider College last Friday.

The Minutemen have played twice. They opened with a win over Southern Connecticut and then lost to Boston University 78-76 Wednesday night.

"I was hoping we could play a team between Southern Connecticut and Boston University, to move up more gradually," Calipari said. "We made the jump too quick."

The Minutemen fell behind BU by 12 points at halftime and as much as 16 in the third quarter. UMass pulled to within a point with eight seconds left, but the Terriers hit a free throw and eventually won.

"That's the mold of this team and we have to break it," UMass captain David Brown said.

The Minutemen will get their chance tomorrow. Freshman guard Anton Brown leads UMass with a 17 points per game average. He and Jimmy McCoy, another freshman, have given the team a very solid backcourt in its first two games.

David Brown (16 ppg, 9 rpg) and Duane Chase (12 ppg) are the forwards and sophomore Ben Grodski (2 ppg, 5 rebounds per game) is the center.

"Ben pulled down seven rebounds (against BU)," Calipari said. "That's all we want him to do."

Sophomore forward John Tate (8.5 ppg, 6 rpg) has also made a solid contribution off the bench.

For Rutgers, sophomore forward Tom Savage scored 25 points against Rider. Junior forward Lee Perry added 14 points and nine rebounds and center Anthony Duckett had 10 points and 10 rebounds.

Senior forward Emery Ward chipped in 12 points and 11 rebounds off the bench.

But Calipari is concerning himself with the team in maroon, not the team in scarlet.

Minutewomen to take on Hartford

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team puts its early unbeaten record to the test tomorrow when it travels to the University of Hartford for a 2 p.m. contest.

So far this season, the Minutewomen have posted a 2-0 record. It may be unblemished, but it is far from perfect.

And according the coach Kathy Hewelt, the Hawks of Hartford will be ready to put the Minutewomen to the test.

"They are very tough to beat in their home building [the Hartford Physical Education Center]. They'll be ready for us," Hewelt said.

Hartford enters the season with a 0-2 record, having been beaten by Yale, 60-55 on Tuesday. Hewelt says the Hawks could be fired up for the game, similar to the way Boston University was coming off a pounding at the hands of Providence College.

"BU played a lot better in that game than they did against Providence," Hewelt said. The Terriers held on Wednesday against the Minutewomen before falling, 50-49 in a game at the Curry Hicks Cage.

Coach Jean Murphy's team is led by senior guard Pauline Frisini, who is the all-time leading scorer for Hartford. She scored 14 points and pulled down three rebounds against Yale after sitting out the team's season-opening 76-60 loss to Columbia University last weekend.

Also scoring in double figures are a pair of sophomore forwards. Annette Flynn and Betsy Andersen are each averaging 11 points a game, while Andersen is the leading rebounder, pulling down nine boards per game.

UMass hasn't been scoring as much as Hartford so far, but the Minutewomen are doing it with the defense more than anything. In both the BU win and the season-opening victory over Vermont, UMass held its opponents to less than 30 percent shooting from the floor.

But the Minutewomen haven't exactly been lighting it up themselves, shooting just 36 percent against the Terriers, and have been hampered by slow starts in both games.

"Thirty-six percent to 29 percent — that's not Division I college basketball," Hewelt said. "I'm not sure it's all defense."

Hewelt feels that the Minutewomen still have a lot of work to do in order to get to where they want to be. The fact that they've managed to remain unbeaten despite that is a plus for them.

Men's and women's swimming to battle Springfield

• Men, 1-1, coming off a victory over Tufts

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team began another winning streak Wednesday night with a 158-85 win over Tufts in Medford.

And UMass will get a chance to continue it tomorrow, when it travels to Springfield to take on the Chiefs of Springfield College at 1 p.m.

The Minutemen, whose 41-meet winning streak came to an end with a loss to Boston College in the first meet of the season, went into the Tufts meet with a good "general team attitude," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said.

"They were attacking their races, not just swimming to win but also for good times," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen came out of the starting gate fast and never looked over their shoulders as they took eight events before Tufts won their first. In the first event, the 400 medley relay, UMass took the first and third spots with the team of Dave Ehle, Peter Koback, Evan Gwilliam, and Brian McIver getting the top notch.

In the 1000-yard freestyle, Yarworth tried someone new, and his strategy paid off. Robertson, who, in his coach's words, is "the nicest surprise this year," got the first touch with a time of 10:03.01, followed by Will Riddell in third for UMass.

In the 200-yard freestyle, UMass went 1-2 with McIver taking first and John Gardner third. The following event, the 50-yard freestyle, showed the success of another Yarworth experiment.

Mike Yunker was swimming his first meet in the 50 and came in third behind the top performance of Minuteman G.T. Ladd.

The results of the 200-yard individual medley were no different. UMass got a first-place finish from Roger Kennedy and a third from Frank Sampson.

The brightest spot of the season so far continued to shine for the Minutemen as Dan Chesnicka blew his competition off the diving board. In the two 1-meter diving events Chesnicka was a distant first while getting excellent support from Dave Wells, who took a second and a third from the two competitions.

"Dan is diving very well right now," UMass diving coach Bob Newcomb. "He's qualifying for the nationals by 16 points."

The swimmers were also doing well as Kennedy and Riddell grabbed the top 2 spots in the 200-yard butterfly and McIver, Gardner and Sean Rutherford finished 1-2-4 in the 100-yard freestyle.

Tufts then won its first event, but it was too little, too late.

• Women, 3-1, face first meet in two weeks

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

It's been a while since the University of Massachusetts women's swimming team has had a chance to hit the pool in meet competition.

But according to coach Bob Newcomb, that should not matter much when the Minutewomen, 3-1, travel to Springfield College tomorrow for the second half of a UMass-Springfield doubleheader. The women meet at 4 p.m. while the men will square off in the opener at 1 p.m.

The Minutewomen started off their season in impressive style, rattling off consecutive victories against Smith College, the University of Vermont and the University of Connecticut, all on the road. They slipped a little though, losing their first meet of the year to the University of Maine at Boyden Pool.

Newcomb says that the Minutewomen haven't had any trouble getting themselves up since the Maine meet, their last meet almost two weeks ago (Nov. 20).

"[The time off] doesn't make much difference. It's not quite as detrimental as a game like basketball, where you have guys playing together," Newcomb said. "We've been training pretty hard."

The fact that Springfield has a way of making life rough for the Minutewomen will only help things.

"It has been a big rivalry. It's always been good for them," Newcomb said. "Springfield has a way of getting up for us, because we're the big school up the road. So we've got to swim well. They could beat us if things go bad.

"They always do well for us so we have to be prepared."

Newcomb feels that his team is prepared.

"We've had a good week, which is going for us. It's tough coming back from Thanksgiving, where they have four days off, but we've been training consistently since mid-November," Newcomb said. "We're staying healthy, and we have some people swimming some new things."

With that, Newcomb is confident that his team will win tomorrow's meet.

"I suspect it should be a good meet, but we should win," he said. "We're definitely the favorites going in."

This is the last chance for UMass to show its stuff before the intersession break.

"We have almost a full month off before our next meet (actually more than a month — January 7 at Northeastern). So it's important to finish on a good note," Newcomb said.

Dukakis addresses concerns over budget cuts

Stresses need for cooperation to UMass students

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — At a special session of the Town Meeting attended by Gov. Michael Dukakis here Saturday, several University of Massachusetts students voiced their concerns about possible budget cuts to public higher education.

The meeting was held as an open forum in which questions about the cuts and other issues could be brought before the governor.

Massachusetts is facing a major budget shortfall, and there is a proposed budget cut of about $5 million to the University.

"We are facing major challenges, as we have in the past," Dukakis said in his opening remarks.

Students who spoke at the meeting said they thought they impressed on the governor that the cuts will hurt UMass, but said the cuts will still be made.

Student Government Association Sen. Michael Greiner was one of the students to attend the meeting. He asked Dukakis how cuts would affect the University, and said he is paying more for less services.

"I'm sorry you're paying more for less," Dukakis said. "We're going to continue to work at it with you . . . It's got to be something that's done cooperatively."

Asked after the meeting if he thought the governor was now more aware of how the cuts will affect UMass, Greiner said, "I would say yes. One of the things we've been hearing from the administration is that he really didn't understand how UMass has been affected by the cuts."

Dukakis said one advantage of higher education is that it can raise tuition and fees so that services are not completely eliminated.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice, who also attended the meeting, said she thought the cuts will still come.

"I feel that just because we made a good impression the battle's still not won. I'm still expecting a cut," Orefice said.

Orefice asked Dukakis about how public higher education faculty would be affected by the cuts.

"Salaries at the University are in the first 10 percent," Dukakis said. "I don't see anything more important than that."

Orefice said she and Greiner will be organizing a letter-writing drive to Dukakis, to impress on him how these cuts will hurt students.

SGA Sen. Josh Gordon asked the governor: "What can we do as a University and what can you do as Governor to meet the challenge, specifically and in the future?"

Undergraduate student senator Michael Greiner (left) was one of the student leaders present at an open Town Meeting in Springfield Saturday. Gov. Michael Dukakis (right) spoke at the meeting.

In his answer Dukakis again stressed the need to work together as a solution.

"It's not going to be easy, and we're going to have to work hard and share ideas. I had a meeting this morning and I heard a few things from [Chancellor] Joe Duffey that I hadn't thought of," Dukakis said.

Duffey was at the meeting, and said he met with Dukakis earlier that morning. He said they had discussed the cuts, and talked about alternatives, but would not reveal any specific ideas he had given the governor.

"There has been some question as to whether the governor was fully aware. I don't think he was aware until today of the cuts," Duffey said. He said he told the governor that the University had already had three cuts, this would be the fourth, and would hurt the University.

Duffey said some of the areas that could be cut if the University's budget gets slashed would be courses offered in the second semester, maintenence and equipment accounts, and course size and availability. He said projects such as the proposed hockey arena and renovations to the Fine Arts Center are safe because they are part of a capital outlay project.

Duffey also had praise for the students who attended the meeting, as did Vice Chairman of the Board of Trustees Gordon Oakes.

Said Oakes, "I was very impressed with the representatives of the University that spoke."

Revenue shortfall

Dukakis said in his opening remarks that the state is facing a major revenue shortfall, although economic indicators could not say why.

Noting the prescence of many representatives of higher education, Dukakis said, "We want that door of college opportunity open to all our people."

Dukakis said the state had enjoyed a

Professor says concerns over rainforests justified

By RICK SANTOS
Collegian Staff

HADLEY — Amherst rainforest activists rallied Saturday in front of the Route 9 Burger King to protest the restaurant's buying of beef raised in tropical rainforests.

The purpose of the rally was primarily to make people aware of the group's concerns, said Kerry Wohlreich, spokeswoman for the Amherst chapter of the Rainforest Action Network.

The network has recently received information that the chain may have cancelled contracts with rainforest farmers, so Wohlreich said, "Right now, we've temporarily suspended the boycott."

Burger King has been a target, she said, because the restaurant admitted in 1987 to purchasing rainforest-raised beef.

The restaurant manager deferred questions to an office in Northampton, but phones in that office were not answered Saturday.

Wohlreich said one problem associated with farming in rainforests is the land is often cleared by burning the vegitation, "which produces a lot of carbon dioxide." This contributes to the greenhouse effect, a widely accepted theory that claims the ozone layer, which keeps ultraviolet rays from penetrating the atmosphere, is gradually depleting, resulting in global higher temperatures.

Carl Carlozzi, a University of Massachusetts professor of forestry and wildlife management, said attributing the destruction of the ozone layer to the burning of rainforests is unfair.

"It's episodic. It can't compare to the continuous use of fossil fuels," he said. "The profound reason it [greenhouse house effect] is there," he said, "has virtually nothing to do with the rainforests."

Industrialization is chiefly to blame for environmental problems, Carlozzi said.

But the professor supported many of the group's other assertions like the areas cleared for farming experience changing weather patterns and rapidly become deserts.

Carlozzi explained that the extent to which the earth's surface is covered by forest affects the reflection from the planet. This plus the openness resulting from the lack of ground cover changes the air circulation, he said.

More air rises because more heat is absorbed by the exposed soil, he said. "This coupled with greater air flow drives out the soil," he said. Often the cleared areas become deserts in two or three years, the professor said.

This is true, he said, "even though the areas are in rain belts." The rain serves only to erode the infertile soil, he said.

This is not a new type of agriculture, Carlozzi said. Many societies throughout history have farmed by this "slash and burn" method as it is known.

"The numbers have always been very, very small. What we're talking about [today] is not small cultures. We're talking about whole programs of government that encourage many, many people to go to remote areas and convert them to pasture land, the professor said.

He said the first year's crop is typically a good one, but after, there is a steady decline in production. "By the third year of cultivation, you've come to the point where you can't live off the land you're farming," Carlozzi said.

As futile as it sounds, the people are willing to do this type of self-destructive farming because "they're in a situation of desperation. They're trying to stay alive," he said.

He agreed also with rainforest group's point that many compounds used to make modern medicines are found only in the regions. There may be other scientifically valuable plants and animals in the rainforests that have not been discovered, he said.

"We know so little about those areas it's incredible. We don't even know the names of half of what's down there," Carlozzi said.

Group spokeswoman Wohlreich expressed concern about the possible loss of plants and animals. "It would be a real terrible thing to lose all of those plants and animals," she said.

The group is supporting federal legislation requiring imported beef to be labeled with the name of the country it was farmed, so consumers can make informed choices that may affect the market.

Two percent of the beef the United States consumes is rainforest produced, Wohlreich said, but she and Carlozzi say many other nations purchase the product.

Top environment official leaves after six years

BOSTON (AP) - After six years as the state's top environmental official, James Hoyte packed his belongings Friday and cleared out of an office 20 stories above the harbor that dominated much of his tenure and that provided his greatest satisfaction.

Hoyte, the only black member of the Dukakis Cabinet, said in a farewell interview last week that he appreciates Gov. Michael Dukakis for placing him in charge of such a high-visibility agency and that he's glad he could serve as "role model" for kids.

As Hoyte leaves office for a career in environmental law or consulting in Boston, a replacement has yet to be named by Dukakis.

But Hoyte said he had some advice for whoever follows him: work closely with the state's many advocacy groups, send a clear message to the news media and adopt a firm strategy for dealing with the governor's office.

Although Hoyte is generally credited with a solid list of accomplishments, he was frequently criticized for failing to follow his own advice, particularly when it came to fighting hard within the Dukakis Cabinet, which was loaded with more outspoken advocates for business development.

"Jamie got off to a slow start," said one state official.

"That was in part due to the governor's desire to stress economic development, thereby preventing anyone like Ed King from ever outflanking him again on the right."

Reflecting on his term as environmental secretary, the 44-year-old lawyer and career manager said he considers his greatest accomplishment the launching of a program to end centuries of pollution in Boston Harbor.

Hoyte was a key player in drafting the 1984 legislation that established the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority, served as the MWRA's only board chairman, and selected Paul Levy, a widely respected choice, as the agency's executive director.

Hoyte said he was also proud of winning passage of legislation to provide $500 million to protect open space, deal with the the solid waste problem and establish a procedure for disposing of low-level radioactive waste.

His biggest regret, Hoyte said, was the pounding Dukakis took in the presidential campaign on the environment. He said he was particularly hurt by the "misunderstanding" of the governor's role in cleaning Boston Harbor.

According to outside observers, Hoyte indeed deserves credit for creating the MWRA and putting in place the mechanism for cleaning the harbor.

Plan to move aquarium away from Boston poses parking problem

BOSTON (AP) — Plans to move the New England Aquarium to Charlestown have hit no obstacles but there is one sticky question: how to get the visitors there and where to put their cars, project officials say.

"Everything is leaning in the 'possible' direction," said aquarium Executive Director John Prescott. "If everybody wants it, it can happen. We have not found any major roadblocks."

"We've heard a lot (of concern) about parking and traffic access, but I've also heard a desire to work with the aquarium," he said speaking at a Friday briefing to update about 25 reporesentatives of Boston's Charlestown section on the project that was first announced in September.

Prescott also unveiled a scale model of the facility, a long narrow structure of water tanks and platforms topped by a vaulted clear glass roof. The model was shown Sunday to members of the National League of Cities meeting in Boston.

Prescott also said a telephone survey among 275 Charlestown residents conducted Thanksgiving weekend found 93 percent favored or felt neutral about placing an aquarium in their neighborhood. Only 7 percent of those polled opposed the idea.

The poll was conducted by Sibley Associates of Haverhill. Heads of households were surveyed and the poll included a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percent.

Expected to take five years to build, the proposed aquarium would require flooding the old Navy Yard Dry Dock No. 2, a 799 foot by 114 foot channel 35 feet deep. Giant underwater tanks would be created and visitors would descend to the exhibits on huge concourses.

The Boston Redevelopment Authority, which owns the property, would sell the dock to the aquarium for $1. It too is involved in planning the project.

When completed, it would cost $130 million for a 308,602-square feet facility designed to accommodate 1.8 million to 2.2 million peple annually.

Police to resume search for more victims of possible serial killer

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — State police using trained dogs Monday will resume searching the roadside areas where the bodies of five women have been found.

Investigators believe the killings of the women, all in their 20's, may be the work of a serial killer or killers.

One of the victims has been identified as a 25-year-old New Bedford woman with a police record and contact with the city's prosititution district.

Bristol County District Attorney Ronald A. Pina said the body of Dawn Mendes was identified Saturday by pathologists. She had been reported missing Sept. 10.

Since July, the remains of five women have been found beside Interstate 195 and Route 140 within a six-to eight-mile radius in dense woods.

Pina said Mendes had a 5-year-old son and a record of arrests.

He would not specify whether they involved prostitution but the woman reportedly had links with the Weld Square area, known by police as a center for local drug trading and prostitution in this fishing port of 98,000 people about 50 miles south of Boston.

Author compares holocaust to nuclear weapons

By AL ARPAD
Collegian Correspondent

The Nazi holocaust is similar in many ways to the current acceptance of nuclear weapons in America, author Robert Jay Lifton told an audience of 350 at Hampshire College on Saturday.

Although he said several times during his speech that he was "not calling anyone a Nazi," Lifton said that "from the Nazi holocaust, one can find certain principles and parallels in terms of what is happening with our own nuclear stance."

Dr. Robert Jay Lifton speaks Saturday at Hampshire College on the Nazi holocaust and nuclear weapons in America.

In his book "The Nazi Doctors," Lifton, a doctor, says German citizens were persuaded to accept what was happening by the apparently scientific explanations of Nazi propaganda.

Lifton cited a speech in which "Rudolph Hess, the leading Nazi, said that National Socialism is nothing but applied biology," and that "you could only cure the Nordic race. . .by extirpating the infection, the Jews."

Lifton's research for "The Nazi Doctors" has led him to believe doctors were able to carry out a program of inhuman cruelty while in a state of "sustained numbing" created by their own rationalizations and by a psychological phenomenon which he called "doubling — the formation of a functional second self."

These other selves were able to operate "relatively autonomously. . .and enabled them to place their consciences,...in connection with their loyalty to the organization, to the work of Auschwitz," he said.

Americans in the nuclear age have been similarly misled by a "false nuclear normality" since the bombing of Hiroshima in World War II, Lifton said.

In adopting a policy of deterrence, building more bombs in order to assure ourselves that the bombs would never be used, "our fear was submerged in the waves of nuclear normality and, instead of taking the appropriate directions toward peace, we call upon the weapons, the object of our fear, to save us," he said.

Lifton referred to this flawed rationalization bordering on religious faith as "nuclearism."

He mentioned "Living With Nuclear Weapons," which he called "a very unfortunate book that came out of the Kennedy School at Harvard," which in the last paragraph concludes: "living with nuclear weapons is our only hope. It is a true test of the human spirit."

Lifton said he rejects nuclear weapons and "the test of the human spirit is to get rid of the weapons."

He characterized the Star Wars space defense program as "a comprehensive illusion about the central fact of the nuclear age:
absolute, universal vulnerability. That's what Star Wars denies."

Lifton concluded, "The truth about the destruction of nuclear weapons leads us to an insight about our shared fate. . .so we can begin to implement the imperative of Nuremberg: to resist crimes against the people, any people."

Those attending the conference appeared conspicuously supportive of Lifton's viewpoint — there was little debate during the question and answer period following his address.

The conference was sponsored by the Western Massachusetts chapter of Psychologists for Social Responsibility, and the Five College Peace and World Security Studies Program.

Most people at UMass don't know that the Five Colleges offer an academic program in Peace and World Security Studies, said Dr. Virginia Senders, chair of the conference committee, in her opening remarks.

"Without Hampshire College, we would probably be sitting in the middle of a playing field, or some such thing, at the University," she said.

Expert says Arab/Israeli conflict handled unfairly by media, Congress

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Correspondent

The American media and the US Congress have failed the public in regard to the Arab/Israeli conflict, said an expert on US foreign affairs in a lecture Friday.

"Two of our major institutions have let us down and they've let us down very badly," said Richard H. Curtiss, a retired US Information Agency officer.

The American media has given the public a view of the conflict in the Middle East that is out of touch with the truth and the rest of the world, while the Congress has failed to institute a fair foreign policy in the Middle East, Curtiss said.

Most important is the failure of the media to provide accurate information about the situation in the Middle East, he said.

"I think the American media has fallen into the habit of reporting the good news about Israel and not the bad news," said Curtiss, who joined the State Department in 1951 and spent several years working in the Middle East.

This habit developed after World War II, when the press became a strong advocate for the new state of Israel out of sympathy for the Jews, who had suffered so much because of Hitler, he said.

"The attitude of the papers was 'When there's good news about Israel, put it on page one. When there's bad news, put it on page 65,'" he said.

"After a while there wasn't a lot of good news to tell about Israel, so they started telling the bad news about the Arabs, and its extended right on through to the present," Curtiss said.

The ravings of Khadafy go page one, while the actions of friendly Arab states such as Egypt and Saudi Arabia go on page 65, he said.

This is why the United States is out of touch with the rest of the world when it comes to Middle East policy, the former official said.

The second major institution that has failed in regard to the Arab/Israeli conflict is the US Congress, said Curtiss, who quit his job as chief inspector of the US Information Agency in 1980.

"If a president makes a move toward a more constructive Middle East policy, Congress is in there with some kind of resolution or letter that undercuts him, always on the side of Israel," Curtiss said.

According to the former official, the reason for this is the American/Israeli Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) — an enormous lobbying group in Washington, DC. The committee is fervently supportive of the Israeli cause.

"A congressman who does not always vote in favor of Israel will find himself with a very well-backed opponent in the next election," Curtiss said.

To satisfy the public affairs committee, a congressman must do two things, Curtiss said.

First, he must vote in favor of as much foreign aid as possible. The United States donates about $5.2 billion in aid per year to the Middle East, and $3 billion of that goes to Israel. Curtiss said the money given to Arab states is closely watched by Congress, while Israel is allowed to spend its money anyway it likes.

Second, he said, a congressman must vote against any arms package to an Arab state, regardless of its nature, to secure funding from AIPAC.

Curtiss said if a lawmaker does these two things, he will have the tremendous financial power of the AIPAC on his side in the next election, and if he does not, the AIPAC will strongly support his opponent.

The former official went on to say, however, that presently, things are improving. The public is getting more objective reporting, and seeing things in a fairer light. "We have a new start."

Curtiss says the Palestinians are now ready to agree to a peace treaty.

"They have come their half of the way. We owe it to the Arabs to give them some support," he said.

He said a bold, progressive president backed by a well-informed public could settle the crisis that has been plaguing the Middle East.

"I think the time is right for peace," Curtiss said.

Teacher says women's advancement often relies on hazardous cosmetics

By SARA GALER
Collegian Staff

Despite large numbers of women in the labor force, a woman's ability to make it in the world depends on how she looks, according to Kathy Peiss, associate professor of history and women's studies at the University of Massachusetts.

"It's still the case that those working women are far more attentive to their appearance than men. One thing that has had a profound impact on women with regard to appearance is cosmetics," said Peiss.

Peiss said that cosmetics companies began in the early 1900s by offering products associated with female roles in society.

"Women were taking part in reforms, political activity, and they were joining the work force. They were also being recognized as sexual beings," Peiss said. To account for these new roles, "health-giving" skin care products were introduced to the market.

"These products eventually led to the kinds of products offered on the market today, many of which claim to stop aging or to protect skin from wrinkles. Usually these claims are worthless," said Peiss. "What's obvious is that the industry is selling products that are incredibly overpriced. Some are hazardous."

Albey Reiner, associate professor of microbiology at UMass, said that "there's a lot of toxic stuff in cosmetics that is legal. Since cosmetics are extremely underregulated, strange laws allow harmful products to be sold.

"Two colors of the US Drug and Cosmetics colors are pretty clearly carcinogens. They are legal, although they should be banned if current laws on the books were applied," Reiner said.

Peiss said cosmetics companies depend on lack of regulation to advertise and sell their products. "Enforcement of the Food and Drug Act is very weak, and so are FTC laws against false advertising. Regulation for cosmetics has always been controlled by an agency of the government that never has the kind of funding to be effective," she said.

Although people occasionally file lawsuits against companies, consumer activism in cosmetics is "not a hot issue," according to Peiss.

Cosmetics companies also depend upon women buying on impulse, said Peiss. "Manufacturers feel that women are attracted to cosmetics through pretty packaging and the promise of beauty. The idea is to keep creating new products that will guarantee a fashionable consumer," she said.

"By proliferating their products, cosmetics companies create the need to be fashionable by making it seem necessary to have different make-up colors for different times of day. For instance, if you get made up in a department store, they'll teach you how to use three or four colors of eye shadow, not just one. The idea is to get you to buy as many products as possible," Peiss said.

While the women's movement of the late 1960s and early 1970s slowed down the current cosmetics industry ideology, Peiss said the slowdown has not been in a long term way. "In fact, the response of the industry to the women's movement has been to sell products that make you look as if you aren't wearing them. I think the question to go back to is, what does it mean to define yourself in terms of appearance?"

In the future, Peiss said she thinks there will be "a real exploitation of women's fears of aging."

Former Salvadoran student to speak tonight

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

A representative of the University of El Salvador will speak tonight at the University of Massachusetts on that nation's "political situation and the role of the University in that situation," according to CASA member Greg Smith.

Smith said Rene Hernandez, a representative of the General Association of the Salvadoran University, will focus on the "increase in the amount of political assassinations and disappearances, and the response of University of El Salvador students to this increase," in a lecture at 8 p.m. in Campus Center 811.

The University, which Smith cited as the "only institute of higher education in the country," was closed by the Salvadoran government from 1980 to 1984, he said.

"The University is at times sort of an island of democracy in the sea of Salvadoran violence," he said. "But the government attacks the university by cutting off the money they need."

Hernandez was a student at the University of El Salvador until he received threats from a Salvadoran "death squad" for his work with the association, Smith said.

Many colleges and universities in the United States have sent aid to the University of El Salvador, Smith said. The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate recently sent two tons of books to the school, he said.

The presentation is the third in a four-part series of lectures entitled "US Intervention in the Developing World: A Deeper Look." The series is sponsored by CASA, the Organization for Marxist Studies, the Palestinian Support Committee and the Third World Caucus. Smith said each sponsor was allowed to choose one speaker for the program.

Panelist discuss role of progressivism

By JOSEPH L HILL JR.
Collegian Staff

A panel sponsored by the Pioneer Valley Student Action Network and the Umass Greens solidarity presented a discussion entitled "Building a progressive majority for 1992," to approximately 30 people at Herter yesterday.

The panel of four, which was made up of members of the Labor movement and the Rainbow Coalition, discussed the various positions the Progressive Left played in the recent presidential elections, and what role the Progressives should fill in the 1992 elections.

Lisa Raskin, a member of the Western Massachusetts Rainbow Coalition, contends that American political parties are supposed to be a product of your needs, and that when the party no longer satisfies these 'needs' it must be restructured.

Under this presumption, Raskin feels that the Democratic party, in losing the presidential election to the Republicans for the third straight time, no longer satisfies the needs of the working and middle class and is therefore ripe for a restructuring along the progressive lines of the Rainbow Coalition.

She feels that a primary reason for the Democratic loss was ill media coverage. According to Raskin, the media controlled the debates and therefore framed the issues that the American public was exposed to. The fact the media was 'soft' on the Republicans throughout the elections was, according to Raskin, the result of capitalism.

She questioned whether General Electric [GE], which owns the national television station N.B.C. would broadcast issues, such as fair housing and ERA legislation, which are pertinent to the majority of the public. Since GE also manufactures the greatly purchased MX missile.

That the democrats are a losing party and in a moral crisis, was unanimously agreed upon by the members of the panel, but what direction the progressives should play in American politics in the near future was in debate.

Jesse Jackson and the Rainbow Coalition's popularity within the Democratic party was seen by the panel as a good indicator of the rise in progressive sentiments in America.

Jacksons 7 million voters represented a diverse set of ideas which embraced programs such as universal health care, a realignment of American foreign policy, and a shift of the economy from military to civilian which often characterize the Progressive Movement.

The question that arises is whether the progressive movement, of which the Rainbow Coalition is part, should remain in the two-party system or form an independent party and have 'Rainbow' candidates vie for political positions on all levels of government.

Although this question was never fully answered, several interesting ideas were put forth. One idea common to the majority of the panel is to "keep this [the Progressive Movement] in front of the people," according to Labor for Jackson member Bill Fletcher.

This requires having persons run for political offices under the ideals of the 'Rainbow Coalition', instead of popular party names like Democratic or Republican.

BMCP wants more hours, self-determination

By SCOTT C. HILL
Collegian correspondent

The Black Mass Communications Project [BMCP], which plays African-American music at Umass radio station WMUA, has received air time cuts of over 60 over the last five years.

In 1983, BMCP had approximately 60 hours of air time per week. Presently, BMCP has only 23 hours. Phil Straub, WMUA's Programmer cites several reasons for the cuts in BMCP's air time.

Straub claims that BMCP does not play a diversity of music in their shows. He contended that if BMCP was willing to play a different selection of music such as Blues, African, or Caribbean, they [BMCP] might receive increased air time. He classified all the music BMCP now plays as 'urban contemporary.'

Rich Gray, General Manager of BMCP, disagrees with the 'urban contemporary' label. He feels that the distinctive sounds of 'rap', 'house and club', and 'slow jams', offer a sufficient variety.

Desmond Dorsett, BMCP's Promotions Director feels that there are other conflicts between BMCP and WMUA. "BMCP is losing all sovereignty over their own affairs," says Dorsett in regards to the choosing and training of their DJs and the control of their music.

Trent Watson, BMCP Business Manager and DJ claims,"WMUA is seeking to determine what the African-American community should listen to."

In addition to the air time cuts, BMCP has received a cut in funding of approximately 25, according to Watson. He believes that not only BMCP, but "all Third World organizations have been targeted in recent funding cuts."

A new procedure which requires all BMCP DJs to go through five weeks of WMUA training before being allowed on the air is also a cause of dissension. Several BMCP memebers felt that they should have the right to train their own DJs. According to Straub, the purpose of the sessions is to teach proper air conduct and improve station loyalty.

Another reason cited for the air time cuts is that there is a lack of DJs. "The claim that there are not enough BMCP DJ's is untrue," says Rich Gray. He believes that there are enough DJs to warrant additional time for future semesters. Former BMCP DJ Rio Gabrielle, for example, was denied air time by WMUA.

The WMUA Programmer doesn't see any additional time cuts in BMCP's future, but can not make any guarantees.

Film Review...

By EDWARD P. SMITH
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday November 29, the documentary "The Swords of Islam" was shown at Herter to approximately 30 people. This documentary was sponsored by the Islamic Society of Umass This movie depicted the struggle of two Muslim fundamentalist movements in the Middle-East; the Jihad movement in Egypt and the Hizzbullah movement in Lebanon.

Members of the the two fundamentalist groups, who were interviewed by the film producer openly admitted to committing many terrorist acts in the Middle-East including the assassination of former Egyptian president Anwar Sadat and the taking of American Hostages in Iran.

These fundamentalist muslim groups have had to resort to acts of terrorism in order to combat the money that has bought and set up these governments that are puppets to the America.

They reasoned that in order to achieve an Islamic government with Islamic law, they needed to eliminate the puppet governments created by America. The infiltration of the western culture into these regions has been viewed by the populous as destructive to the teachings of Islam.

Authors note:Members of the Islamic Society at Umass wish it to be stated that they are not affiliated in any way with Min. Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam.

Potential participants must be in the Amherst area during this time and complete a journal and a paper to recieve the credits of the independent study. The project is also open to those seeking an internship or an outlet for volunteer energies.

The project is the production of gospel and folk singer Jane Sapp and the group The Children of Selma in a large scale concert for the Five Colleges. The event will take place on March 4,1989, at the John M. Greene Hall at Smith College, in celebration of Black History Month.

Jane Sapp in addition to being a nationally known cultural worker, has appeared at major folk and women's music festivals and has appeared and recorded with Pete Seeger, Sweet Honey in the Rock and many others.

On March 4 she will perform with The Children of Selma, a group of African-American children from Selma, Alabama,ranging in ages from 10 to 20. In addition to singing songs about themselves at the concert the children will also perform an original play about drugs in the Amherst public schools.

Connecticut junk dealer knows his science

WALLINGFORD, Conn. (AP) — Paul Gleason smokes cigars, has greasy hands, haggles over prices and can tell you where the only rusty Pontiac sits at Wallingford Used Auto Parts.

He is the sort of guy you would expect to be running a junkyard.

But in addition to telling you where to find the windshield for a '79 Mazda, he can also tell you about the problems with invertebrates in Long Island Sound, or why it's important to be environmentally aware.

Gleason, 37, is probably the only Connecticut junkyard manager to have bachelor's degrees in biology and marine science. Add to this his outspoken liberal political views and his environmentalism, and he is definitely not your typical junkyard man.

Gleason lives with his wife, Sarah, and two small children in Bristol, where he was born and raised. He has worked for the National Marine Fisheries Service in Woods Hole, Mass., Wareham, Mass., and Milford, and on sport fishing boats in California.

These days he says he prefers selling alternators and drive shafts in Wallingford to studying the varying lengths of haddock, lobster, and codfish.

"In this business, you've got to like grease and dirt," says Gleason, who maintains a puckish grin when dealing with customers and visitors. As junkyard manager he does everything - buying and selling parts and cars, seeing that all the cars on the lot are prperly salvaged, and making sure he knows where to find almost anything in the 7-acre yard.

"I know I got it (any given car part) because it's up here," he says, tapping his slightly receding hairline after helping a woman find the parts she needed for her bashed-in black Plymouth Duster.

Tucked into a triangle of land between railroad tracks and two streets near the Meriden border, Wallingford Used Auto Parts offers the potential of relatively cheap replacement parts for those dying cars and strained budgets and acres of exploration opportunities for the merely curious.

Gleason is the king of the yard, able to tell any visitor just where to find that Mazda windshield or hard-to-find Pontiac bumper. And he does it with a mix of cockiness and courteousness that can take a visitor by surprise.

There is a disorderly orderliness about the place. Customers and men in greasy overalls seem to be scurrying everywhere, dismantling crumbling autos, lugging car parts, speaking Polish, English and Spanish.

In one corner, a half-dozen rusted school buses are connected with sheet metal into a makeshift windshield warehouse, and in another, dozens of old engines cover an area half the size of a football field. Piles of batteries, transmissions, tires and fenders are everywhere. Overgrown vines twirl about car hoods stacked upright; and neat rows of car doors, looking like some sort of modern artwork, stand near the yard's entrance. Decaying mail trucks, cars of all makes and even a delivery truck advertising "Drink Wonderful Gallo Wines" lie scattered about.

A junkyard dog dozes next to a rusted panel truck and a few rats dart about.

The place looks, feels and smells as a junkyard should.

"I deal with a lot of invertebrates here every day," Gleason says, his eyes squinting and his mouth half-smiling. Gleason looks like an amateur rugby player - barrel-chested with muscular arms and legs, longish brown hair and everpresent sweatshirt.

He admits that in his business it's a bit unusual "to run into someone who has a vocabulary above third grade."

"I still don't know how to tune up a car," he says, although it's hard to believe him because of his ability to identify nearly any part on first sight. "But I can sell you a part for your car. When I started I used to take this huge book home - an inventory of all parts in all cars. Everything I learned was self-taught," Gleason says, strolling through the mud, broken glass and debris.

He points to what he says was "a nose for an '81 LeMans" leaning against a concrete building near a faded Esso gasoline station sign. "A thousand bucks from the insurance company 'cause they couldn't find any others," he says proudly.

The bread and butter of the business are the engines and transmissions the yard sells, Gleason says, although he adds that there is no typical customer or typical item. Using a computerized parts network that links junkyards throughout New England, Gleason can locate nearly anything. "I can come up with any parts with any car," he boasts.

Gleason, who answers the telephone with a distinctive "WallingFORD," is able to find something to talk aobut with just about everyone who walks into the junkyard office. The office includes, among other items, a computer, old car grills and assorted hubcaps. The phone rings constantly and Gleason, switching sometimes from Spanish to good-ol'-boy joking, takes them all on:

"You need a what? Tail light or front? Hatchback or sedan? Does it have a trunk? Can you drive it in? If you can drive it in, you can leave it here. Yeah, I do, what do you need? Sir, come down here right now. I've got one that we're getting ready to process and crush . . . ."

Gleason's clientele is varied and includes teen-agers sporting leather jackets and 'Metallica' T-shirts.

"Get in the car, turn the key," he says. "That's all they know. That's all I used to know." With everyone who comes in, Gleason is likely to engage in some sort of debate, from deer hunting to Dukakis.

But, there's another side to Gleason, dating to his days from 1970 to 1980 working as a researcher for the National Marine Fisheries Service and for a private testing lab.

Frustration with the federal bureaucracy and cutbacks begun when Ronald Reagan was elected president in 1980 convinced Gleason he should foresake his scientific leanings for a career in junkyards. Gleason had spent years earning bachelor's degrees in marine science and biology at Long Island University, and had done graduate work at Bridgewater State College in Massachusetts and San Diego State University in California.

"I wanted a break from what I did," he says. "I was disgusted with doing the work and Reaganomics."

He remains interested in the health of Long Island Sound because he has a home on Huntley Island, off East Lyme, and because he has a keen interest in the environment. "Believe me, Long Island Sound is the toilet bowl of New York State and Connecticut. It's unbelieveable the things that are disposed of in that poor Sound," says Gleason, who spent many hours scuba diving in the Sound's waters.

"When I first started this, I was kind of embarrassed that I was doing it," he said of his early days in the auto salvage business. "This is challenging in the respect that trying to deliver the proper attitude and image to the public is important. You don't have to be a mental midget to be involved in this business."

Some of Gleason's friends and former co-workers weren't suprised to hear he had given up invertebrates in favor of junk cars.

Mass. congressmen are still the most liberal around

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Massachusetts congressional delegation, keeping with tradition, remained one of the most liberal blocs of voters in congress in 1988, loyally supporting Democratic progress and leading the opposition against President Reagan.

A new analysis of the 1988 year in Congress by congressional Quarterly showed that Massachusetts' 10 House Democrats voted against the president much more often than the party's 66 percent average.

Rep. Chester G. Atkins of Concord led the way, voting against the administration 81 percent of the time during the 1988 legislative year, while freshman Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II opposed Reagan 80 percent of the time.

Other Massachusetts liberals Reps. Barney Grank of Newton, Edward J. Markey of Malden, Gerry E. Studds of Cohasset and Joseph Moakley of South boston all opposed the president between 77 percent and 79 percent of the time.

Reps. Edward P. Boland of Springfield, Brian J. Donnelly of Dorchester and Nicholas Mavroules of Peabody all had scores slightly above the 66 percent House Democrat average, whil Rep. Joseph Early of Worcester had exactly 66 percent.

The delegation's lone Republican, Rep. Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield, voted against his own party's president more often than all but one other House Republican. His anti-administration score was 66 percent, the CQ study said.

In the Senate, both Edward M. Kennedy and John F. Kerry were well above the 45 percent Senate Democrats' average for voting against Reagan; each had 55 percent.

The Massachusetts lawmakers also showed intense loyalty to their Democratic Party.

Atkins voted with his party 96 percent of the time. Only two other members had a higher party unity record.

Reps. Kennedy and Moakley each had a 95 percent record of voting with their party, ranking them in the top 10. The other Massachusetts Democrats also were above the House Democrats' 79 percent average in 1988.

The Congressional Quarterly study also showed that most Massachusetts lawmakers had better-than-average attendance records on floor roll call votes.

Campus Snow Policy 1988-1989

Save This Page for Reference

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all campus activities in as nearly routine a way as possible. Since a large number of faculty, staff, and students normally bring cars onto campus, it is important for all concerned to understand clearly what policies and procedures will be followed in the event of a severe snow storm that temporarily limits parking capacity on campus.

Radio Announcements

Classes and all other scheduled activities on campus will be held as usual unless specific announcements to the contrary are made beginning at 6 a.m. and continuing periodically throughout the day in question. Such announcements will be made on radio stations WTTT-Amherst 1430 AM, WHMP-Northampton 1400 AM, WMAS-Springfield 1470 AM, WGAM-Greenfield 1520 AM, WHAI-Greenfield 1240 AM, WARE-Ware 1250 AM, WCAT-Orange 1390 AM, WHYN-Springfield 560 AM, WFCR-Amherst 88.5 FM, WTIC-Hartford 1080 AM, WACE-Springfield 730 AM, WTAG-Worcester 580 AM, WSPR-Springfield 1270 AM, WMUA-Amherst 91.1 FM, and WGGB-TV Springfield, Channel 40, WTSA-Brattleboro VT 1450 AM, WRSI-Greenfield 95.3, WAQY-Springfield 102.1 FM. It is important that you stay tuned to your radio for additional information in the event of a change.

The following will be the only announcements made concerning closing the Amherst campus, and local radio stations will be asked to repeat them verbatim.

1. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closed today, but the library and buses are operating."

2. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus will delay opening until 11 a.m., but buses are operating.

3. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closing at___ p.m., but the library and buses are operating."

4. "The University of Massachusetts/Amherst Campus is closing at___ p.m. The library and buses are operating and third shift should report to work."

Snow Day Hot Line

As an additional convenience, a "snow day hot-line" has been installed. Taped messages will provide up-to-date information on the status of the campus and may be accessed by dialing 545-3630. This is the only campus number which should be called for such information.

Decision by 4:30 a.m.

The decision to cancel classes will be made at about 4:30 a.m., if the indications are that road travel is or will become hazardous or that insufficient parking capacity will be available. Cancellation of classes includes Continuing Education day classes as well as regular University classes.

Delayed Opening, 11 a.m.

In the event of a major snow storm, a decision may be made to delay the opening of the University until 11 a.m. The objective of this decision is to provide enough time to plow and clear roadways and sufficient parking capacity. Lots cannot be efficiently plowed if they contain parked cars.

Don't Call Personnel Office

If circumstances make it necessary to cancel classes during the day, this information will be communicated by the Personnel Office to the offices of the chancellor and vice chancellors which in turn will inform their respective schools/colleges, departments, and business offices. Departments should not call the Personnel Office concerning snow cancellations.

Bus Service

It should be assumed that bus services are operating, unless announcements are made specifically to the contrary on WTTT-AM, WMUA-FM and WHMP. For information regarding changes in bus schedules during snow storms call 545-2086 and 545-0056.

Suggestions

In order to alleviate the problems of clearing parking lots, it is suggested that all University personnel who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

- Make use of the bus service to the campus.
- Pool rides with others whenever possible.
- Walk if it is at all possible to do so.
- Have someone drop you at work so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during the daylight hours is facilitated.
- If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to either the peripheral lot west of Physical Plant or Lot 25. Under snow emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normal lot capacity will be available.
- Make use of the Campus Center Parking Garage (open 24 hours a day).

Snow Day Personnel

In the event that classes and all other scheduled activities are cancelled, only snow day personnel will be required to work. Heads of departments should review and update their snow day plans and notify employees who are designated as snow day personnel. Under certain circumstances (after 5 p.m., weekends, holiday periods, and Intersession), the Library may also be closed. Such closing will be announced over the radio stations listed above.

Procedures

When the University is closed, only snow day personnel should report to work.

When the opening of the University is delayed until 11 a.m., snow day personnel should report at their regular time or as soon as possible; all others should report to work at 11 a.m..

In order to allow plowing to be accomplished effectively, the following procedures will be implemented at once:

A. When the University is closed, or opening is delayed until 11 a.m., only snow day personnel should report to work at their regular time. All others should not come on campus, if at all possible.

B. Snow day personnel will be permitted to park only in the following lots: 32 and 34 (south of Whitmore SBA); 25 (west of Physical Plant, north of access way to the adjacent peripheral lot); 31 (north of Engineering, Graduate Research Center, etc.) 62 (south of Morrill Science)

Entrance to all other lots will be prohibited until the University is officially open for business. The Parking Garage is, of course, open for parking at all times.

Evening Classes And 2nd Shift

An announcement concerning evening classes (classes beginning after 5 p.m.) and second shift workers will be made if the decision is made to keep the University closed all day. Such announcements will be made prior to 1 p.m., over the same radio stations used for snow announcements. If the University is closed, but the second shift is required to report to work, second shift personnel will also be required to park in the lots listed in B above (32, 34, 25, 31, 62); all other lots will be closed for plowing.

Let's remember the homeless all year

It was very heartwarming to see the outpouring of support for the homeless community on Thanksgiving. I'm sure we'll have a similar expression around Christmas. However, lost in all this goodwill is the fact that these same people are hungry and without a home the other 363 days of the year. The volunteers who have provided these meals have certainly done their good deed for the day, but where is the constant opposition to the fact that almost ten percent of the population of the United States suffers from hunger? How can we so easily forget this tragedy when the holidays are over?

Stephen Hurley

It's time that we attempt to solve the problem permanently rather than easing it for a day and then patting ourselves on the back for being such Good Samaritans. Two good meals a year is not the solution. The very concept of charity is not a solution. The only way we can resolve this national tragedy is by changing the factors that cause it — low wages and expensive housing.

Up to 3 million people in the US are homeless. The typical portrait of a homeless person is of a jobless man spending the money he just conned off a pedestrian on cheap wine, or a welfare mother who's too lazy to get off her butt and get a job. The facts paint a totally different picture. Most of the homeless people in this country are called "working poor" — that is, they hold down a job, but the income they receive simplu doesn't allow for a roof over their heads.

As many as 500,000 of the homeless people in this country are children. 12 million American children suffer from hunger. They're not hungry because dinner is a little late, but because they are chronically short of the nutrients necessary for proper growth. Sure, most of these hungry kids won't die because of a lack of food, but chronic malnutrition isn't a problem that will go away as soon as the next handout arrives.

A hungry child is more likely to be inattentive in school, which will result in the child being labelled a troublemaker. This will lower their self-esteem and worsen their performance even more. A hungry child will most likely have fewer opportunities than a well-fed child, because of the inferior education the hungry child received.

If this sounds extreme, consider the fact that children of poor parents tend to stay relatively poor. It's not passed through the genes, but it's with the child from the moment of birth. The effects of childhood hunger last a lifetime.

Okay, you've heard all the sob stories, now how about some solutions. Well, let's start with the minimum wage. The national minimum wage has remained at $3.35 since 1978, which has resulted in a 33 percent loss of purchasing power due to inflation. The minimum wage generates only $6800 yearly income. Teenage kids working at McDonald's aren't the only ones earning minimum wage — 80 percent of all people earning minimum wage are adults.

The solution is simple — raising the minimum wage will lift people out of poverty. I don't mean a 10 or 20 cent raise, which is what we usually get from the bigwigs in Washington. I'm talking about bringing the minimum wage up to five or six bucks an hour. Some progressive senators have begun to address the problem, and it's time that the public forced other legislators to take a stand. Once we get the minimum wage up then we can start talking about feeding a family and providing a decent home.

Affordable housing is the other part of the answer. The Reagan Administration has slashed funding that provides affordable housing. Builders should be building first homes for people living on the street rather than second and third homes for people on Easy Street.

All this requires is a shift in priorities. Do we care more about people or profits? Who needs the money more — the businessman or the working man? The debate over welfare should not be over what kind of people the recipients are — it should be about what kind of people we are. So, instead of handing out a free meal every now and then, let's make some real changes so that no one will need handouts anymore.

UMass should be providing classes, not hockey rinks

I really am glad that the state has already decided to give University of Massachusetts $25 million or so to build a hockey rink. Since the arena is almost guaranteed to be built, there's nothing I can do about it. So I don't even have to have an opinion on this convocation center.

I can just sit back and delight in the fact that UMass will soon have a hockey arena. I don't have to be upset that the state is giving us $25 million for this building while at the same time it has proposed to cut another $5 to $7 million from the University's fiscal '89 budget.

UMass is going to have a hockey team. I like sports. I like hockey. I'm happy. I don't have to worry about whether it's right or not to build a hockey arena when I only get two out of the five classes I preregister for because my department is under funded.

I don't have to challenge student leaders, such as Guy Glodis, who say that a hockey rink will bring an athlete of a Doug Flutie caliber to UMass, thereby getting the University national attention and bringing in more revenue. I don't have to say that ticket sales from events at the arena aren't going to hire more professors like $25 million used specifically to boost academic programs would.

Glodis and others have said that a hockey arena will be a great step toward making UMass a flagship university. I don't have to say that if we want UMass to be a flagship university it makes sense for the state to approve $32 million for a polymer science center, $31.5 million for a new engineering building, and $23 million for a classroom center at UMass as it did last summer. These things would enrich this university as an institution of higher education. They would attract more students and better professors. I don't have to wonder if a hockey rink would do the same.

Bob Bobala

This University deserves a hockey rink. It's silly that a school this size doesn't have one. I'll be long gone by the time the University slaps its students with a $100-a-year fee to finish paying for the arena after it has been completed. But if I was still going to be here I wouldn't mind paying the extra money. I think a hockey arena would be worth it.

I wouldn't mind paying $100 a year for this convocation center if I could get all the classes that I want, if those classes weren't overcrowded, and if all the facilities here were in good condition. All we've heard about for the past year is budget cuts, budget cuts, and more budget cuts. The state has already proposed another cut of $5 to $7 million for 1989. Already, a freeze has been ordered on state funded positions and limits have been imposed on spending by all campus departments. How can the state give us $25 million for a hockey arena at a time when the academic programs at UMass are underfunded?

Of course, my opinion doesn't matter. The money for the building is already coming. The Mullins Convocation Center is going to be built. I don't have to wonder whether it's right or not to spend $44 million on a hockey arena when the state is in a fiscal crisis and the quality of education at UMass is threatened due to lack of funds.

Oh well, if five years from now students can only get threeout of five classes, they can invest in a good pair of ice skates and spend all their extra time at the rink.

Visitors center useful

Several recent letters to the Collegian were critical of the money spent on the new Visitors Center in view of the current budget problems. Although these budget concerns are very real, the Visitors Center should not be seen as a misplaced priority.

More than 98 percent of the expenditure for the facility and furnishings came from private sources. The major share was a gift from a former member of the Board of Trustees, E. Paul Robsham, and his wife, in memory of their son, Paul, who was killed in an automobile accident. Additional funding, primarily for furnishings, was provided by the Class of 1955, as a Reunion class gift. The money, in both instances, has been on hand for several years, and much before the budget crunch occurred.

Its purpose is to enhance and extend the hospitality of the University to prospective applicants, their parents, tourists, and other visitors. You may recall our first visit to campus and the confusion about where to go, where to park, what's where, and how to get there from here. The Visitors Center will solve these problems, as well as providing a variety of other services, to University of Massachusetts students.

Political specialist to discuss '88 presidential election tonight

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Dr. Gerard M. Pomper, professor of political science at Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers University, is scheduled to deliver a lecture titled "The 1988 Election: Analysis and Criticism" tonight in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Pomper, who has published 14 books on American Politics, is accepted by scholars to be an authority on American politics.

"He is very interesting and well-known. He has been doing election studies since the 70s and his books are widely used in our political science courses," said Patricia Sykes, a professor in the political science department at the University of Massachusetts.

Sykes said Pomper is usually one of the first people after an election to publish an analysis of it.

Pomper is currently preparing a volume entitled "The Election of 1988" due out in February from Chatam House publishers.

Although Pomper would not reveal any of the specifics in his lecture, he did give the Collegian a brief insight into what he would be speaking about.

"One, I think this election should be viewed as a conserving election, rather than a conservative election. Two, I think the election showed there were some fundamental differences between Bush and Dukakis. Three, there was evidence supporting the existence of a Republican national majority," Pomper said.

He said he would speak on the defects in the system he felt were revealed in the election process of presidential campaign 1988, and suggest some remedies for its repair.

Pomper has been a Fulbright-Hays lecturer at Tel-Aviv University and a visiting professor at Nuffield College of Oxford University. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Columbia University and his doctorate from Princeton.

Outside of academia, Pomper co-chaired the Committee on Party Renewal, a bipartisan group seeking to strengthen the two-party system.

The political science department at the University is urging students to attend what they feel will be an enlightening lecture by Pomper which may reveal new insight into the American political process.

tremendous six years, and that he was still working on the common goals of a decent job at a good wage, affordable housing, and continuing the fight against drugs.

Members of some of the state's anti-drug programs were at the meeting to voice support for the programs, and ask that they not be cut.

The issue of auto insurance was raised by SGA Sen. James Smack, who asked if Dukakis would support a competitve insurance environment.

"I think it depends less on the kind of system but what's going on in that system," Dukakis said. "We are not alone in having an auto insurance rate problem. I think the new laws will see reductions in rates."

Jello Biafra blasts America in Blue Wall Cafe lecture

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

Last Friday night Jello Biafra stepped out on stage at the Blue Wall and told an audience of 550 that America was in danger of becoming a police state. By the half-time interval the cafe had already turned into one.

The unprecedented numbers who had turned up to watch the latter day folk-hero — some of whom had travelled from as far afield as Boston — meant that many people were left out in the cold, and needless to say they weren't too happy about it. Unfortunately their violent and disappointingly uningenious attempts to gain entrance led to a door being smashed in and the police being called up to "keep things under control."

What this basically meant was that we couldn't leave during the interval if we wanted to see the second half of the show, so anyone who had drunk too much coffee earlier would just have to grin and bear it, and hope that nature didn't take its course.

However none of this could spoil what turned out to be one of the most informed and entertaining lectures I've witnessed in recent years. Biafra interspersed readings from his spoken word albums with more general observations on the neo-right-wing insanity that is so prevalent in 80s America. And it was refreshing to see that unlike many so-called political comedians, he didn't just opt for the "soft targets" of Reagan and Bush. This boy had done his homework.

In his opening salvo on Oliver North, Biafra related the Iran-Contra affair to CIA covert operations as far back as Korea, Laos and Vietnam. He talked about Theodore Shackley, Robert E. Secord and others using drug profits to finance their own private army whose activities are answerable to no one. Obviously much of this material has already surfaced in the recent documentary, "Cover-Up" but somehow Biafra had a way of making it more palatable. His manic improvisations (he does a mean George Bush) rendered this politically explosive topic hilarious, and therefore infinitely more frightening. All the time you are laughing at these grotesque comic-book characters you're thinking "Wait a minute! These guys are for real!"

But Biafra's concerns went far beyond the corridors of power. Through sketches such as "May All Your Dreams Be Wonderful" he showed how the fascist disease reached into the homes of ordinary people. Special "schools" were in existence where concerned parents could send rebellious children to make them "acceptable" to society — a process which involved having any individuality literally bashed out of them. "When you think about it, it's a great way to avoid having to talk straight to your kids," Biafra concluded with a bitter air of sarcasm, and the house errupted in waves of laughter.

Inevitably the bulk of the show was devoted to the question of censorship, in particular Biafra's trial for obscenity by the state of California over the Dead Kennedys' album, Frankenchrist. The album contains a poster of Swiss surrealist H.R. Giger's painting, "Penis Landscape" which was deemed obscene by Tipper Gore and

REM's Green vision confronts status quo

By BOYD HILTON
Collegian Correspondent

Green
REM
Warner Bros.

REM may well be the only revolutionary rock band left. A brief glance at any recent interview will tell you that this is a band which is fed up with the dominant neo-conservatism of the Reagn/Bush era. The route from their first album Murmur to their newest Green is not only one of a musical maturing but also of a development of a sophisticated political vision. The lyrics on Green are rarely politically explicit but they do form a consistent vision which challenges the status quo of the late 80s, capitalist United States. From a song like "Orange Crush" which, with the bare minimum of lyrics, manages to evoke the ideology behind the Vietman War ("we are agents of the free, I've had my fun and now it's time to send your conscience overseas . . .") to the beautiful merging of music and lyrics in "The Wrong Child" where the unacceptability of being different (culturally? ethnically? religiously? sexually?) in our society is hauntingly exposed from the Wrong Child's point of view: "I'm not supposed to be like this . . ."

On the one hand REM is a rock band that seems steeped in the musical traditions of American rock'n'roll, but on the other, they have a unique and consistently challenging position in that field; the form and content of their records always seek to confront the harsh "realities" of the US. In this sense they verge on appearing truly anti-American or, to "exhume McCarthy," un-American.

Michael Stipe's emotional vocal performances are attacks on the US's worship of the Money-God. But on this record he also sounds vulnerable and essentially afraid of the ominous future that the US represents. On "You Are Everything" he sings "sometimes I feel like I can't even sing, I'm very scared for this world, I'm very scared for me . . ." One can almost hear our president-elect yelling back "Scared?! How dare you be scared!" But Stipe warns against such complacency. "Stand!" he extorts us, "stand in the place where you work . . .think about the place where you live and wonder why you haven't before."

REM, knowing that they have amassed an enviable community of fans, are trying to tell us something . . . to question, to criticize, to realize; whether they are parodying the very form in which they work, in the sublime "Pop Song '89" or carressing us warmly with the lilting melody of the 11th "Untitled" song.

REM, like the best film directors or novelists, are twisting, distorting and warping their chosen form so that their audience never quite knows what to expect. This is the sheer joy of REM — cracking open the new product and trying to get at its essence — trying to interpret them and trying to out-guess them. It is significant that the only time Stipe seems threatening or venomous on this record is when he sings "I could turn you inside out . . ." He could be addressing his lover but more likely he is addressing all of us. The turning inside out of our society then becomes the optimistic center to this collection of songs. REM seem to be looking forward. In its musical and lyrical celebrations of the US's ideal diversity and cultural pluralism, this Green collection has a rainbow-like glow of positivity.

Roomful finds many faces of Freedman

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

"Room Full of Heads," senior art major Keith Freedman's BFA thesis exhibition and first solo show, is on display now at Wheeler Gallery.

The show consists of a collection of recent portraits done in oil of the artist and friends. "I hope to capture something about the model in my own way," Freedman said. "It doesn't have to look like the person. That's not one of my concerns."

Instead, Freedman tries to portray feelings and emotions in his art. For that reason, he said, he likes to work in the studio where there are less distractions and he can concentrate on the model and his own moods.

Freedman, who prefers painting people rather than inanimate objects, said, "straight portrait painting is a traditional way to learn how to paint."

Concentrating on portraits is a chance for him to learn how to use the materials and gain more control over the medium of oils before moving on to more complicated compositions. For him, it is a time of "learning how to see into the content of the person; seeing into myself. A lot of myself is in these portraits," he said. "It is a lot about learning how to look carefully at things; seeing into color; seeing into form."

Most of Freedman's portraits have simple color backgrounds which help establish the moods of the paintings. The color creates what Freedman called the "colorworld" the model was living in at the time the painting was done.

"I'm concerned with creating a space within the picture frame," said Freedman. "There has to be a certain world in there you can either enter, or else be repelled from. I'm not interested in creating a flat surface."

Although he has done portraits over several sittings, Freedman said he likes doing them in just one sitting best. In longer sittings, "the mood changes. It's a lot more difficult," he said. "I go in with the intention of finishing as soon as I start. The decisions I make have to carry on to the end." His paintings are, he said, "more or less a recording of my moods and feelings at the moment put into the head of the sitter."

"Room Full of Heads," open now, will be at Wheeler Gallery through Dec.11. There will be a reception on Thursday, Dec.8 from 5 p.m. to 7pm. Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday from 4 to 8 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

The James Cotton Interview

By JOSEPH McGUIGAN
Collegian Staff

After a recent show at Pearl Street, blues harp master James Cotton clued the Collegian in to some of his past:

Collegian: So how about Sonny Boy (Williamson), you worked with? You left home at what age? Nine you were telling me? (nods) And what happened, your father threw you out because you were playing (harmonica)?

James Cotton: My uncle, my mother's brother. I came from a family of nine kids, and I'm the baby of the family.

Collegian: So you were nine then?

Cotton: And my uncle would come back from wherever at night. He used to shoot dice and chase women, drink whiskey, drink good corn whiskey and all. And we were sharecroppers on the farm. He used to drive a tractor trailer, used to get $3 a day, $36 a month, they'd get paid every two weeks, and they'd get paid down at this grocery store.

Collegian: And what was the name of that farm? I know Muddy (Waters) came from Stovall Plantation.

Cotton: It was Wisconsin's plantation, that's what it was. And he would get paid at this grocery store, all the people who worked on the farm came to get their money you know. I'd go down and play my harmonica and make more money than they got in two weeks. So when my uncle seen that he said I got to go.

Collegian: At what point did you meet Sonny Boy? You were nine and you met him where?

Cotton: Helena, Arkansas.

Collegian: How long after you left home did you meet him?

Cotton: I was with Sonny Boy two days after I left my uncle's house.

Collegian: Did you know him before or did you meet him travelling down the road?

Cotton: We had this radio show, and I used to listen to the show from 12 to 2:15. It was called King Biscuit Time. Sonny Boy, he had a band together and I went down to see him.

Collegian: How did you meet Muddy Waters?

Cotton: Muddy had been on tour down through Mississippi and Alabama, and Junior Wells was playing harmonica with him. Junior Wells quit out on the road and came back in trouble and looked us up. Muddy was looking for a harmonica player . . . Collegian: What were some of your favorite Muddy Waters songs?

Cotton: I already knew some of Muddy Waters' stuff even before I played with him. He was a true blues singer and all that stuff he did, way back, "I Feel Like Going Home," "Mean Red Spider" and all that stuff. Those were legendary blues . . . Junior Wells on guitar, Gene Fedspeck on drums. He had a piano player called Five bv Five, because he was five feet tall . . .

Collegian: And five feet wide (laughs). What about Francis Clay? (Muddy Waters' former drummer)

Cotton: He's not doing no playing anymore. His limbs is . . . Collegian: Arthritis . . . Cotton: You got it.

James Cotton

the PMRC (Parents Music Resource Center). Biafra pointed out that Gore, wife of Democratic senator, Albert Gore and a "self-proclaimed liberal-feminist" in fact had strong ties to ultra-right-wing religious fundamentalist groups, whose influence she consistently used to effect bannings on "unacceptable material."

In the event Biafra was lucky — after a lengthy trial his case was thrown out of court. But the media storm it prompted led to records by the DKs and other radical political bands being banned from stores not only in the US, but in Europe as well.

The future looks bleak, but Biafra believes that the tide can be turned. But first of all people will have to be educated to the grim reality of their society. He's no visionary, just a normal guy who is concerned about the way society is becoming more and more dehumanizing, and to this effect he reads and makes sure he knows what's going on. Unfortunately in a society plagued by apathy and ignorance he is the exception, not the rule.

His four hour-plus stint was an example to us all and the message was plain and simple: we've got to rise up and unite against our overlords.

Voted number 1 jazz guitarist by Downbeat, John Scofield plays two shows tomorrow night at the Iron Horse. Directions. For the following question, select the best answer choice provided

1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.

Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?

(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good.
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different.
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings.
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement.
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

Pats' defense stymies Seahawks

FOXBORO (AP) — John Stephens shoved and sprinted through Seattle's defense for 121 yards. No matter what the Seahawks tried, they struggled to get through New England's record-setting defense.

Robert Perryman's 1-yard touchdown dive brought the Patriots from behind in the third quarter for a 13-7 victory on a windy Sunday in which Seattle managed just two first downs and 65 yards.

The Patriots, 8-6, can make the playoffs if they win their remaining two games and Cleveland and Indianoplis, which both won Sunday, lose once more. Seattle, 7-7, began the day tied with Denver for the AFC West lead.

"We just didn't make any plays offensively," Seattle coach Chuck Knox said. "We like to both throw and run but we couldn't do either today. New England's defense played well. That had a lot to do with it."

The Patriots broke team records of 86 yards allowed against Baltimore in 1977 and five first downs given up to Chicago in 1979.

Seattle, which gained a season-high 459 yards last Monday night, had season lows in yardage and first downs and made just 1-of-13 third down conversions. It missed team marks of minus-7 yards, an NFL record, and one first down, both set against the Los Angeles Rams in 1979. The Seahawks gained yardage on just 20 of their 41 plays.

Meanwhile, Stephens added to his New England rookie rushing record by picking up 121 yards on 31 carries. With 1,028 yards for the season, he bacame the 21st NFL rookie to exceed 1,000.

On several plays Sunday, he carried Seattle defenders on his back.

"When you feel a lineman beside you, you keep driving," he said. "The leg drive is the key and it's a great feeling when you pop out" for extra yardage.

"One thousand yards is a great goal," he said, "but it wasn't my goal. I didn't think I'd carry the ball enough."

With wind gusts to 33 mph and the wind chill below zero, both teams stayed with their running games.

"The wind was a factor," Knox said, "but it was cold for both teams."

"The defense played very soundly," New England quarterback Doug Flutie said. "The wind was messing our passes so we didn't throw that much, but it was a nice sound ballgame."

Once the coffee break was over, though, UMass settled matters for good. Wilbor canned one from the right baseline, and Freeman cashed in on a pair of inside chances. Then Pytko hit three free throws, finishing another burst of nine straight that pushed the margin back up to 14, 65-51 with 3:12 left.

Hartford was forced to foul and shoot the long range missiles in the end, but there would be no second chance for the Hawks.

"We played very intelligently in the last six minutes," Hewelt said. "We used the clock well and built our lead. I was very pleased with that."

UMass balanced its attack, putting all five starters in double figures. Following Freeman and Pytko were Wilbor and Zullo, each with 11, and McCusker with 10. Wilbor pulled down 10 rebounds and McCusker eight, all defensive.

Annette Flynn paced Hartford with 14, while Betsy Andersen and Frisina each had 12. But Frisina had all 12 in the first half, and, shadowed primarily by Pytko, shot a comatose 0-for-10 in the second half.

"We showed flashes of brilliance today that we didn't show in the first two games," Hewelt said. "We've made some progress."

The Minutemen worked the ball down low to 6-foot-6 John Tate, who missed a lay-up in traffic. Rutgers immediatly gave the ball back on an errant pass. UMass returned the favor when David Brown travelled, and Rutgers had the ball with six seconds left.

A desperation 30-foot three-pointer by Rutgers' Myles Dixon with no time left in the half gave the Scarlet Knights a nine-point lead. It was a dagger in UMass' heart, as the Scarlet Knights left the floor to a standing ovation from 3,700 fans.

"I thought they played well and with a lot of spirit," David Brown said.

For the second time in three games, UMass was led in scoring by a freshman. McCoy's 19 was tops for the Minutemen, who placed four players in double digits.

Now the Minutemen must pick up the pieces and prepare for their next opponent, New Hampshire in Durham NH on Wednesday.

Hoop du jour: UMass was 5 of 15 from three-point land. . . The Minutemen went 10 for 13 from the line against the Scarlet Knights . . . UMass had only six layups while Rutgers coverted on 17 "gimmes" . . . In attendance for Saturday's game was New Jersey Nets forward and Rutgers' alum, Roy Hinson . . . other Atlantic 10 teams to lose this weekend were Temple (twice) and George Washington University.

Women's swimming squeezes by Springfield; 4-1 going into break

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swimming team finished off the first half of its season in winning style, as the Minutewomen upended rival Springfield College, 163-135, Saturday.

With the win, the Minutewomen extend their record to 4-1 as they head into a month-long break before their next meet, January 7 at Northeastern University.

But the win was not as easy as the team or coach Bob Newcomb had thought it would be.

"It was a lot closer than we would have liked. It's not indicative of what we could have done with a full lineup," Newcomb said. "They hit us in some places that I didn't think they would. They're a scrappy team."

UMass struggled through the early stages of the meet. After opening the affair with a convincing win in the 200-yard medley relay, behind the team of Lori Schwarz, Melissa Waller, Sue Gorski and Keira Cruz, Springfield took firsts in the next three events (1000-yard freestyle, 200 free and 100-yard backstroke) to put UMass in a 41-33 hole.

"It started to bother me," Newcomb admitted, "but we did some good things after that. Our best events were coming up."

Indeed, the strong breaststroke duo of Waller and Regina Jungbluth started the rally with a 1-2 in the 100, Waller winning in 1:12.74, and then Gorski and Lori Carroll pulled the 1-2 punch in the 200-yard butterfly to give UMass the lead for good. Cruz followed with a first in the 50 free (26.65), with Kim Morin taking third.

Next was the one-meter diving, and Newcomb had plenty of praise for his two divers. Debbie Mullen took second and Stephanie Tuttle fourth, with several dives "that she never did in competition before. She deserves a lot of credit for that," Newcomb said. "I thought they did a spectacular job this weekend."

Cruz followed that up with a win in the 100 free and Waller and Nancy Wilkinson took 1-2 in the 200 breast. The Minutewomen then swept the 500 free, with Young winning in 5:27.86.

Jodi Schwartz and Carroll took second and third in the 100 fly, Mullen captured a win in the three-meter diving, and Marcia Samsel took third in the 400 individual medley, the first time UMass had swam that event this year.

The meet ended with a 1-2 in the 800 freestyle relay, won by the team of Young, Melissa McCarthy, Patty Pike and Cruz.

"We swam okay. We didn't tear the house down but we did a good job," Newcomb said. "We had some solid swims."

■ men's swimming wins, now 2-1

Back in the water, UMass returned to its winning ways, taking firsts in the rest of the meet's events. In the 200-yard butterfly, the top spot went to Reich while Rutherford stole third. Rutherford, a Springfield native, swam well in his hometown and is beginning to show some of the motivation and commitment Yarworth wants.

In the 100-yard freestyle Robertson got his second top individual finish with a time of 49.12 seconds. Kennedy won the 200-yard backstroke in 2:0.32, Will Riddell took the 500-yard freestyle with a 5:00.50 time and Chouinard secured the 200-yard breaststroke in 2:21.16.

The UMass team of Mike Yunker, Evan Gwilliam, Frank Sampson and Robertson rounded out the meet with the best time of 3:20.66 in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

The team overall had a "good attitude," said Yarworth, "and they were aggressive." As a whole, the Minutemen swam very well and continue to show the improvement of constant training.

The Minutemen return to the water on Saturday when they host Southern Connecticut State University at Boyden Pool. This will be the last meet for the Minutemen before the intersession break.

Minutewomen trip Hartford for third straight

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. — In its first two games this season, the first half was a nightmare for the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team.

Saturday, the Minutewomen turned it on in the first 20 minutes, and then held on through an erratic second half to take a 73-61 decision from the University of Hartford at the Hartford Physical Education Center.

UMass has yet to put it all together for one 40-minute fell swoop, but so far, the Minutewomen have managed to get by with what they've done, upping their record to an unblemished 3-0.

"We have to have consistency in our game. We know we can do it," UMass coach Kathy Hewelt said. "We play well in spurts. The trick is to string the segments together."

In this game, their one big spurt lasted most of the first half and posted up a lead that Hartford just couldn't overcome.

The Lady Hawks opened the scoring, but UMass took the lead for good by scoring the next 10. Michele Pytko (18 points) tied it with a pull-up jumper, and Keyburn McCusker gave UMass a 4-2 lead on a nice up-fake. A nice inside move by Helen Freeman, a lay-up by Christel Zullo off a feed from Pytko, and a banker from Freeman made it 10-2 just 3:39 into the contest.

Hartford stayed in it, mainly behind the work of all-time leading scorer Pauline Frisina. She would score 10 of her team's next 12 points as Hartford closed to within three, at 17-14 with 11:09 left in the half.

Then, the Minutewomen threw a bombshell at the hosts, running off 13 straight that made it a 16-point game. The run featured a jumper by Trish Riley, a three-point play by Freeman off a Zullo feed, a runner across the lane by Pytko, a penetrating lay-up by Zullo and a feed inside by Beth Wilbor to McCusker for a gimme. Zullo's two free throws with 7:06 left capped the rally and gave UMass a solid 30-14 edge.

Hartford couldn't come any closer than 12 points for the rest of the half as UMass assumed a commanding 42-28 lead at halftime.

The first half was in stark contrast to prior performances. Against Boston University, the Minutewomen scored just 50 for the entire game. UMass shot 58 percent from the floor, and Freeman scored 13 of her game-high 19 in the half to pace the Minutewomen.

"We played good basketball in the first half. We were ready and we played intelligently," Hewelt said. "Our intensity was up and we came out firing."

UMass poured it on some more in the early goings of the second half. They outscored the Hawks in the first four minutes, 10-4, as Wilbor's jumper from the left corner made it 52-32 with 16:03 left. It appeared that a rout was a-brewin'.

But the Hawks would not be embarassed easily in their den. Down 56-40, Hartford became inspired by the scrappy play of 5-foot-2 sparkplug Lisa Smith and the inside work of reserve Kerri Crimmins. The Minutewomen began to lose the grip on the game, as Hartford flurried for 11 straight of their own to tense things up, 56-51 with 6:48 left.

"We came out in the second half and did well in our first couple of possessions," Hewelt said. "After that, we lost our intensity. It was important to keep our composure, but we lost it. I don't know where we were, but we weren't in this gym."

Minutemen have a rough (K)night out

Rutgers hands UMass second straight loss, 78-61

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — The last time the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team beat Rutgers University here, UMass head coach John Calipari was four years old.

After Saturday's 78-61 loss to the Scarlet Knights, UMass 13th straight loss at Rutgers, the 29-year-old Calipari and his Minutemen will have to wait at least another year before they can end the streak.

The Minutemen shot a dismal 37 percent from the floor while the Scarlet Knights, led by Tom Savage's 20 points, shot 50 percent — mostly in the middle of the UMass defense, to set the Minutemen back to 1-2 this season.

Rutgers took advantage of two big opportunities at the start of each half. For the first 3:20 of the first half, and the first 3:46 of the second half, UMass was scoreless. And both times, Rutgers advanced its lead by eight — a 16-point difference in just seven minutes.

"We started the game poorly. We ended the half poorly, and we started the second half poorly," Calipari said.

The knockout punch, however, didn't come until 8:17 of the second half. The Minutemen had managed to stay within striking distance despite the hot shooting of Rutgers and at that point, UMass trailed by only 10 at 57-47.

But an 8-0 run by Rutgers in the next 1:40 put UMass out of it for good.

"It's a 10-point game and then the kids cave in," Calipari said.

UMass captain David Brown agreed. "I think we did [cave in]. I guess the guys just said 'this thing's over.' Rutgers had the momentum and said 'let's finish them off,' " he said.

"For some unknown reason, we didn't get it done," he said.

The Minutemen never got closer than 15 in the final seven minutes. The loss makes UMass 0-1 in the conference, while Rutgers goes to 1-0.

UMass was playing catch-up throughout the game. It never led, but kept battling back from a deficit.

On its first three possessions of the game, UMass turned the ball over all three times and found itself in an early 8-0 hole.

Three-point goals: Giles 3, A. Brown, McCoy, Savage.

UMass' freshman guard tandem of Anton Brown and Jim McCoy (19 points) then began to generate some offense for the Minutemen. The two rookies connected on 14 of UMass' next 19 points.

The most painful blow to UMass came as time was winding down in the half.

The Minutemen trailed throughout the first half but had it within six points with less than a minute to go in the half. UMass had the ball and a chance for the last shot and a trip to the locker room trailing by only four points.

Men's swimming sinks Springfield

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team upped its record to 2-1 on the season with an 80-33 win at Springfield College on Saturday.

"I'm really pleased with the way we're swimming," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. He has every reason to be pleased. The Minutemen took first place in all but one swimming event, and took second in the other, as well as both the diving events.

UMass started the meet with a top finish in the 400-yard medley relay. The team of Dave Ehle, Bill Chouinard, G.T. Ladd and Peter Reich logged a time of 3:44.52 to win it.

In the next event, the 1000-yard freestyle, the Minutemen took the first two places, with Jim Robertson winning it in 10:05.89, followed by Roger Kennedy in second. UMass' Scott Milbert then took first in the 200-yard freestyle.

In the 50-yard freestyle, UMass went 1-2 as Peter Koback took first and Sean Rutherford second. The 200-yard individual medley was the only event in which UMass did not touch first, as Ladd was the top Minuteman finisher, grabbing second place.

Out of the pool, Dan Chesnicka continued his rivalry with Springfield diver Dave Roth. Roth won this round as Chesnicka could only manage second in both the one- and three-meter events, but traditionally Chesnicka avenges himself at the New England Championships.

In first snow, UMass hits Amherst with song

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Correspondent

Eight hundred to 1000 University of Massachusetts students marched to Amherst College early yesterday morning and carried out their peaceful mission of Christmas caroling.

At approximately 12:30 a.m., the group gathered in the main quadrangle of Amherst College and persuaded the students there to join them in singing popular Christmas carols.

The first reaction of Amherst College students to the crowd was one of fear. "I heard a roar outside, and just remembered what happened last year. I was really scared," said Nathaniel Klipper, an Amherst College freshman.

It has been a UMass tradition to go to Amherst College the first snowfall of the year and engage in an enormous snowball fight. The past two years' fights resulted in damages totaling almost $9,000, along with numerous injuries to Amherst College students, according to Peter R. Pouncey, president of Amherst College.

The crowd gathered in front of James and Stearns Residence Halls, where Amherst students began attacking them with fire extinguishers and water balloons.

The UMass students did not fight back, however.

Amherst College student Carey Smith said "They started singing. A small group of us were trying to sing with them. They they started chanting 'Join us," and a friend and I ran out. I loved it. They're welcome any time it snows."

The caroling began at approximately 10:30 in the area enclosed by the Sylvan Residence Halls, where UMass students Jason Freedman, Zack Galvin, and Jemison gathered and started to sing.

"It started with the three of us standing out in the first snow letting out energy by singing Christmas carols. People started to come out to have fun and sing in the snow," said Galvin.

One of the first to join was Carl Grygiel, a resident of Brown House, who emerged as the main leader of the group. The band of students grew rapidly, and then walked to Northeast, the nearest residential area.

"We just started going through Northeast and Orchard Hill, and by the time we reached Southwest, someone suggested we had enough people to make a statement at Amherst," said Grygiel.

Around this time, Chief Dion of the Amherst College security office said the UMass Department of Public Safety alerted Amherst College there was a "large number" of people headed through Amherst toward the college.

"My first question was 'is it snowing again?' I instructed officers to close buildings, and alerted the administrative offices of the college. I was very concerned because of what's happened in past years," Dion said.

Students at Amherst College were well aware of past snowball incidents with UMass, according to Smith. "We'd heard about it all semester. That night, some girl heard they were coming, and told me to get all the fruit and fire extinguishers I could," he said.

Willie Epps, a junior at Amherst College said, "I had a great time singing. It was a really nice gesture."

"I think we made a statement by going over there and letting them spray us with fire extinguishers and keep singing anyway. We showed a great amount of responsibility and respect by walking through Amherst to the rival of UMass, not damaging anything, and wishing them a Merry Christmas. Last night, we redeemed the student body," Grygiel said.

Administrators at Amherst College were also very happy about the incident.

Don Delmanzo, director of the physical plant at Amherst College, said, "I was very much pleased. It seemed that students from both schools were responding positively. I'd like to thank the students from UMass for paying us a visit on a positive note."

Chief Dion said "I was delighted. I'd like to see this as the new tradition for the introduction of the winter season. It proves

Prof recommends election changes

Rutger's Pomper says race was stacked for Republicans

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The American presidential election process is flawed and the 1988 campaign was probably stacked against the Democrats, according to a political specialist from Rutgers University.

Dr. Gerard M. Pomper, professor of political science at the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, spoke last night to an audience of 30 at 8 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

Pomper, who has been publishing presidential election analyses since the '70's and is widely accepted as an expert on American Politics, gave an overview of President-elect George Bush's victory and the method by which he was elected.

"George Bush asked for nothing more than to become a substitute for Ronald Reagan. He got his wish," Pomper said.

Both of the candidates in the 1988 presidential race, Pomper said, ran a disreputable and at best foolish campaign. A major factor in the Bush victory was that he inherited a large portion of the people who voted for Ronald Reagan in 1980 and 1984.

Pomper said he felt the election hinged on three key points. One, the election was conserving. Two, there were fundamental differences between the candidates. Three, there was a domination of a Republican majority.

"I see the 1988 election as conserving and not conservative, which is the more ideological perspective not seen this year, because the Bush victory can be accepted as a third victory for Ronald Reagan," Pomper said.

He said Bush received the lowest vote percentage of all the Republicans in the twentieth century, barring Richard Nixon in 1968, since William McKinley. This was not a sign of overwhelming popularity.

Bush rode into the election on a brace of Ronald Reagan's achievements with him, namely peace and prosperity, he said.

Pomper suggested changes should be made in the presidential and vice presidential nominating process to allow for a better selection of candidates and voter participation.

He said the primaries occurring in Iowa and New Hampshire before the party conventions, seemed to limit the choices American people get for candidates. He suggested primary races be held after the convention, and make the convention a forum to introduce a handful of candidates selected by their political peers.

Large rent reduction granted to students

By DEBORAH RITTER
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Rent Review Board voted last night to grant its largest rent reduction to date, $251, to a student household.

The students, Colleen Forbes, Paula Ezedik, and Josh Rosner of 80 Belchertown Road, petitioned the board on October 6. At the time, they were paying $1095 per month. The adjusted figure is $843.14.

Forbes said they signed the lease in August depite the high rent "because we needed a place badly. Also, only one of us saw the place in advance because we had all taken too much time off of work already and had to get the thing settled."

The tenants sought a rent decrease because of the condition of the house, Forbes said. At the request of the Review Board, building and sanitation inspectors were sent to the house. 34 violations were found, ranging from holes in the ceilings and walls to a rotting rear porch.

The landlord, Keith Kaneta, has already begun correcting what Board members described as a 'laundry list' of complaints. During the hearings, the Board spent considerable time debating whether to allow code violations to be submitted as evidence. Board members finally decided that, while it was not proper to base a decision about rent on matters of building codes, the number of violations in this case must be taken into consideration.

A standard formula is used by the Board to calculate a fair rent. Board member Oldham Brooks said anyone with questions about the amount of rent he or she pays can petition the Board for a review.

Perez re-elected in Venezuela, promises recovery of economy

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) - Carlos Andres Perez, who led a wealthy Venezuela during ther oil boom of the 1970's, was re-elected president after 10 years out of office on a promise to return his now debt-ridden country to prosperity.

Perez, of the governing Democratic Action Party, had campaigned with almost messianic fervor on his ability to revive the economy of this oil-producing nation despite a volatile market.

The latest returns from Sunday's balloting showed Perez with 51.4 percent of the vote and Eduardo Fernandez of the Social Christian Party with 38.6 percent. The rest of the vote was shared by 20 minor party candidates.

Perez, a charismatic figure popular with the working class, favors tighter state control over the economy. Fernandez favors a freer market.

The results did not represent all the votes cast, but the Electoral Council declared Perez the winner after early returns.

Perez, 66, succeeds Jaime Lusinchi, also of the left-of-center Democratic Action Party, as Venezuela's leader for the next five years.

Perez first took office in 1974, the year after the Arab oil embargo sent oil prices soaring, and nationalized the country's oil industry.

Imports were cheap, Venezuelans spent millions of dollars travelling abroad and employment figures increased as the government invested in steel, aluminum and hydroelectric projects.

Perez admitted that this time around, he faces hard times and possibly disappointing a population that believes in his power to reap prosperity.

Venezuela depends on oil for 90 percent of its export earnings and has seen those earnings slump dramatically in the least few years with the fall of oil prices.

Officials ready for summit meeting this Wednesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The memories of the Soviet surprise at Reykjavik, Iceland, two years ago, are still fresh in the minds of US officials as they prepare for tomorrow's meeting between President Reagan, George Bush and Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

US officials, by playing down expectations for the meeting and claiming it is "not a summit in the traditional sense," echo similar assertions made two years ago prior to the so-called "mini-summit" held in Reykjavik.

"Everyone agrees that the most important reason for this meeting is to review where the relationship between the two countries is, to reflect on the historical strides that we have made in our relationship," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said after the New York meeting was announced.

But Lt. Gen. Colin Powell, Reagan's national security adviser, said Friday that the US side will be ready if Gorbachev springs anything.

"I think we would be prepared to deal with any surprise that they might come up with, take it under advisement, without feeling that we're under any pressure during a ... 2½ hour lunch period, to necessarily respond in a substantive way to something that has not been anticipated," he said.

The Icelandic summit was touted as a brief session, with the goal of making advances in the arms control arena that would pave the way for a full-fledged summit later in the year on US soil.

True, no roses were bloodied, but Reagan and Gorbachev parted company at the windswept Hofdi House amid bitter looks and even harsher language, having wrestled with the earthshaking question of ridding the world of the superpower nuclear arsenals.

Gorbachev caught the US side off guard by proposing a global ban on intercontinental ballistic missiles, and the so-called non-summit disintegrated when Reagan refused to budge over proposed curbs on his Star Wars missile defense system.

In Reykjavik's wake, charges flew that Reagan and his US team had been woefully unprepared to deal with the stunning arms control proposals hurled about by Gorbachev. The White House scurried off to recoup, with then-chief of staff Donald T. Regan rejecting the idea that the parley had been a disappointment, claiming instead that it gave the two leaders a deeper understanding of one another and narrowed differences over offensive arms.

Yet it took months for the superpower relationship to get back on a more productive track, leading to the extensive summits in Washington and Moscow and the first-ever treaty banning an entire class of nuclear weapons.

Even though the New York session has been as hastily arranged as Reykjavik, and even though it is also being held with the intent of making sure the US-Soviet relationship remains stable, few independent Soviet and arms control analysts expect a replay of the surprises that sprouted in Iceland.

"It will not be Reykjavik," predicted Lt. Gen. William Odom, who has recently retired as the head of the National Security Agency. "I expect it to be a fairly low-key, transitional summit, with both parties seeking to maintain the present level of relations."

Odom, now a director of national security issues for the Indianapolis-based Hudson Institute, said neither side wants a "jolt in relations" as a new administration takes over and as Gorbachev struggles with economic and political turmoil at home.

"An even-keel relationship will be very useful for Mr. Bush, and even more useful for Gorbachev," Odom said.

Southwest safety efforts by police commended

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The department of Public Safety at the University of Massachusetts is proudly touting the letters of commendation it has received concerning the Southwest leg of its police/student relations efforts.

The letters, from RA's and RD's in Kennedy and Moore Residence Halls, express their gratitude for the safety programs conducted by the three police officers working in the newly named Outreach Center, referred to formerly as the police substation located in Washington Residence Hall.

The reason for the department's pride, safety officials say, is that they feel the letters show progress for the mission they undertook by installing the Outreach Center in early October.

Each of the letters states the appreciation the RA's feel for the open and candid manner in which each of the three officers, Joanne O'Conner, Chip Thrasher, and Jerome Yezierski informed residents and dormitory staff on issues of public safety.

The officers work on a rotating schedule out of the center to provide a constant presence for students to contact if they need someone to talk to about a crime and to ease the tension students may have about dealing with police.

[Yezierski was recently involved in a serious non-work related injury and is not presently on the active duty roster of the UMPD]

One letter from a Resident Director from Kennedy, Julie McCrea, said Officer Thrasher took time to describe what he called the "friendly neighborhood cop" concept, which embodies the entire outreach program.

Arthur Hilson, executive director of Public Safety at UMass, said he changed the name to Outreach Center, which is temporary until a new one can be found, to dispel some of the bad connotations the center has already received.

"I respect where the students are coming from and the confusion they may still have as to the purpose of the center. If students can't foresee or understand the center's purpose then it isn't doing any good," Hilson said.

Hilson has also hired UMass student Jason Erdols as an assistant to help him access the programs they are running from the center for effectiveness.

A Sept. 22 petition to stop the installation of the center into Washington Residence Hall was begun by 23-year-old student Jeff Filipov contained 200 signatures.

Hilson believes those 200 signers did not understand what the center is all about.

"I would like to meet with all 200 of those petitioners and talk the center over with them, but I am not sure how to arrange that meeting. There will be no official opening until the students understand what the center is," Hilson said.

Budgets Committee releases FY '90 report; money for proposed research center included

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate's Budgets Committee released last Wednesday its budget proposal for the $2 million Student Activites Trust Fund for fiscal year 1990.

One of the items on the budget that may become controversial is the allocation of more than $26,000 for the formation of a organization similar to the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

SCERA will not receive any money from the SATF.

SCERA became controversial during last year's budget process, when some members of the senate opposed the allocation of more than $35,000 for the center.

The new organization, called the Undergraduate Research Center was devised by the Budgets Committee. The main difference between the URC and SCERA is that the new group would be a research organization and not an advocacy organization.

Budgets Committee Chairperson Jessica Mitchell said she does not expect problems with the URC charter, which is included in the 36-page budget report.

"The biggest problem we had with SCERA was that there was really no check system set up for it," Mitchell said. "The way we have it set up, there will be a governing board which will direct what [URC] will be researching."

Mitchell said SCERA was run by the director, who was not checked by the senate, and could do whatever they wanted with SCERA funding.

"With the old SCERA there were just so many clouds hanging over it ... We need research, not advocacy. The senate itself is an advocacy body," she said.

SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins said, however, there may be some problems with the senate approving the URC charter because of the history of SCERA.

"I think we're going to have some problems with that, I think the senate won't go for it," Filkins said.

"The problems with URC is that it's a new creation of the senate. I would rather see the money go into some sort of reserve account, she said."

Filkins, controls transfers of funds in some SGA accounts, and has much direct contact with the budget. She said she was very happy with the budget.

"I thought it was pretty fair," Filkins said of fund allocations for Registered Student Organizations.

Mitchell said the committee had based its allocations for RSO's on programming by the individual groups, which range from Peacemakers, which has been budgeted for $171, to the Legal Services Center, which is scheduled to receive $169,292.

"Basically it looks like the groups that did the programming got the funding. We tried to program with diversity and spread the money around so the students got the most for their money," Mitchell said.

She said programming consists of speakers and other events offered by RSO's to the entire student body.

The committee spent over 1200 hours formulating the budget, which goes before the senate for approval Wednesday night.

Injury at Theta Chi to be investigated

A preliminary hearing has been scheduled to look into what happened during a party at the Theta Chi fraternity Thursday night, a University of Massachusetts spokesperson said yesterday.

Michael Calvo, 20, a member of the fraternity fell from the fourth floor of the fraternity house and taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital at 4 a.m.

According to police, Calvo was attempting to enter his fourth floor room from the outside because he was locked out. He fell and was left with wrist and leg fractures.

Calvo was reported to be in satisfactory condition yesterday.

The hearing was scheduled to determine whether the accident was alcohol related, according to a spokesperson.

Theta Chi has been on probation for illegal sale of alcohol since the spring of 1987. The probation was scheduled to be lifted next semester.

Members of the fraternity have declined to comment.

Several groups to light Hanukkah candles

The University of Massachusetts Hillel chapter will be lighting its six-foot menorah at 6 each evening on the Student Union steps until Hanukkah ends Saturday.

This year will be unique because a different committee will be in charge of the candle lighting each night, so each night will have a different theme, said Alisa Berkowitz, president-elect of Hillel.

After the candle lighting on the final night, Julius Lester, a UMass Judaic studies professor, and his wife Caroline will lead services at 7 in room 804 of the Campus Center.

The schedule for the candle lighting is as follows:

Today—Soviet Jewry Committee
Tomorrow—United Jewish Appeal
Thursday—Five-College Hillel Group
Friday—Religious Committee
Saturday—Hillel Council and Third World Caucus

Collegian editors on WMUA tonight

How the Collegian covers news will be the topic of tonight's SGA Today radio show with guests Pedro Pereira, presently editor in chief of the Collegian, and Rick Santos, who has been elected editor in chief for Spring '89.

Hosts Val Vigoda, Todd Lever, and Ray Jennings will question Pereira and Santos on what goes into news reporting.

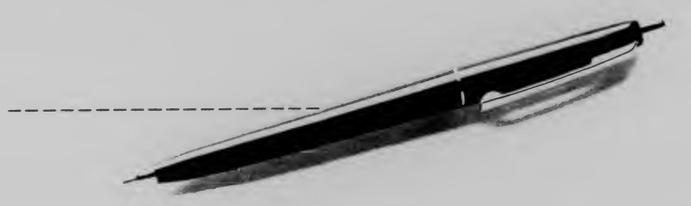
"We want to give people the oppurtunity to see what goes on behind the reporting of student government and other issues around campus," said Vigoda.

"We're hoping that because Rick and Pedro have both been Student Government Association reporters they'll be able to offer a broad perspective," she said.

Vigoda said they will take callers with questions for Pereira and Santos so they can understand what's involved in reporting.

SGA Today airs from 8:30 - 9:30 p.m. on WMUA-FM, 91.1

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.



Just their signature.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Grads to protest

Graduate students at the University of Massachusetts are scheduled to picket Whitmore Administration Building today at noontime protesting this year's proposed budget cuts.

Members of the Graduate Employees Organization (GEO) will show their concern for the quality of future education here at UMass, which they feel is in jeopardy in light of looming budget cuts of a sum between $5.5 million and $7.7 million from the current fiscal year.

Graduate students teach many of the introductory courses and conduct much of the research at the Univerity.

Shuttle rescue methods practiced before return

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Airmen posing as incapacitated astronauts were rescued from a mock smoke-filled shuttle during a simulated landing for ground crews awaiting Atlantis' return from space

"Our purpose is to make sure we're ready for the real thing, whenever it is," said Chuck Spern, who directed Sunday's exercise as shuttle recovery convoy commander for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

NASA and the Air Force said they would give 24 hours advance notice before Atlantis and its five-member crew end a secret military mission by touching down at the Mojave Desert base 80 miles north of Los Angeles.

The absence of such a announcement by late Sunday indicated the landing would occur no earlier than Tuesday, four days after the launch form Cape Canveral, Fla. A list of landing-related tasks displayed during a briefing for Sunday's simulation said the actual landing would be four to seven days after the launch.

Sunday's mock landing was conducted as Atlantis' astronauts continued the classified flight with no word on whether they sucessfully deployed what is believed to be a $500 million radar satellite that will spy on Soviet bloc nations and guide the new B-2 stealth bomber.

The extra security for the shuttle mission was apparent during the simulation. The Air Force refused to let reporters and photographers accompany to recovery convoy. During a briefing before the exercise, convoy members were warned not to carry personal cameras and keep radio chatter to a minimum.

About 130 members of the convoy slowly drove some two dozen vehicles onto the hard clay of Rogers Dry Lake as the landing exercise began. They were joined by 50 military police officers, although 250 will be on hand for the real landing said Col. Rich Tillstrom, the Air Force's site commander.

A mysterious Defense Department vehicle accompanied the usual convoy vehicles: fire trucks, vans to transport astronauts and check for toxic and explosive gases, a trailer with a vapor-dispersing fan, the shuttle tow tug, and trucks to cool the shuttle and purge it of fumes.

Spern said only that the vehicle was unique to Atlantis' classified mission. Lt Col. Jeremy Guess, an Air Force spokesman, declined to identify the type of vehicle or its purpose.

About an hour after the convoy headed onto the lakebed, simulation participants were told the shuttle made a normal landing. A full-scale shuttle nose cone and crew module, hauled atop a truck, carried airmen portraying astronauts.

Then officials controlling the simulation declared a "mode six" emergency in the cabin and the crew is incapacitated - they can't see and are having trouble breathing," Spern said.

Air Force teams then rushed to the smoke shuttle, extracted the fake astronauts, carried them on stretchers to a triangle area 500 feet from the nose cone, pretended to provide emergency medical care and then loaded them on two helicopters.

later as an embarrassment to the University, raising questions of civil rights violations among administrators and law enforcement officials.

The fire probes, conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, culminated five years ago yesterday with the arrest of Yvette Henry, a black resident assistant living in Crampton Residence Hall.

Five years ago today, Henry pleaded innocent in Hampshire District Court to charges of setting one of the 20 fires. The administration later dropped its charges because of insufficient evidence, but not before Henry was suspended from school, fired from her job, barred from campus and later permitted to attend classes only in the presence of an escort.

Henry sued the University for $13 million citing civil rights violations, and won an undisclosed settlement out of court.

"I'm not sure if there were any real lessons learned from the Yvette Henry case," said Chester Davis, chairman of the Faculty Senate Rules committee at the time of the investigation.

"Clearly, in events regarding race, the administration has displayed more civility and sensitivity to the issues," Davis said yesterday, adding, "I'm not sure if it was the Yvette Henry case as much as it was the Hurst report [on the Sept. 1986 Southwest riot] that has led to this."

Fires were reported between Sept. 27, and Dec. 6, 1983 in Cance, Coolidge, Crampton, MacKimmie, Brown, Patterson, Grayson and Mary Lyon Residence Halls, and the Campus Center/Student Union complex.

Gerald O'Neil, director of Public Safety in 1983, would not comment yesterday on the events of the case. O'Neil resigned in 1987.

Present Director of Public Safety Arthur Hilson, who replaced O'Neil, said he would not comment on the "procedures of protocol revolving around the Yvette Henry case." He said he felt "the people in charge of the original investigation did what they felt was right."

Hilson said because he was not involved in the original case, it would be wrong for him to pass judgment. He said, however, if a similar investigation were to take place today, he would be against the involvement of the FBI.

"I am firmly set against relinquishing control of an investigation to an external agency [such as the FBI]. For an incident that takes place on campus affecting a member of our community, then it is the responsibility of Public Safety to be in charge of that."

After months of veiled investigations, the Collegian published, on Feb. 28, 1985, a special report on the Henry case by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Minorities.

In the report, the committee concluded:

- That the pre-arrest room search and the lengthy pre-arrest interrogation raise questions of civil rights violations.
- That Henry's minority status may have played a part in the conduct of the investigation and of the arrest.
- That the Dean of Student's Office did not act properly with respect to Henry.
- That Henry's minority status may have played a part in the way that the Dean of Students Office behaved in this case.
- That there may be some impact on the recruitment of minority students in the future, but we do not at this time have a firm basis for making such a judgment.
- That there may have been panic among University administrators, and that University administrators claimed to be helpless, because the investigation was not in their hands.

"There was an element of panic, a lack of judgment surrounding the investigation. The thing was a mess," Davis said.

"There was a definite violation of Yvette's civil rights, and I raised that a number of times."

"The Yvette Henry case was, at the administrative level, completely mishandled. The administration did not take it seriously, and placed too much faith in a profile that was put together by the FBI," he added.

The "psychological profile," was put together by the FBI after notes written in crayon were found in Crampton warning of fires. The profile indicated the culprit was a Third World person.

"The extent of which the more recent situations were a possible reflection or continuation of the Yvette Henry case is hard to say. Racism exists at the UMass campus as it does on similar campuses," Davis said.

Students must fight budget cuts

"The situation is serious."

With those words, Chancellor Joseph Duffey summarized the possible effects of recent budget cuts at the University of Massachusetts.

Those cuts, some $5 million to $8 million from the current fiscal budget, will affect all UMass students in class reductions and possible tuition and fee increases. Closing class sections and tuition hikes have been the hallmarks of the three budget cuts that have taken place over the last two years.

In a Springfield town meeting Saturday, Gov. Michael Dukakis addressed the effect of the budget cuts on UMass, saying, "We're going to continue to work at it with you . . . It's got to be something that's done cooperatively. It's not going to be easy, and we're going to have to work hard and share ideas. I had a meeting this morning and I heard a few things from [Chancellor] Joe Duffey that I hadn't thought of."

The meeting marked the beginning of a dialogue that must continue if we are to flourish as the state's flagship of higher education. The Governor must know why we as students will not stand for repeated cuts because of poor fiscal planning. He must know that we will not accept a back seat to the Charles River elites. It is imperative that he realize that students at state universities are just as strong an investment in the Commonwealth's future than students from private schools.

Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice said she thought the cuts would come in spite of the dialogue with the Governor.

"I feel that just because we made a good impression the battle's still not won. I'm still expecting a cut," she said.

Orefice said she and student leader Michael Greiner will be organizing a letter-writing drive to Dukakis, to impress on him how these cuts will hurt students.

We wholeheartedly support a letter-writing campaign, but believe it will only be successful if followed by trips to the Statehouse and continued student appearances at town meetings.

There are 26,000 students on this campus. If 10 percent of us do something to get the Governor's attention, we may be able to dampen the effects of this latest budget cut, and in turn salvage some of the benefits of attending a state university.

My shower hated me first, but then it got to be a thing of counterhostility. If I'm taking a shower and someone in America uses their water, that's it for me! A pen, a pen, my kingdom for a pen

End of semester notes

Every semester, I have more ideas for columns than I can use. Since it's the end of the semester, I thought I'd share a few of this semester's unused ideas.

* * *

Last year I wrote a column about condom companies and how they had just begun to advertise on television. At the time no such commercials had aired locally.

But just before Thanksgiving, I finally saw such a commercial.

It was boring.

It got me to thinking. . .

David R. Mark

What if condom companies used the same advertisers as say, car companies? What if they shared slogans?

How about. . .

Oh, what a feeling, to own a box of condoms!!!

We build excitement: Tro-o-jans!!!

Ramses are built RAM tough!!!

And my favorite. . .

With Trojans, we give a five-year, 50,000 $?!&! guarantee, or your money back!!!

* * *

I was so dumb sometimes when I young.

Until I was seven, I thought all cats were female, all dogs were male, and that cats and dogs got together and had birds.

One of my "friends" set me straight. He told me cats and dogs had fish.

True story.

Over Thanksgiving, I came up with a solution for the problem of the homeless:

In my hometown of Marlboro, N.J., there is a condominium complex where three quarters of the units are unoccupied.

They start at something like $150,000. If you think it's preposterous to expect someone to pay that much to house the homeless, think again.

The federal government issued a report that suggested that the cost to the city of New York for housing for the homeless was as high as $150,000 a year. For that money, a family can live in a one-bedroom apartment, with no running water, roaches, and overlooking beautiful 42nd Street, home of the largest prostitute districts in the world.

I'd take the condo.

My dad is a wonderful man, but like most wonderful men he has a few minor flaws.

One of those itsy-bitsy, teeny-weeny little faults is evident whenever my family stays in a hotel.

It's 2:30 a.m. The family, all four of us, are trying to fall asleep. I lay awake. My dad, not wanting to wake the family, goes to the bathroom without turning on the light.

It is a grave mistake.

It goes something like this:

Step, step, step, bump, oof (bumped knee), step, step, ouch (stubbed toe), ooh, step, ooh, step, ooh, step (bathroom door is opened, large level of pain expressed, family awoken, toilet flushed, door reopened), ooh, step, ooh, step, (dad back in bed, snores from dad).

My dad is sound asleep; the rest of us are awake.

Aren't family traditions fun?

* * *

Finally, a sincere thank you from the entire editorial page to some people in Southwest. Walking through MacKimmie and John Adams during the semester, I noted a number of Collegian columns placed on doors and inside rooms.

It makes you feel as though you've accomplished something.

Thanks.

The fundamentals of life

Kennedy: The truth behind the man, the myth, and the legend

Being famous and dead has a funny way of making you either a villain or a saint. As a saint, John F. Kennedy has been the target of numerous comparisons in 1988: Joseph Biden, Gary Hart, Dan Quayle, and even the late Harvey Milk, to mention a few. The comparisons are ridiculous, but even if they weren't, they overlook the magnitude of Kennedy's faults.

To be fair, JFK was a brilliant, charismatic leader, a celebrated author and a genuine war hero. He read newspapers in several languages at breakfast. He challenged racism more than any prior president. He founded the Peace Corps. He obtained a nuclear test ban treaty with the Soviets and other nations. By any standards, his accomplishments were impressive.

Then there was his darker side. His father made the family fortune by insider trading. It wasn't illegal then, but the practice was outlawed to keep wolves like Joseph P. Kennedy from fleecing the average American investor.

You can't blame John F. for things his father did, but you can look at who taught him his values. Evidently one value he learned from his father's ambitions was nepotism. After his election, JFK appointed his brother Robert as the U.S. attorney general. Robert had practiced law less than 10 years at the time.

Also like Joseph P., the Kennedy sons were sexual adventurers. JFK cheated on his wife with several women, including actress Marilyn Monroe if you believe reports, and while in the White House he shared a mistress with a Mafia kingpin. Other charismatic figures of the time were womanizers — Martin Luther King comes to mind — but they weren't the president. Some reporters knew about Kennedy's affairs, but ignored them; Watergate hadn't yet made investigative journalism a form of heroism.

Rusty Denton

Speaking of Watergate, the American public was outraged to learn during Watergate hearings that President Nixon had secretly taped most conversations in the Oval Office. For private citizens that's illegal, and the public thought Nixon had abused his executive privilege. Little did they know that JFK was the one who initiated the practice.

Kennedy also championed what is now called Reaganomics. He cut taxes, increased government spending and borrowed money to finance it, all in the name of stimulating the economy. If you don't like Reaganomics, you wouldn't like Kennedynomics.

Sounds almost like a Republican, doesn't he? There's more. Continuing a secret arrangement from the previous administration, Kennedy agreed to send U.S. firepower to aid a rebel uprising in communist Cuba. He lost his nerve, however, and without telling the dissident army he reneged at the last minute; they were slaughtered on the beaches of Cuba's Bay of Pigs.

He had other blood on his hands. He ordered the assassination of the leader of a friendly power: president Ngo Dinh Diem of VietNam. Days after Diem was killed, Kennedy got a taste of his own medicine, and was himself assassinated.

Obviously, Kennedy's saintliness had its limits. Any president today would be in constant scandal if he operated as JFK did; even impeachment would be conceivable. Moreover, if he hadn't been shot, Kennedy's political legacy probably would have been minor. He barely defeated an unpopular vice president at the voting booth, and Congress refused to pass most of his programs while he was alive. His successor got them through in a wave of public sympathy after the assassination.

With a record as mixed as his, only a forgetful public could make JFK a saint. It's something to think about.

Getting Out, a new play by Marsha Norman, will run at Rand Theater of the Fine Arts Center on Dec.8-10 and 14-17 at 8 p.m. The play is being presented by the UMass Department of Theater.

The play is about a woman's first day out of prison after serving time for eight years. It focuses on her attempts to come to grips with her past and to start again. According to director Margaret Mead, Getting Out also deals with the relatively few options that working class women in America have with their lives.

Scenic designer Celine Perron, lighting designer Darla J. Breswell and sound designer Spencer Brown are all students in the Theater Department's MFA design program. In addition, undergraduate Tracy E. D'Altilia is designing the costumes for the production. Tickets are $4 for the general public, $3 for senior citizens and students.

Cray's 'Acting' the right way but the Club isn't

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Staff

Escape Club "Shake for the Sheik"

The British band that brought us the political single "Wild Wild West" have returned to critize the US once more. With only the second release from the band's debut album they are already sounding stale. "Shake the Sheik" is a slightly revamped version of the band's first single, only worse. Once again the same drums, guitar and horns reappear as does the annoying voice of lead singer/guitarist Trevor Steel. The lyrics consist of the usual "political" rubbish making this single one to avoid.

2-Live-Crew "Do Wah Diddy Diddy"

Manfred Mann's number one hit from 1964 provides the vehicle for rap group 2-Live-Crew in this unusual remake. Retaining only the chorus from the original, 2-Live-Crew give a hilarious rap over a terrific beat. "Do Wah" sounds as if it was written to be rapped in the skilled hands of the group. The Fat Boys should take a lesson from these rappers; this is how to remake a song.

INXS "Guns In the Sky"

This former B-side of the hit "New Sensation" is the fifth release from the Aussie band's multi-platinum album Kick. A bit harder than other releases off the album, "Guns in the Sky" isn't as appealing as the other tunes. The metal-style guitar of Gary Beers is probably the best part of the song. They lyrics sound underdeveloped and crude. Michael Hutchence's voice is monotonous and dull as is the rest of the band. Our only hope is that "Guns in the Sky" will get shot down.

Philip Bailey and Little Richard "Twins"

If you think Danny Devito and Arnold Schwarzenegger are mismatched in the new film Twins, wait until you hear the title track. Both Philip Bailey and Little Richard are major talents, but they simply don't work well together. Bailey is trying to change his smooth falsetto to sound like Little Richard and Little Richard is trying to tame his usually wild vocals to fit with Bailey. The song is no more than a long jingle for the movie, turning out a disappointing product from what should have been a perfect pairing.

Wingers "Seventeen"

Mothers, if you have a pubescent in the house, lock them up. There is yet another teeny-bopper heavy metal band trying to steal them away. "Seventeen," which should be more aptly titled "Fourteen" for the average age of a Winger fan, is a cheap imitation of Bon Jovi style pop-metal. The song follows the traditional pattern, putting women down as much as possible and making the entire female population sound as if they're at the sexual disposal of their male counterparts. Isn't it time someone set these bands straight?

Robert Cray "Acting This Way"

Rhythm and blues guitarist extraordinaire Robert Cray turns in another striking performance with this latest release. Although his accomplishments have been virtually ignored on the charts, Cray's jazz has earned him a loyal following. "Acting This Way" has all the characteristics of a Cray single: steaming guitar, killer bass and Cray's trademark blues-influenced vocals. "Acting This Way" is worth going out of your way to hear.

Lloyd Cole and the Commotions "My Bag"

This Scottish band has seen great success in the UK but has been lacking hits here in the US. This first single from Lloyd Cole and the Commotions' new album Mainstream could change that. "My Bag" is a catchy influx of folk and country that has a quality that is lacking in most new singles. The song sounds reminiscent of an early Smiths' record without all the gloom and misery. Cole's smooth voice adds to the depth provided by the melodious acoustic guitar and slight drums, making "My Bag" anything but mainstream.

Ma Rainey deserved better treatment

By AL BOZYAN
Collegian Correspondent

Watching the Amaryllis production of August Wilson's play Ma Rainey's Black Bottom was a little like having a good book read aloud by a narrator who mumbles. The brilliance and depth of Wilson's work wasn't completely lost by the production company, just muddled a little.

The play is centered around an afternoon where Ma Rainey, a loudly tempermental blues singer, is recording a set of records for Sturdyvant, a white man who owns a small, poorly functioning recording studio. Ma Rainey is late, causing Sturdyvant and Ma Rainey's manager, Irwin, to launch into frantic agruments.

The backup musicians, Cutler, Toledo, SlowDrag and Levee lounge around a side room, waiting for Ma to show up, casually discussing everything from the black man's role in society to the reefer Cutler is reluctant to share with his fellow musicians.

When "Ma Rainey opened nearly eight years ago in New Haven's Yale Repetory Theatre, then-director Lloyd Richards took great pains to find four people to play the parts who were musicians as well as actors. The live music they played was authentically stylized, and, as they really were four black musicians, they slipped easily into their roles, their lines rolling off their toungues as effortlessly as their notes.

In Friday night's production in the Fine Arts Center, the quartet weren't comfortable with their instruments or their characters. Instead of the older men in casual dress Richards had opted for in the original Yale production, the Amaryllis actors were young men wearing creased white shirts and ties, strutting about the stage, waving their arms in energetic gestures. Levee's character, a rebellious young trumpet player, was played with a almost frenzied passion which worked well when

5's Rock'n'Roll back to basics

By SASCHA GOTTSCHALK
Collegian Correspondent

Street Rock'n'Roll
Section 5:
Link Records

Section 5, out of Trent England, could well be the next big thing in the ever-stagnating UK independent scene. For that matter, their accessible style could make them a force to contend with in the US if the right people take notice.

Section 5's basic sound is a blend of hard rock and punk. While that doesn't sound like the most original style running, they play with such verve that it can easily be overlooked. This crisply produced album is loaded with snarling dual guitars, catchy sing-alongs and truly powerful drumming.

Formerly a three piece, Section 5 released a previous album on Link Records, 1987's For The Love Of Oi! ("Oi" is the working class soccer-chant-style of punk that emerged out of London's East End in the early 80's). On that album, it seemed like the band was (from the title alone) bent on painting themselves into a corner. The addition of a second guitarist earlier this year seems to have given them a fresh direction. No AC/DC fan would be uncomfortable with this album. Nor would anyone with the slightest amount of affection for good, gritty rock'n'roll.

Street Rock'n'Roll leads off with "Madman," a song about the horrifying Hungerford massacre that took place in Britain a few years ago. The song sets the pace for the rest of the album (with the exception of the almost reggae-ish "Stand Up"): gruff but completely coherent vocals, a solid bass and drum foundation and a short, tasteful guitar solo by lead guitarist Tezz (co-producer along with lead vocalist/rhythm guitarist Tosh).

The clincher is the irresistible sing-along chorus. Other stand out cuts are "Loser," a cheeky "look at me now" type of song, "Last Train Out Of Cardiff," "Work It Out," "Back In The US of A" and the harmonica filled title track. In fact, the title of this record pretty much says it all. Nothing stunningly original or innovative; just good, mid-tempo rock that should raise a few eyebrows.

■ Ma Rainey

he was expressing his frustration with a dominant white culture, but was painful to watch when he was trying to relate his dreams and aspirations to his fellow musicians.

Although Ma Rainey's Black Bottom is a play, not a musical, the instrumental sections of the play verged on the unacceptable.

With the exception of Robert Galbreath, whose character Toledo did a fine job of piano playing, the musicianship was weak and disjointed; the notes from the lead horn player, Cuter, sounded like they were emanating from a wounded elephant, not a trombone.

The production wasn't a complete writeoff, however. When Ma Rainey's nephew, Sylvester, tries to record an introduction to one of the blues numbers and keeps stuttering through his lines, one can't help but laugh. And Darell Andre Richardson, playing Levee, surprised the audience with a genuinely inspired monologue on his belief that God had to be white to allow the injustices that affect the black man.

The brilliance of Wilson's script shows through the murkiness of the production. Ma Rainey demands bottles of sodas to be bought at the store before she will begin recording; when one of the musicians asks her why she is so finicky, she explains that her voice is like a whore to the white studio owners, and this is her only moment of real control. "When I'm done singing," she says, "They're just going to roll over and zip up their pants." The exploitation of the black musician and the frustration behind the smiles is painfully clear, and despite the shaky production, one walked away from Friday's performance with a sense of seeing a side of the old record industry previously hidden from us.

Gangs from Los Angeles causing trouble in Denver after migration

DENVER, (AP) — The migration of two California-based street gangs to Denver has caused crack sales to soar and led to five slayings this year, say authorities who fear the problems will grow.

"Don't wait another day. These kids are recruiting, getting stronger and more organized," warned Los Angeles gang counselor Kenneth Wheeler.

He told a meeting of Denver residents that just two days here reminded him of several years ago when Los Angeles' gang woes were in their nascent stages.

Bernard C. Parks, Los Angeles' deputy police chief, said his department has the names of 26,000 gang members on file, more than double the number in the 1970's.

Denver police point to the arrival of the California-based gangs, the Crips and the Bloods, as the main cause of the growing gang problem here.

"They came here to make money selling crack. The by-product was street gangs," said police Sgt. Dave Dawkin, who is specializing in Denver's gang problem.

About 700 gang members are in Denver, and they are recruiting two or three more daily, police said.

The Crips and Bloods, lured by the prospect of untapped markets for crack, have been moving into other parts of the country. The gangs, depicted in the movie "Colors," have been reported as far north as Anchorage, Alaska, and as far east as Denver.

Dawkins estimated that gang related crimes are "at least doubling" each year and that 25 percent of the Denver gang members are from Southern California originally.

"L.A. gang members said we were easy, kind of hicks, because we weren't as hard on them and our methods are different," said Dawkins.

The most recent victim of gang slaying here was Cameron Smith, 18, who was gunned deon Nov. 3 on a sidewalk. Police said he was shot because he was wearing a red cap, the color of the Bloods. Smith however, wasn't a gang member.

"Had he been just another gang member, it might have been different," said the Rev. Acen Phillips, who organized a rally after Smith's death. "The fact is, he was a Christian young man and gave his life."

Mayor Federico Pena was outraged by the death, blamed on a Crips member upset over the shooting a day ealier of another Crip. Their color is blue.

"I am not going to tolerate a situation in which citizens have to worry about what color clothing they are wearing for fear of being shot," Pena said.

Nearly 100 police officers are assigned to the gang situation. Intensified efforts include coordinating information and efforts with other law-enforcement agencies.

Pena called for "zero tolerance."

"That means if they're caught jaywalking, they're arrested," he said.

But Dawkins said that alone will not deter gang members.

"They are looking for some kind of recognition they don't get at home. They gravitate to other kids who have the same problem," he said.

To help attack the problem's roots, the Salvation Army is targeting those who might enter gangs, and gang members.

New Southwest Lot 33 should lessen UMass parking crunch

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Workers at the Parking Office expect new Lot 33, largely unused since it was made, to start filling up with the vehicles of commuters who suffer from the "parking crunch"at the University of Massachusetts .

Barbara Konieczny, an employee at the Parking Office, said they have sent out "well over 200" lot change forms to area commuters and people who are currently parking in E Lot spaces. She expects to start selling many of the spaces in the new lot within two weeks and the lot will be filled for the spring semester.

The new 540 space lot, adjacent to Lot 22 near Southwest Residential Area, recently had it's last perimeter lines painted making it ready for use on Nov. 28. The lot was paved in response to complaints about the shortage of parking spaces for commuters on campus.

"We get complaint calls everyday. I can't even estimate how many we have received," Konieczny said.

Lot 33 is open to any UMass commuter who fills out the required forms. The cost for a one-year decal in the lot is $30, the same pricetag for parking in Lot 22.

The new parking lot was built against the wishes of many Southwest residents who complained it would eliminate a large area they used for playing sports.

University Landscape Architect, Bill Lambert, said the area for the new lot had already been slated for paving in a contract developed in 1964 for the Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Lambert also said the lot will be utilized during home football games.

Man claims he had sex with Jim Bakker and arranged Hahn tryst

NEW YORK (AP) — A former television preacher told a grand jury he had sex with Jim Bakker three times and arranged the fateful tryst with church secretary Jessica Hahn at Bakker's urging, according to a magazine interview.

John Wesley Fletcher, who appeared on "The PTL Club" television program from the mid-1970's to 1981, described Bakker as a bisexual who oepenly lusted after the show's young male camera operators.

"I was Jim Bakker's male prostitute," he said in the interview for January's Penthouse magazine.

Fletcher is the second man to say publicly that he had sex with Bakker. In September, former PTL official Jay Babcock said he had told the grand jury of a sexual encounter with Bakker.

Fletcher said in the interview released Sunday that he related the sexual encounters to the federal grand jury investigation charges that Bakker, Bakker's wife, Tammy, and PTL aide David Taggart illegally spent contributions to the ministry on themselves.

The grand jury was expected to reconvene in Charlotte, N.C., yesterday. Among other things, witnesses have said the jury in investigating whether ministry funds were used to pay $364,000 in hush money to Ms. Hahn or to entice aides to grant Bakker homosexual favors.

Bakker, the PTL founder, has denied in a sworn deposition that he ever had a homosexual relationship with anyone, and had denied charges of financial wrongdoing.

■ Atlantic 10

Garrick-and-Owens*less* Rams of Rhode Island lost by 12 to Arizona State, George Washington was creamed by Georgia Tech 94-64, and in the two inter-conference matches, the University of Massachusetts lost to Rutgers by 17 and Duquesne nipped St. Joseph's by four.

The only clear winner (not counting the Rutgers, Duquesne victories over fellow A-10 teams) was St. Bonaventure University. The Bonnies barely beat Bucknell, 75-73.

Now it's not time to send flowers or recite eulogies, the A-10 is playing a far tougher schedule than last year— three of the losses came at the hands of teams ranked in the Top 20.

And after graduation decimated the "old" talent of the conference, the A-10 is now running on younger legs (42 newcomers).

The point is, this year the Atlantic 10 isn't going to be able to come in through the back door. The conference has gained more respect, but its lost the element of surprise.

Bruins satisfied to tie Penguins

BOSTON (AP) — A point's a point, especially in the National Hockey League standings, and Boston Bruins captain Ray Bourque will take it, considering the Bruins 2-7-4 record over the past 13 games.

"We wanted two, but we'll take the point, Bourque said after defenseman Zarley Zalapski skated the length of the Boston Garden ice and beat Bruins goalie Reggie Lemelin with a 20-foot wrist shot, giving the Pittsburgh Penguins a 3-3 tie Sunday night.

"It's better than none. We were checking well in the last five minutes, trying to protect the lead and they got a break and tied it up. So it's a good point for us."

It was also a good point for Pittsburgh, which had won five in a row. "You need a big play any time you're behind in the building," said Pittsburgh coach Gene Ubriaco of Zalapski's end-to-end tying goal had to sit out this weekend because of a sprained knee. But Myers is almost ready to return and should be back by the start of the season.

"He's looking pretty good," Johnson said. "His knee is almost totally rehabilitated. He still has to do floor. He hasn't done a lot of floor movements but he's starting too."

The Minutemen's biggest strength this year will lie in the horizontal bar event. UMass has seven performers who all can step in and get the job done for Johnson. Booker, Myers, Ronayne, Weil, Eggers, senior co-captain Bart Balocki, and sophomore Dave DiNucci make up a team that will be tough to beat on the bar in each meet.

"On horizontal bar, we could have maybe the best team in the East," Johnson said.

One event where Johnson feels the Minutemen have to improve is the parallel bars. It will take time, but Johnson feels UMass will come on by the end of the season.

"Right now, parallel bars are a little weak," Johnson said. "But by the middle of the season, we'll be able to keep up with any team there."

Another event where UMass is solid is at the vault where DiNucci led the Minutewomen last year.

"We'll probably have one of the strongest teams UMass has ever had in vaulting, so we should we should be able to stay with just about any team in vaulting."

And with any other team in the most important result, the team score.

Johnson optimistic about 1988-89 season

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The regular season for the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastic team will not officially get under way until 1989, but UMass coach Roy Johnson is already talking about one of the best teams that UMass has seen in a long time.

"I think one of our goals is to score 270," Johnson said. "We should be able to break the school record of 267.75."

UMass has a long way to go before it shatters any records. Its season will not get under way for over a month when it opens up its season at the Naval Academy on January 14.

The Minutemen will also have to wait a long time before they hear the cheers of the home crowd. The first six meets of the year, three of them over intersession, are scheduled road appearances for UMass. However, Johnson doesn't mind. He'd rather play on the road in January rather then in an empty Boyden Gymnasium.

"I think its OK," Johnson said. "In gymnastics, you have to get used to the apparatus."

When UMass does return home for the first time this year, some old familiar faces that were not seen last year will return after a long absence.

Last year, seniors Jay Ronayne and Roberto Weil along with junior John Eggers were redshirted. But they are back this year and will play key roles for the Minutemen.

Eggers and Weil will compete in the all around competition while Ronayne will hit the floor exercise, the vault, and the horizontal bar.

"All three of those people have been EIGL finalists," Johnson said. "I think we'll be stronger than last year, much stronger."

But there are other reasons besides the return of Weil, Ronayne, and Eggers why Johnson believes that this years team is a step above last year's.

UMass has recruited three freshman that Johnson says are ready to step in and contribute right away. Tom Wolkner, William Sayman, and Calvin Booker, in particular, are ready to step up to the college level in their first year at UMass.

The Minutemen competed at the Farmingdale Open over the past weekend in an eight-team field and Booker led the Minutemen with a combined score of 48 in the all-around competition.

UMass finished third in the meet with a total team score of 240 behind Navy and Syracuse, two teams that the Minutemen will meet at the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships in March as well as in dual meets during the regular season. That score was lower than where UMass wants to be in the regular season but with so much time before the season starts, Johnson knows what the Minutemen must work on.

"Its early so where you place in this meet isn't indicative of how you'll do later on," Johnson said. "If we can improve on major breaks, I think we can improve our score by 15 points. The thing is just to clean up our routines."

One other thing that will help UMass when they open up against Navy is the return of senior Tim Myers. Myers was UMass' top all-around scorer last year but

A slow start for the A-10

It's still early yet, but Atlantic 10 Conference men's basketball, last year's NCAA Tournament Cinderella and this year's underdog favorite among conferences, has had its nose bloodied already this season.

Granted, the A-10 has upgraded its competition, but it's realizing it has to learn how to walk before it can fly.

Of the eight games in which A-10 teams played this weekend, the conference teams lost six.

Last year's A-10 bully, Temple, dropped a pair in the Pepsi Cola Tournament to Missouri (in double overtime) and Arizona. The feared Mountaineers of West Virginia lost by two to Bradley, the

Reid to be honored as NE Coach-of-the-Year

Ten days after the season ended, the awards are still rolling in for the University of Massachusetts football team.

UMass head coach Jim Reid, who was already named Yankee Conference Coach-of-the-Year, has been named New England Coach-of-the-Year by the New England Football Writers.

He will receive the award tomorrow night in Cambridge at a dinner sponsored by the NEFW.

"I'm pleased to get the award but I want it to be a university award," Reid said. "It's not an individual thing. I want the coaching staff, administration, faculty and students to be proud that we have one of the better programs around. I want everyone to feel real good."

Reid guided the Minutemen to an 8-3 regular-season record and a tie for the Yankee Conference title with the University of Delaware at 6-2. UMass also made the NCAA Division 1-AA playoffs for the first time in 10 years before losing to Eastern Kentucky University.

In Reid's three years as head coach, the Minutemen have a 19-15 record and have shared the conference title twice.

The other UMass honorees at the banquet will be senior linebacker John McKeown and sophomore cornerback and punt returner Jerome Bledsoe, who were named to the NEFW All-New England team.

Indoor track underway

Minutemen take part in non-scoring meet

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's indoor track team participated in a nine-school, non-scoring meet Saturday. Schools from New England and New York participated.

"It was similar to other opening meets in that you get to look at other teams while not being sure what your team really has," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien.

"But I was impressed with the performances of our young players."

Freshman quarter-miler Steve Brown won the 400-meter race with a time of 50.3. "We knew he was a good runner in high school," said O'Brien. "Steve stepped right in and picked up where he left off in high school."

Derek Moore won the 800 meter in a time of 2:00.5.

Joe Lachiatto placed second in the high hurdles in a time of 7.9

"We consider his performance to be bright," said O'Brien. "The college hurdles are higher than the high school ones, so he did well. Our hurdle team should be even stronger than last year's."

Sophomore Mike Gray finished fifth in the 60-yard dash with a 6.5 time. In another 60-yard dash, freshmen Felix Delarosh and Kevin Walters also achieved the 6.5 mark.

"We were sorely lacking in that department [60-yard dash] last year," O'Brien said. "This year should be different."

Other Minutemen who O'Brien said were impressive were Tommy Degnan and Steve Doran. Degnan won the two-mile run (9.27) while Doran ran UMass' second-fastest quarter-mile.

"I was enthused to take a look at some of the younger players," said O'Brien. "Next weekend, we'll know exactly where we stand for the upcoming season."

7 women's soccer players get postseason awards

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Seven members of this year's University of Massachusetts women's soccer team have received postseason honors, it was announced yesterday.

Two players were named first-team All-New England by the New England Women's Intercollegiate Soccer Association, with four more making the second team. But UMass placed more players, seven, on the All-Northeast team, which has a broader selection base. Five Minutewomen were named first team All-Northeast, selected by the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America.

Leading the way was April Kater, a sophomore midfielder from Mendham, NJ who tied for the team lead in scoring this season, gaining 20 points on eight goals and four assists. Kater was selected to both first teams.

She has also been selected to travel to Los Gatos, Calif. Dec. 26 to Jan. 2 as part of the national team.

"It's quite an honor for her. They pick the best 25 players in the country for that," said UMass coach Jim Rudy.

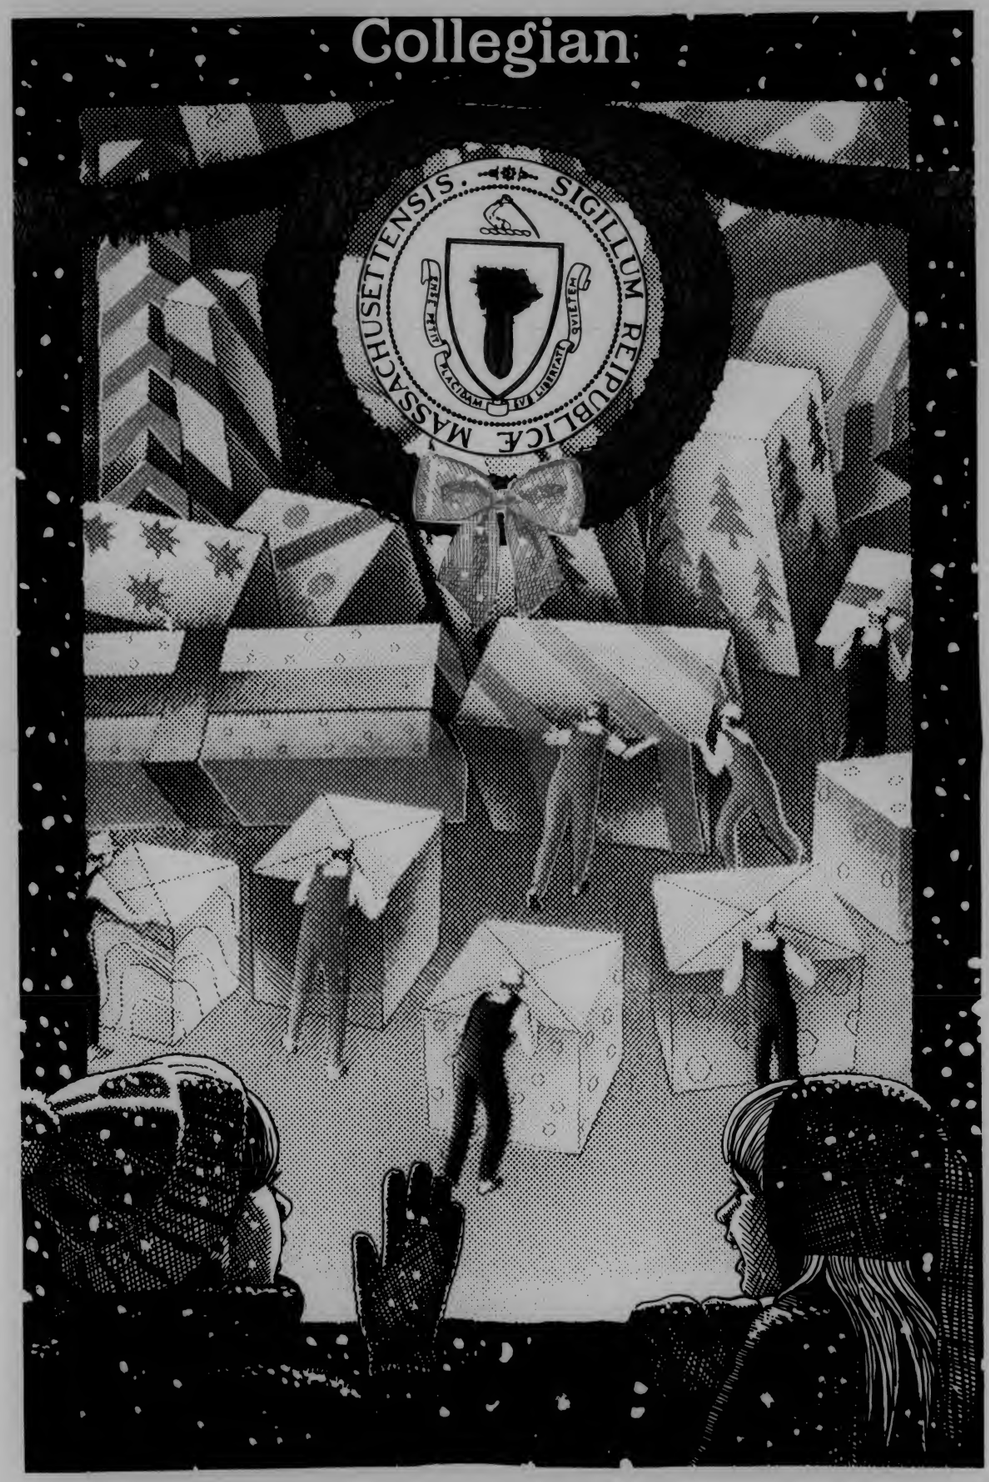
Also selected to both first teams was senior forward Michelle Powers from Winchester. Powers tied Kater for the team lead in scoring, getting 20 points on seven goals and six assists.

Selected to All-Northeast first team were seniors Cathy Cassady, Carla DeSantis and Sue Montagne. All three were also selected second-team All-New England.

Cassady, a midfielder from Springfield, Va., was a co-captain for this year's team and finished with two goals and four assists. DeSantis, a co-captain from Sudbury, was a three-year starter in goal for the Minutewomen, and posted a 12-3-1 record and a 0.82 goals against average, while registering 10 shutouts. Montagne, from Fairfax, Va., moved to sweeper for the first time this season and was a strong point on the UMass defense.

Senior forward Beth Roundtree, from Ewing Township, NJ, was named to both second teams, after finishing the season with 14 points, including a team-high eight assists. Sophomore back Sue Gaudette of Salem was named second-team All-Northeast, shifted to the backfield after playing forward in her first season. She was a key player of defense for the Minutewomen and also had three goals, all game-winners.

The Minutewomen finished the season at 14-3-1, falling to the University of Wisconsin in the NCAA quarterfinals.



The Carriage Shops offer variety in holiday gifts

By REBECCA MORRISSEY
Collegian Staff

With the end of the semester approaching, most people are looking for unique holiday gifts at affordable prices. The Carriage Shops in downtown Amherst offer a wide variety of stores from which to choose.

Modrian offers a wide selection of clothing, including short bolero jackets, brand names such as Urban Outfitters, hand-made sweaters, gloves, scarves and mock turtlenecks in many different colors. In addition, the store also offers small leather bags and bulky socks.

Although Modrian's inventory is mostly for women, they do sell some things for men such as pants and a variety of jackets and mock turtlenecks. In short, the store's philosophy is "Comfortable cotton clothing at reasonable prices," said Robin Babcock, fashion merchandiser for the store.

Once More With Feeling has used clothing, as well as a large collection of household items from pictures and paintings to glassware, hats, scarves, bags, jewelry, pillows, candlesticks and Christmas tree ornaments.

Good Night Bedding is having a sale on solid color futon covers — $38 for twin size, $50 for full size and $55 for queen size. There is also a 10 percent discount if you buy a futon, frame and cover together.

Good Night also offers a full line of down comforters and handmade quilted blankets. "Dormers," lightweight (2½ lb.) wool blankets with cotton flannel backings, are new this year. They sell for $69.95 and come in X-long and twin sizes (perfect for dorm beds) and are wide enough to fit a regular double bed.

The Mercantile carries lots of reasonably priced gifts suitable for Secret Santa as well as many small toys which make ideal stocking stuffers. There are small handbags, pouches, wallets, custom made T-shirts, candles, coffee mugs, silver jewelry, woven and leather bracelets, leather-soled

Gift shops provide holiday gift ideas

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Gift shops. You've seen them everywhere you go. What do they have to offer?

Faces in Amherst has a wide variety of gifts on hand, ranging from small items for Secret Santa (friend) presents, to clothing and small furniture. According to Peter Vogel, manager of Faces, the general price range is from $4.95 to $59.95.

RVC, also located in Amherst, sells gifts ranging from pottery to jewelry, but, according to employee Dianne Magee, the most popular sales during the holiday season are in gold and silver earrings and in jewelry boxes. "(These items) outweigh everything," Magee said. Due to the nature of the gifts, the price range is higher — from $25 to $300.

Hadley Village Barn Country Store, in Hadley, has more practical items. According to employee Cathy Shaw, kitchen items, such as aprons and gadgets, are doing fairly well. Stationery has also sold regularly. The price range is moderate — between $3 and $25.

Sales vary among these three stores. Vogel was unable to comment on how well Faces was doing, adding that students, who are his biggest customers, tend to shop late. RVC, on the other hand, was doing "very good for December," according to Magee. Sales at Hadley Barn Country Store, said Shaw, were "not great, but we're doing well."

There are a variety of places to go for small gift shopping. These stores are a sampling of places which offer different ideas for the holidays.

Mall stores doing well for holidays

By CHRIS A. MUTHER
Collegian Staff

At Main St. Records in downtown Northampton, the top sellers for Christmas are not records. Sales of cassettes and compact discs are slightly edging out over those of LPs. In all formats, most of the big sellers are compilation and greatest hits albums.

Brisk sales have been reported with hits albums from Bananarama, REM and the Ramones. Live albums that are also selling well include new releases from the Smiths and Pink Floyd. Main Street's biggest sellers are U2's latest, Rattle and Hum, Naked, from the Talking Heads and heavy metal albums, which are making an unusually strong showing this Christmas.

Hampshire Mall in Hadley is always a favorite stop for holiday shopping. One store that always sees increased sales during the holiday season is Kay Bee Toy and Hobby Shop.

For kids of all ages, the popular item this year is the Nintendo video system, taking over the number one spot from last year's popular Lazer Tag game. For smaller children, hot sellers this year are talking toys. These include Teddy Ruxpin, talking Big Bird and talking Mickey Mouse.

Also in the Hampshire Mall, the AT&T Phone Center has also seen an increase in sales this holiday season. Big sellers for the executives are cellular car phones and FAX machines. For people with slightly more restricted budgets the best sellers are answering machines and the ever-popular telephone.

Down a few feet, at the Weathervane, the sales people have witnessed the seasonal phenomenon of male shoppers frequenting the store. Most asked for items including sweaters and jewelry, along with "personal"items that husbands would most like to see their wives wearing Christmas morning.

Special thanks to Marc Infield and Michael Wester for the design and production of the cover of this section.

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe. You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

New toys on the market are health risk

BOSTON (AP) — Some toys stocked in stores this Christmas could turn child's play into tragedy, but the government isn't doing enough to keep the hazards out of children's hands, a Boston lawyer said Tuesday.

"People have been lulled into a false sense of security thinking there are safety standards," said child safety advocate Edward Swartz at a news conference where he released his 17th annual nominees for the "10 worst toys."

Dangerous toys on Swartz's list ranged from a $1 play sword to battery-operated sports cars that cost thousands of dollars. As in previous years, he took aim at toy weapons and projectile toys he said "have virtually turned some nurseries into armed camps."

Swartz said the government should impose stricter standards to protect children.

But a spokeswoman for the Consumer Product Safety Commission defended toy safety efforts.

"We do what we can with what the resources we have," said Anne Pavlich. "We don't have pre-market clearance. We depend on people like this to let us know which toys they feel are not safe."

At least two of the toys on this year's list have been discontinued, although they may still be on store shelves, manufacturers said.

The "Sweetheart" battery-operated riding toy by Power Wheels, which Swartz blasted for its potential speed of 5 mph and 6 volt rechargeable batteries housed in unsecured areas, has been discontinued, said Chip Herman, vice president of Kransco Corp., the parent company which marketed the Sweetheart.

He said the product was dropped because it resembles the three-wheeled All Terrain Vehicles banned this year. Herman said no problems developed with the batteries.

Swartz also criticized other motorized sports cars that can reach speeds of 30 mph, but noted that they probably won't be on many parents' shopping lists at costs of up to $15,000.

Also discontinued was the Battle Beasts Warrior Sword, which Swartz said could cause injuries with its long, rigid blade. The toy was dropped because of poor sales, said Bernie Epstein, senior vice president of manufacturer Imperial Toy Corp. of Los Angeles.

"We make over 700 items. We don't knowingly make anythging that isn't safe," Epstein said.

One popular nursery staple made Swartz's list, the Johnny Jump Up Baby Exerciser by Evenflo Juvenile Furniture Co.

TAs protest proposed budget cuts

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

About 40 graduate students picketed and chanted outside Whitmore Administration Building at noon yesterday to protest proposed budget cuts that may threaten their jobs.

Members of the Graduate Employees Organization (GEO) staged the rally to draw attention to the plight they may suffer from a request made by the Board of Regents of Higher Education to cut $5.5 million to $7.7 million dollars from this year's fiscal budget, making up for a $300 million shortfall in the state's revenue.

Although no definite cuts have been ordered, the regents announced they wanted the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, and many other state colleges, to access the impact of such cuts earlier this month.

An oval of graduate picketers carrying signs, some of which read: "Graduates Unite," "TA's Unite Before you Lose Everything," and "Don't Pay TA's Out of a Slush Fund," formed shortly after 12 p.m.

"We are very concerned about cuts and the giveback of money next semester . . . we want everyone to realize the importance of the situation we are facing," said Cynthia Kaufman, GEO spokesperson.

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said 270 workers could be laid off and 200 class sections, affecting 6,000 students, could be cancelled if Gov. Michael Dukakis gets his proposed 5 percent budget cut.

Graduate students, said Kaufman, feel they will have to bear the brunt of teaching duties being cheap alternatives to faculty when and if layoffs come. They fear the administration's freeze earlier this month on all new and vacant state funded positions has implications of problems ahead.

"Without the faculty more pressure falls on the teaching assistants and the quality of education may suffer," Kaufman said.

GEO, a 400-member organization at the University, feels extremely vulnerable to the cuts since it is one of the few organizations on campus that is not unionized, Kaufman said. "We're the most vulnerable people at the University."

The graduates said they were not upset with the administration since they were involved in the same battle against the state.

Kaufman said the protest is an attempt to reach state legislators from whom GEO members are seeking recognition as state employees.

"Last year our stipends were paid with $230 from an emergency fund," Kaufman said.

The emergency fund Kaufman referred to was made up of funds from undergraduate fees. "That's not the way a public university should be funded," Kaufman said.

She explained if GEO were recognized as state employees the state perhaps could allocate proper money to fund graduate's stipends and secure their pay.

"Other state universities have better facilities and funding, UMass is one of the most chronically underfunded universities," said 35-year-old graduate student John Rafael of the Labor Studies department.

"Were out here because we're TA's who are overworked and underpaid. We give exams, and conduct discussion sections . . . public higher education is obviously not a high priority in this state," said 29-year-old Thomas Anderson of the Agricultural Resources and Economics department.

Duffey fearful of budget cuts

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph Duffey today will meet with the University of Massachusetts trustees and revise the impact report of how the recently proposed budget cuts can affect the Amherst campus.

Duffey said the cuts may prevent seniors from graduating in the spring and result in numerous layoffs, the Union News in Springfield reported yesterday.

"Layoffs could prevent undergraduate students from completing their general education and graduation requirements," Duffey said in the original impact statement.

Duffey also said as many as 200 class sections could be closed, affecting up to 6,000 undergraduates.

Because this year's budget is already $7 million less than last year's, "any further reductions could prove devastating," Duffey said in the report. The cuts would be especially drastic since it is already six months into the fiscal year, he said.

> The situation is serious.
> —Chancellor Joseph Duffey

Two weeks ago, Duffey sent the assessment of the school's situation after the reductions to Massachusetts Chancellor of Higher Education Franklyn Jenifer.

Jenifer asked all state colleges and universities to submit impact statements following a request from Frank Keefe, secretary of administration and finance.

At a Faculty Senate meeting last week, Duffey kicked off a button and bumper sticker campaign. Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice pinned the first button on him, which reads, "Cutting Colleges Cost$ the Commonwealth."

Students went to a Springfield Town Meeting Saturday, which was also attended by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, to plead with the governor the cause of public higher education.

Dukakis is expected to announce the size of agency budget reductions he will order to offset a state revenue shortfall projected as high as $600 million, the Union News reported.

The announcement would determine the exact figure that will be chopped from higher education. UMass can expect a 3 to 5 percent slash, or about $5 million to $7.7 million.

Duffey has urged students and faculty to inform media and lawmakers of the possibly drastic effects the cuts could have on UMass. "The situation is serious," he said last week.

Graffiti causing worries at N.H.S.

By JOHN SWANSON
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — One student has been identified as the writer of anti-Semitic graffiti found in Northampton High School, according to Dorothy Molnar, associate superintendent of the Northampton School District.

"The issue is not the identification, but dealing with the ongoing situation," she said. "We will be dealing with issues of racism, sexism and classism in various ways."

The school district is planning several programs dealing with these issues, including training workshops for high school and elementary school teachers, the formation of a 10-member crisis intervention team and a "Day of Dialogue," which will be planned today by a special committee, she said.

Molnar said the student has received "the proper disciplinary actions," but would not specify what those actions are.

Molnar told the Daily Hampshire Gazette that the messages found in two of the men's bathrooms read: "Be a Nazi — continue the Holocaust" and "Kill Jews, kill Jews."

Principal Gordon Noseworthy told the Gazette that there will be increased surveillance in the bathrooms. He could not be reached for comment yesterday.

The crisis intervention team was formed last month, after two incidents of racial graffiti at the high school. Molnar said the group is be composed of students, staff and faculty of the high school.

The upcoming "Day of Dialogue" is expected to be a forum for students, faculty, staff and community members to discuss issues of oppression, Molnar said.

Yesterday, the high school began its day with an extended homeroom period in which students shared their reactions to the incident.

Bush fills more positions in his new administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush yesterday named Texas oilman Robert Mosbacher as secretary of commerce and tapped Carla Hills, the first woman named to a high-level post in the incoming administration, to be special trade representative.

Bush also named Michael Boskin, a Stanford University professor of economics and a campaign adviser, to head the Council of Economic Advisers.

Addressing reporters in an office building next door to the White House, Bush said the appointments rounded out the top ranks of the economic team that will take office with him in January.

Turning to foreign policy, Bush also said CIA Director William Webster would remain in his post, the latest in a string of holdover appointments from the Reagan administration.

The President-elect completed an assortment of appointments by naming Thomas Pickering, the former ambassador to Israel, Nigeria, El Salvador and Jordan, as his ambassador to the United States.

The appointees flanked Bush on a stage in the old Executive Office Building, while the President-elect introduced each of them with lavish praise.

Bush is not expected to make additional

Theta Chi hearing to be held today

The Office of the Greek Affairs will conduct a preliminary hearing today to determine whether an accident at the Theta Chi fraternity Thursday night was alcohol-related, according to a University of Massachusetts spokeswoman.

A member, Michael Calvo, 20, fell from the fourth floor of the fraternity house after attempting to enter his room from the outside because he was locked out, the spokeswoman said.

He was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and was reported to be in fair condition yesterday.

Fraternity members have declined to comment on the incident.

Also this week, the Dean of Students Office has been conducting preliminary hearings with members of the Alpha Tau Gamma fraternity charged with alleged hazing.

ATG was stripped of official University recognition last month, and all members were forced to move out of the two chapter houses on North Pleasant Street.

The Amherst police are also conducting an investigation of the charges, but have declined to comment on the specifics, except to say they have more than two suspects. No arrests have been made yet.

ATG members have also declined to comment.

Speaker decries abortion as murder

By DANIELLE BIONDA

All children are a gift from God and abortion is murder, a member of Women Exploited By Abortion said Monday night in the Campus Center in a speech that kicked off the 1988 Respect Life Awareness Week.

Lianne Azevedo speaks against abortion Monday night in the Campus Center.

Lianne Azevedo, a counselor for WEBA since 1987, said, "If I told you that I was going to go home right now and beat my 15-month-old child to death . . . [abortion] is essentially the same thing."

Azevedo, a resident of Chicopee, said she had an abortion in 1982 after being raped, but added "[the abortion] was the biggest mistake of my life."

"I don't know if I could have raised that child," she said. "But I know that what I did was murder."

Rape is a horrible crime, "but the crime of murder is worse. The child shouldn't have to pay for the father's crime," she said.

Now a mother of two, Azevedo said WEBA's goal is to help women who have had abortions come to terms with the decision they made through support counselling.

WEBA also gives help to women who are pregnant and do not have the finances to support themselves, she said.

"We can refer the woman to a Christian, licensed shepherding home where she will be prepared for both adoption and keeping her child," she said, adding that the shepherding home provides shelter, food, clothing, and counselling for pregnant women.

According to Azevedo, many members of WEBA would be willing to support a pregnant woman in their own home. "I would be personally willing to have someone stay with me during her pregnancy."

Azevedo said she believes that a high number of abortions are repeat abortions. "There are so many families who want to adopt a child," she said. "There is a waiting list to adopt handicapped children also."

"Abortion is murder," Azevedo said. "And there are two victims involved, the mother and the child."

Selectmen seats open

First it was the presidential elections, then it was town meeting. Just when you thought things would calm down for a while, Selectman Allen Torrey decided to heat things up.

At Monday night's selectmen meeting, Torrey announced that he would not seek re-election in the Spring's town elections four months away, leaving the seat open.

> I realize I am henceforth a lame duck — but I plan to be an active and effective duck.
> —Amherst Selectman Allen Torrey

Judy Brooks' seat is also up for grabs. She has not yet announced whether she will run again or not, said Nancy Board, the administrative assistant to the selectmen.

"I sincerely hope that my early announcement will bring forth a number of qualified candidates to fill this important vacancy," said Torrey.

"I realize I am henceforth a lame duck — but I plan to be an active and effective duck," said Torrey, adding he is looking forward to working with the County Commission which holds its first meeting on Thursday.

"I appreciated the help he's given me when I was a new person on this board," said Brooks.

Torrey spent two three-year terms on the board. He is also the treasurer of Amherst College.

As of yesterday, no one has taken out nomination papers for either open spot, according to the Town Clerk's office.

Pro-life movement emphasized this week

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

"Respect Life Awareness Week," the main event of the year for UMass Students for Life, is a series of events this week designed to enlighten students on alternatives to abortion.

Scott Kramer, a sophomore member of UMass Students for Life and the Republican Club said speakers including Sen. Gordon Humphrey (R-N.H.), will be featured this week in the campus center as part of the club's attempt to emphasize the pro-life movement.

"There are alternatives to abortion," Kramer said. "Abortion is wrong — it's murder."

UMass Students for Life helps people clear up common myths and misconceptions about abortion, Kramer said.

"After talking to a lot of people in Students for Life, I was thoroughly convinced [abortion is wrong]," he said. "I'm one of their true converts."

The debate over whether the fetus is a life or not is important in deciding the legality of abortion, Kramer said.

"Since we don't know [if the fetus is a life], we should choose the lesser of two evils, which is to not allow abortion," he said.

An amendment prohibiting abortions except in cases where the mother's health is at risk should be added to the U.S. Constitution, he said.

"The life of an unborn child should have the same constitutional protection as the life of a child that has been born," Kramer said.

Rachel Kahn of Feminists for Life will lecture tonight at 8 p.m. in Campus Center Room 803. The event is sponsored by Students for Life, the Republican Club, the Student Government Association, Students for America, and Young Americans for Freedom.

WMUA seeks new record in telethon

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Correspondent

This week has once again brought the annual WMUA Telethon to the UMass campus and the surrounding community.

"The telethon is an integral part of WMUA's existence," explained Tony Procaccino, music director and DJ for the station on FM 91.1. "The funds raised during telethon week make up 25 percent of the station's budget."

"Our goal this year is $25,000," said telethon coordinator Will Pile. Pile also expressed that he hopes to see more students contribute pledges. "As of now we have raised approximately $3,000, but most of that money has come from the community. The station is a student-run operation, and needs to see more student support."

"Those not directly involved with WMUA may not fully understand the necessity of telethon funds to the station's survival; and the degree of commitment that those involved contribute," Pile continued. "The station is run on an entirely volunteer basis. The funds received during telethon week in no way fund the DJ's or the Executive Commitee personally; they go strictly towards programming. Through telethon funds, WMUA is able to purchase better equipment; which in turn provides better programming to our listeners."

To close out the week, WMUA is hosting a show in the Blue Wall Cafe. As DJ Bill Rosenblatt explained, "The show is to provide an evening of entertainment that the staff of WMUA can enjoy along with its listenters. In this respect the DJ's are not merely spinning records - Friday night's show provides much-needed DJ/listener interaction."

Reverb MF's energy brought to Blue Wall

By GRAEME THOMSON
Collegian Staff

The Reverb MF's are a band who are difficult to pigeonhole. If you tried, chances are all the pigeons would be dead by morning. I suppose you could say that listening to their new album, Route 666 is like having fuel-injected bile gobbed in your face, such is its twisted mesh of psychoblues, country and good ol' rock'n'roll. This is the soundtrack, as the title suggests, of the rocky road to hell. Music to torch your house to, and then laugh hysterically as you watch it burn. So what, might you ask, lies at the root of all this evil? Frontman Roy explains:

"I think the music that has had the most profound influence on me would be Neil Young, Wagner's "Ring Cycle," Grieg's "Pier Gynt" — and George Jones."

Heady stuff I'm sure, and if you listened close enough — or did enough drugs — you'd probably find all of these elements on Route 666 sounding like they're trying to strangle each other with piano wire. So I'm wondering: are these latter day Hell's Children currently residing among the lily-scented pages of Washington "Stepford Wife" Tipper Gore's pink velvet upholstered shit list? Are they the Motley Crue of the no-wave? Are they using the vast profits from mega-plutonium record sales to buy massive mountains of cocaine? In short: ARE THEY CORRUPTING THE YOUTH OF AMERICA? Roy is more realistic:

"We all have day jobs. In New York if you're a musician playing original music, unless you're one of the 0.0004% of "successful" bands, you've got to work to pay the rent. I myself do some proof reading, a little bit of black market, but usually I can't hold a job for too long because of my tremendous, ahem . . . alcohol problem."

At this he shies away from the phone, and drummer/business manager Ray comes on to tell me about the promotional side of things.

"We put out all our own stuff, so yeah, it requires alot of promotion. Agencies like Rock Pool are a great help. But it also means we have complete control and we don't want to lose that."

I know what he means. Too many good, some potentially great, bands have made concessions to commerciality in the hope of reaching a wider audience, and as a result slipped into the huge vat of goop that the major labels insist on calling "alternative music." Not so the Reverb MF.

"I know I'm gonna get roasted over a spit for saying this," says "guitar fiend," Skinny John, "but we're basically a grass roots rock'n'roll band with twists."

Enigma is a key quality of the Reverb MF's so much so that even they're not exactly sure who and what they are, which is just as it should be. Skinny John:

"I'm not exactly sure what my function in the band is. I'm usually sober enough to drive the van. No really, I guess my part is in the execution, Roy and Big John are the creative force. They're two of the funniest, most intelligent and most pathetic individuals I've ever met. I guess you could say they provide the 'animal magnetism.'"

And not only this but Big John also designs the artwork for the band's record sleeves and T-shirts. I ask him what he likes most about playing live.

"You get to play with people's heads, just reach in there and play about with them a little. It's great. When you're recording, it's just like documenting what you do, so that in maybe ten or fifteen years you'll hear something and you'll think 'hey! that's us, don't we sound dumb?'"

The Reverb MF experience is perhaps best summed up by Ray:

Dress to vote

Nancy Cohen

You've heard about all the trials and tribulations of the Student Government Association. Let's face it, it makes the University of Massachusetts go round. Fingers are pointed, blame placed and everyone and their brother writes a letter questioning the validity of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The question is, can we improve the efficiency of the senate?

I've got the answer. Turn the senate into a fashion show.

It would be great. Speaker Robert Fadel could be the emcee. He'd do an outstanding job considering he's the essence of a GQ magazine cover.

There could be guest judges. Who ever wins the contest would get to make all the decisions about the University's and students' problems.

Here are just a few of the potential judges that we could have: Gloria Steinem, William F. Buckley, Sandra Day O'Connor, Robert Bork, Jean Kirkpatrick, Abby Hoffman, and let's not forget the lovely, outgoing and rather outspoken Amy Carter.

Each party should plan to blend with each other.

If Greg Rothman is wearing a three-piece Brooks Brothers suit and a silk bowtie, Brian Darling certainly can't get away with his old worn rugbys and tattered jeans. He should follow Rothman's lead in his fashion.

Either dress up or down, guys. Remember, you are making a political statement with your clothes, not just with your mouths.

Greg, perhaps a nice kelley green turtle neck would suit you. this way, when you turn bright red with anger, you'll look like you've got the Christmas spirit.

When Jay Festa is wearing basic black, combat boots and a biker jacket, the other left-wingers should follow his lead.

They have to learn the Fashion Rules of Dressing (forget learning Robert's Rules of Order — style is more important.)

Every moderate could dress the style of the side they agree with. The problem with this is that some senators are having an identity crisis. They claim to belong to one party and yet seem to get coaching from the other.

This could mean big trouble for the moderates. They would have to choose one outfit that fits for all issues, or bring a whole wardrobe and ask for a suspension of the rules in order to consider a motion to recess so they could change outfits.

I truly believe that fashion counts for something. Maybe if Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz changed their wardrobe, perhaps to something a little more conservative and middle of the road, things would be different. A basic blue, not red, would be nice. Then they might have been acceptable to the senators who find them dangerous and threatening.

All's fair in love, war, and fashion. The key to winning this contest would be teamwork. So lefties — stop clashing. Righties — stop overdressing.

There could be no objections (theoretically, of course) but some senators would still claim bias. But then let's be realistic. What isn't biased? Certainly not fashion.

Maybe if the senators made their political statements in fashion, more things would get done and there would be less headaches and ulcers. If all of their negative energy was concentrated on fashion, they actually might get to what's on the agenda. It would give them something to work on like all the real politicians who wear power-red ties do.

If some of the senators continue to treat the senate like a three-ring circus and their constituents like clowns, then why not make it into a fashion show?

Remember, it's not what you know, nor who you know, it's what you wear that counts.

Hockey arena deserves support

I am writing in dismay over certain factions of the Student Government Association opposing the construction of the new Mullins Sports Arena.

The arena will benefit the University of Massachusetts student body. Must I remind our Student Trustee and other student leaders that UMass is the flagship University of the state and well on its way to being a world-renowned institution?

UMass should have the best and most modern facilities for academic and athletic use. Schools from all throughout New England would look toward the arena for possible tournaments and championship games. It could be used in other ways, such as indoor concerts and social events. The arena would create jobs, income, commerce, and greater name recognition.

Opponents argue that the arena would mean an additional tuition hike for students. I say hogwash to this feeble excuse. The state is willing to finance the vast majority of the project, and if the students do pay for any of it, it would be a substantially low amount, perhaps $20 or $30. We are paying for things that we have no say over, such as professor salaries, pay raises for the chancellor, or Registered Student Organization costs. This sports arena can be compared to a Civic Center for a city. At first it might cost a little but its long-term benefits are substantial.

Lastly, why should we discriminate against hockey players? Our University has every other sport, and we have facilities for all of them. Why shouldn't we have a hockey team and an arena? I urge all student leaders to support the arena, and I will do everything in my power to make sure that this sports arena becomes a reality.

Parking lot situation ridiculous

On a recent weekend night, I was out until 3 a.m. When I finally got back to my dorm in Orchard Hill, I could not find a parking spot in Lot 49. This is the same lot that I paid $30 to park in for the year.

As I drove around aimlessly looking for a parking space, I began to notice that most of the cars in the parking lot did not belong there. I saw many cars with E-lot stickers and many cars with no stickers at all. It is not fair that people who pay $10 are parked in a lot in which I pay $30 for.

The only open parking spot I could find was all the way down by Central. I figured it was ridiculous to walk so far so I finally parked much closer to my dorm on a grassy area in upper lot 49.

When I finally woke up Sunday morning I went out to my car and found a parking ticket on it. I looked around and saw so many cars with parking tickets on them and many of these cars like myself had lot 49 sticker. If I had actually parked my car in the only open parking space, the distance I would have had to walk back to my dorm would have been comparible to walking back from E lot. I do not think that those who pay $20 less than I do to park should be able to park in the same lot as I do, even if it is the weekend. I could have paid only $10 and avoided a parking ticket and walked as far as I would have had to the other night. Yes, I parked illegally but I should not have had to.

I think the University should try to expand the parking lots and in the mean time have these other cars ticketed and towed if they do not belong there, even if it is the weekend.

Cartoon unfair to Palestinians

There can be no compromise with racist ideology in any form, especially if it comes in the guise of a cartoon. The cartoon in the Collegian (Dec. 5) of Arafat attempting to blow up the United Nations in the form of the globe, is the type of mind pollution that one expects in the Minuteman not in the Collegian.

It is racist because it characterizes the Palestinian as mad and diabolical; it is reminiscent of the depiction of the Japanese during World War II and the Chinese during the Korean War. To see this more clearly, I suggest you show Shamir and Rabin as meat cutters working over the bodies of Palestinian children. The outcry of anti-Semitism would rock this campus for miles. Yet this cartoon is no less a promotion of anti-Semitism. The Palestinian is no less a member of the Semitic race than is the Jew.

Cartoons that promote stereotypical racist images of the Palestinian people breed a climate of racism in this community which, as we know from our immediate experiences at UMass, is a clear and present danger. There are people in this community who are from the Middle-East; they are culturally, ethnically, and religiously different from the US mainstream. By fostering images of hate, this paper helps to plant in the minds of some, a justification for oppression. This type of propaganda is also designed to justify the barbarity occurring on the West Bank and Gaza by reducing the victims to terrorist lunatics. What we should be seeing in the Collegian is a call for peace in this region; a call to end the killing on both sides.

DVP's Farrakhan funding unjust

Many people are wrong in their treatment concerning the Distinquished Visitors Program's sponsorship of Reverend Louis Farrakhan.

As a Jew, I am opposed to having him speak at my school. On the other hand, I also support freedom of speech, so he must be allowed to come to the University of Massachusetts.

The wrong in this situation is being committed by the DVP itself. As students, we are giving large amounts of money to support the organization's programming. Its main purpose should be to serve the interest of those who pay its funding, but this is not the case.

There is a large percentage of people on this campus that oppose Farrakhan's visit. Not only is Farrakhan Reverend coming to speak here, but their own money is being used to pay him. It makes me very uneasy to think that I am contributing to a man's salary who has defamed my religion. I am being forced to make a donation to his cause.

People can protest Farrakhan, but it would do much more to protest the groups who indirectly further his cause. If the DVP will not represent the students, then it should no longer receive student funds and support.

If Farrakhan wants to speak here so much, let him come. He has every right to. But it shouldn't be my money bringing him here.

McDevitt moves to censure Fadel

Student Government Association Sen. Bob McDevitt has filed a complaint to censure senate Speaker Robert Fadel for an alleged violation of the SGA Constitution.

McDevitt claims that Fadel is violating Article VI, Section 5 of the SGA Constitution, which states that the senate must hold new elections to fill a permanent absence in the SGA president's office.

"His personal stance has been that we don't need new elections," McDevitt said. He said that since Fadel is the leader of the senate, it is his responsibility to work toward filling the office.

Fadel, who is also acting president, said of the complaint, "It's very curious because the section states that the senate shall hold new elections."

Fadel said the constitution directs the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee to hold new elections.

"It says nowhere that the speaker shall arrange new elections. I don't see where I'm in violation. I think the complaint is misdirected."

Fadel said he would file a pre-trial motion for dismissal of the complaint.

1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.

Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?

(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good.
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different.
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings.
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement.
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

Budget approval on SGA agenda

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday the Undergraduate Student Senate apparently settled the controversy surrounding co-presidents-elect Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz by voting overwhelmingly that the approval of the two cannot be considered.

Silkoff/Rabinowitz and several other senators, however, have said they will try to bring the issue up again for approval.

But yesterday SGA Speaker Robert Fadel said he doubts the issue will come up again. Stay tuned.

The first item of business on the agenda for tonight is a special order to approve the 1990 SGA Budget. This will probably receive much debate.

Hockey arena

Aside from the presidency question, the senate last week approved a complicated proposal concerning the building of the proposed Mullins Hockey Arena at the University of Massachusetts.

The proposal endorses the building of the arena, with a $50 fee to cover costs of the arena. The proposal further resolves that the senate hopes for more funding for a better educational system at UMass, and will give input about the educational wishes of students.

Fund misuse

The senate also postponed approving a motion to censure Senator and Commuter Area Government President Jay Festa for alleged financial improprieties.

Sen. Bob McDevitt has a complaint pending in the Student Supreme Court against Festa for the misuse of funds. The senate decided to wait for the ruling of the court before voting on the censure.

Some other items on the agenda include:

• To condemn and ask for a reversal of a recent change to the Code of Student Conduct. The measure also calls for a statement from Chancellor Joseph Duffey on the revision.

• To approve an equipment policy for the senate. Fadel said the policy concerns who can use senate property, such as computers and copiers.

• A move to neither approve nor oppose the coming of black leader Louis Farrakhan to campus recognizing that he is an important black leader and has offended members of the Jewish community.

Males twice as likely to receive scholarships to Mass colleges

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — The National Center for Fair and Open Testing says the state's way of awarding some scholarships to its four-year public colleges and universities is so biased against females that twice as many males are likely to get the grants.

Massachusetts Honor Scholarships are awarded by the Board of Regents of Higher Education strictly on the basis of scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test, creating the problem, the center said.

The center, known as FairTest, said the SAT is biased against females who average lower scores on it nationally than males but generally get higher grades in high school and college.

FairTest said 144 males and 75 females were offered honor scholarships, which are not given on the basis of need, for the current academic year.

Sen. Richard Kraus, D-Arlington, has filed a bill calling for consideration of class rank and extracurricular activities, in addition to SAT scores, in awarding the honors scholarships.

The Board of Regents and FairTest support that legislation.

FairTest and other groups challenged the constitutionality of the New York scholarship program in a federal suit filed last week. Bob Schaeffer, spokesman for FairTest, said New York is the only other state that uses only test scores to award scholarships.

The Massachusetts Honor Scholarships pay full tuition for one year at any public, four-year institution in the state. They are offered to the top few SAT scorers in each of the 40 senatorial districts.

In making the moves, Bush left unfilled the top job at the Pentagon. Former Sen. John Tower of Texas has long been rumored to be in line for the job of defense secretary. Incoming White House Chief of Staff John Sununu said Bush might appoint as many as five or so top defense officials at once.

■Joe Milette

Milette has been consistent since his high school days in Ipswich, Massachusetts. As a senior he won the state meet at the New Englands and was named to the Boston Globe All Scholastic team.

By that time, O'Brien and UMass had long been interested.

"Coach O'Brien sent letters to me from my sophomore year on," said Milette. "I was interested in Rhode Island early but UMass showed the most interest in me."

"The thing that caught our eye was that he was a good runner at a young age," said the coach. "The bigger the meet the better Joe ran."

After Joe has run his last meet he plans to enter the ministry. "I'm trusting God to lead me where to go," he said. "It's his will where I'm going."

No matter what Joe Milette does in the future, and where it leads him, you can bank on two things. He'll be successful and he'll be giving all of the credit to God.

■women's hoop

game-high 25 after intermission to spark her team. Apicella, though, has graduated, but she didn't take the team's offensive philosophy with her.

This year, the Crusaders have shown no signs of letting up their attack.

Although their record shows just a 2-3 mark on the year, it' a bit deceiving. It includes a 94-91 overtime loss to Providence College (rumors had the score up around the 110-range, which isn't too far-fetched, considering), a loss to South Carolina, and a four-point setback to Louisiana Tech last weekend in the finals of a tournament.

They have beaten Oklahoma State, and smothered the University of Rhode Island in their season opener.

"They are going to be tough," said UMass coach Kathy Hewelt. "But we'll be ready for them."

Ready means to somehow find a way to prevent the Worcesterites from running right out of the building. The Crusaders are averaging 77.2 points per game, but their up-tempo style also has them relinquishing 79.2 on the other end.

The Minutewomen, on the other hand, are down in a more reasonable neighborhood, and their blend has been more successful, leading the team to a 3-0 start. Their stats show 61 points per game, while yielding 54. In two of their three games this year, UMass has held its opponents under 30 percent shooting from the floor. The season average is just 30.5 percent.

Clearly, tonight's game will be a clash of styles.

"They like to run right off the in-bounds. We're going to have to find a way to stop them," Hewelt said.

This year, coach Bill Gibbons' squad is led by senior forward Kathy Stecco, who was "held" to a season-low 15 points by Oklahoma State. Stecco is averaging 18.2 points per game to lead the team. Following her is junior guard Nicole DeQuattro (11.8), who will be renewing an old high school rivalry with UMass guard Michele Pytko tonight.

Stecco is also tied for the team lead in rebounds with 6-foot-1 senior center Ann Borcky, each with 6.2 boards a game. Other players to watch will be sophomore guards Mary Helen Walker and Ann Lambiotte, and 6-3 junior center Robin Arnold.

"We are going to have to play extremely well to beat them," Hewelt said.

But while scoring may be at a premium, the game could also get physical quickly. In last year's game, each team was whistled for 30 fouls.

Hoop-la: A glance at the books has shown that this year's team's quick start is the best since the 1978-79 Minutewomen jumped out to a 6-0 start en route to an 18-7 record under coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. The 1986-87 team also started out 3-0 under interim coach Jack Leaman . . . a few career-highs were achieved in last Saturday's 73-61 win at the University of Hartford. Junior forward Helen Freeman and Pytko each reached collegiate highs in scoring, with 19 and 18 points, respectively.

Freeman had previously scored 18 last year against George Washington University, while Pytko's best was 15 against St. Bonaventure. Freeman also reached another height, blocking four shots against the Hawks .

■women's track

tain K atin Peers finished first in 10:36, followed by Kathy Holt (10:53), who outkicked Amy St. Pierre (10:56). The fourth-place finisher, Dana Goldfarb, finished with a time of 11:20, one minute below her personal best last year as a freshman. A muscle tear injury in her leg has really hampered her training. Anna Montouri finished fifth in 11:33, but she is more of a long distance runner (5,000m, 10,000m).

UMass, the only Division I school at the meet, dominated but Lafreniere felt it was overall a positive experience for the team.

"This weekend was a real low-key, get-your-feet-wet type of track meet. But the kids had a lot of fun, and it's like a big social event for the coaches, who all know each other," she said.

UMass' indoor season will consist of six more non-scoring invitational meets, which are all away because UMass does not have adequate indoor facilities. Lafreniere said she feels that traveling the invitational route is best for UMass because "we get to be selective and pick the best tracks in New England."

The team will be traveling to Boston this Saturday for the Harvard Invitational, which will be quite a difference in the level of competition from the Smith meet. Unlike the Smith meet, which was a closed competition to the four area schools, Harvard is one of the larger open competitions (basically, to anybody who wants to go) and attracts some of the best track schools and clubs in New England. The meet will be the first big test for this young team and Lafreniere promises, "There will be plenty of competition there."

Just when you thought the Curry Hicks scoreboard was safe. . .

No, the Oklahoma men's basketball team isn't coming to Amherst. Neither is Loyola-Marymount (although those two teams meet on Dec. 17 on ESPN, which should be interesting). Instead, it's the Holy Cross women's team that will be in town to take on the University of Massachusetts tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Cage.

Simply put, the Crusaders aren't afraid to put the ball up. One only has to look back to last December, when Holy Cross broke the century mark in beating the Minutewomen, 102-87 at the Hart Center. UMass was burned in that game by a superior second half performance by point guard Jen Apicella, who scored 22 of her

University of Massachusetts men's head basketball coach John Calipari knows UMass fans are impatient people. He knows a loss to the University of New Hampshire in Durham tonight will ignite fans to groan and say "oh no, not 1-3." But Calipari said he concerns himself with input, not outcome.

"I'm trying real hard to tell my guys we can't worry about wins and losses. We've got to look at improvement," he said.

If you go by the numbers, UMass has the upper hand over the Wildcats. The Minutemen pounded UNH by 25 points last year, the Wildcats lost two players from that squad. And, UNH coach Gerry Friel has come under fire for his 184-313 record in 19 years.

Calipari, however, has nothing but respect for Friel.

"They're very well-coached. The guy can really coach basketball," he said.

It's UMass' performance that Calipari is concerning himself with.

"I'm not so worried about them as I am about my team," he said.

The Minutemen have been criticized for not playing "an entire 40 minutes each game," and for their slumping seniors, Duane Chase and David Brown.

"They're struggling, but maybe I put too much pressure on them," Calipari said of Chase and Brown. "I can't expect this team to play better without their contributions."

Brown said after the Rutgers game that he felt like he wasn't shooting the ball real well so far this season, but, he said he would be ready to break out of it by the UNH game.

As for the not playing consistently throughout the game, Calipari said UMass has got to learn how to handle "spurts."

In the early part of each half in the Rutgers game, the Minutewomen were badly outscored — 18-0 in a combined seven minutes at the beginning of each half.

"Part of this is inexperience. The kids on the floor don't always know how to react," he said. "We're going to go back to the basics."

So far this year, UMass has been characterized by its freshman guard tandem of Anton Brown (13.8 ppg) and Jim McCoy (15 ppg). The rookie duo has led the Minutemen in scoring in two of UMass' first three games. Against Rutgers McCoy was the Minuteman offense, setting a UMass season high of 19 points.

Although McCoy has the freedom to make his own offense, UMass' offense hasn't centered around McCoy, Calipari said.

"Jimmy's just taking it. He knows if he can take it, he's going to shoot it," he said.

UNH, however, is returning two of its high scoring guns.

Derek Counts (14.6 ppg last year), the 5-foot-10 senior point guard, and Keith Carpenter, the 6-foot-4 sophomore forward, (10.8 ppg last year) will key the New Hampshire offense.

A similarity between the two teams is they both lack real height. UNH's center is a 6-foot-7 senior who crashes the boards.

"We've just got to dig," Calipari said. "I'm on them [UMass] real hard. I'm worrying about them getting better."

Hoop du jour: Tonight's game in New Hampshire is UMass last away game for four weeks (Penn State on Jan. 5) . . . Uh-oh, UMass' opponent on Saturday, Northeastern, beat the University of Rhode Island last night 86-82 . . . UMass' series record with the Wildcats is in the Minutemen's favor, 59-28.

Indoor track runs past competition at Smith College

By RIC SETO
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's indoor track team dominated in its first invitational at Smith College Saturday afternoon.

The non-scoring meet was only restricted to UMass, Smith, Amherst College, and Mount Holyoke College.

Coach Julie Lafreniere achieved one goal: to qualify her distance medley relay team into the ECACs at Yale University in March. The medley consisted of freshman Michelle St. Laurent in the 800 meter race, freshman Lee Ann Ambrose in the 400, junior Shana Smith in the 1200, and freshman Precious Hill in the 1600. The quartet finished with a time of 12 minutes and 15 seconds — 15 seconds under the ECAC qualifying standard of 12:30.

The other two distance medley relay teams finished second and third.

The second place team of senior Wendy Marshall (who ran a very respectable 2:35 half considering she is more of a 200 and 400 runner), freshman Sue McFadden, sophomore Cathy Crocker, and sophomore Laura LaVallee (who ran a personal best 5:19 mile) finished in 13:09.

The third place team (13:13) consisted of Sonja Vaughan, Debbie Sue Couturier, Christine Hawkins, and Wendy Loughran.

The 4x400m dash team of Ambrose, McFadden, Marshall, and Sue Couturier captured first place with a time of 4:26. UMass placed its 4x800m dash first and second with a team of LaVallee, St. Laurent, Smith, and Hill (9:40) and Vaughan, Crocker, Hopkins, and Loughran (10:10).

An interesting development came up in the 4x200m relay. Lafreniere had already entered a team of Ambrose, McFadden, Sue Couturier, and Heidi Murphy. But Hill, who had just run the half-mile relay, wanted to run the 200m relay also.

So Hill, with a team of Crocker, Vaughan, and Marshall (who wasn't suppose to run the 200 because of a muscle tear in her leg) managed to barely edge out the first place team. UMass was the only school in the invitational to enter runners in the 3000m race. Senior cap-

Milette: Thank Heavens for success

Track ace always aiming higher

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Correspondent

When athletes achieve success they usually thank someone for their fortune. Some thank their coach. Some thank their teammates. Some even thank their m . . m . . .mother, imagine such a thing. And some people thank a Higher Being, God.

Joe Milette, of the University of Massachusetts men's track team, is one of those athletes. He has achieved a great deal of success in cross country and track and each time he competes he said he thanks God for allowing him to do so.

"I'm a born again Christian," said Milette, a junior philosophy major. "I give God all the glory for my running."

Milette has had a lot to be thankful for throughout his running career. His finest moment came Nov. 12 at the Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association meet. Milette finished sixth out of 459 runners. That outstanding effort earned him a chance to go to the NCAA's at Iowa State. "I never imagined placing that high," he said.

"As soon as the gun went off I felt unbelievably good. The first three miles I felt like crying I felt so good."

Qualifying for the NCAA's was a first time experience for Milette; it also led to another first time event.

"Flying to Iowa State was my first plane trip," he said. "I liked it, it was a good experience."

Once the plane touched down Milette focused all his attention on the competition he would be up against. He would be one of 186 runners on the 6.2 mile course. Milette was confident enough in his ability to the point that he felt he could finish in the top 25 runners.

Despite not reaching his expectations, Milette ran a very respectable time of 30:50, good for 75th place, and a finish in the top half of the field.

"I was figuring on placing 25th," he said. "I had the ability to run with the 25th man. A kid from Princeton came in 21st and I had beaten him a week before."

"But just being able to go was enough for me."

As with after every performance Milette thanked God. "All my races no matter how good or bad I thank God for giving me the talent to run," Milette said. "First and foremost is my relationship with God."

Off the course Milette is a level headed, mild mannered person. "Joe's an extremely mature young man," said UMass Track and Cross Country coach Ken O'Brien. "He has real old fashion values. That's refreshing."

The relationship between Milette and O'Brien is a special one with each heaping praise on the other.

"I really respect coach a lot and I think he sees that," said Milette. "I like just dropping by his office and talking with him."

O'Brien talked about what his star meant to the team. "Most good teams have a big gun. Someone who can take the heat. Someone you can count on. Joe's that man for us. He's so consistent others can count on him.

Duke slashes UMass budget

Fourth cut in 16 months

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday ordered a 3 percent cut in the University of Massachusetts budget, forcing reluctant trustees to look for ways to trim spending by about $5 million.

UMass President David C. Knapp said the University will probably increase student fees by up to $50 for the semester that begins in January. The University's 2-week-old hiring freeze will continue, officials said, and layoffs are under discussion, probably at the Boston or Worcester Campuses.

While the Amherst campus can expect $5 million slashing, Boston's campus will lose about $2 million, and Worcester's about $1 million, Knapp told the board of trustees after a 30-minute meeting with Dukakis yesterday afternoon.

Knapp and David N. Oakes, the newly-elected chairman of the board of trustees, had hoped the University would be spared in yesterday's $165 million state budget cut.

The University's budget has already been cut four times in the past 16 months, and its spending has dropped 9.5 percent over the last two years, officials said.

"We're pretty close to the bone already, if not down to the bone," Knapp said. Further cuts, he warned, "could make drastic changes in the nature of the institution." The cash shortage could continue into 1990 and beyond, he added.

There are already 166 vacant jobs at the Boston campus, where enrollment is down by 1,000 and 80 classes have been eliminated, he added.

Amherst campus Chancellor Joseph Duffey said 100 jobs have thus far been cut by attrition. He said he did not think it possible to cut the budget further without harming the quality of higher education.

He said he would propose to trustees next week a plan to avoid layoffs, but plan will result in higher fees for students. But Duffey vowed to make cuts that would affect students as little as possible.

Silkoff, Rabinowitz sue SGA, Judiciary members

By PEDRO PEREIRA
Collegian Staff

Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff yesterday petitioned the Hampshire Superior Court in Northampton for a preliminary injunction against the Student Government Association Supreme Court's barring them from assuming the SGA president's office.

The petition is part of a complaint that alleges the student court "interfered with Jason Rabinowitz's and Shari Silkoff's constitutional rights of free speech and association" by barring them from the office to which they were elected on March 15.

"We found that there was absolutely no alternative for us to get justice," Rabinowitz said. "We had no choice but to file this suit."

Not taking legal action, he added, would be irresponsible because he and Silkoff must stand up for their rights and "the rights of the students that elected us."

The suit was filed by the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, an affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union, with the cooperation of Northampton Attorney Edward Ethereidge.

"We had talked about different courses of action for a while," said Silkoff, adding she and Rabinowitz had kept contact with lawyers since November.

The suit names as defendants former SGA Attorney General Bill Collins, and the following Student Judiciary members: Milind Bharvirkar, Nancy Casey, Pamela Hickey, Lorine Dawe, John P. Sanchez and Kathleen A. White.

The judiciary members last semester served as justices in tribunals that barred Silkoff and Rabinowitz from office and prohibited the Undergraduate Student Senate, the SGA's legislative branch, from ratifying the March 15 election.

Collins filed a petition with the judiciary on March 31 seeking an injunction against Silkoff and Rabinowitz because he said the SGA Constitution bars co-candidates from seeking the president's office.

The lawsuit charges Collins' motivation was "the sole purpose of denying [Silkoff and Rabinowitz] the right to express their political views."

Collins is a defendant not only as former attorney general but also as an individual. Silkoff attributed this to her and Rabinowitz's belief that Collins moved to bar them from office because of his political views.

Here comes the holiday crunch

Loans help shoppers

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

Here are a few holiday facts and figures:

- There are 17 shopping days left until Christmas.
- The price of a technologically advanced men's electric shaver is $54.99 (before tax).
- The average bottle of a woman's perfume is $17.50 (Right. Not the good stuff).
- A warm hooded sweatshirt from the University Store is $36.00.
- A case of Budweiser beer (with holiday trappings on it) costs, on the average, $13.00.
- The average amount of money in any one student's bank account by early December is between $0.00 and $21.53.

With prices, time limits and habits the way they are, the question whistling in the winter wind is, how are students able to do their Christmas shopping this year?

What is amazing is that all but one of the students questioned wanted to do their Christmas shopping in spite of bank accounts of miniscule proportions, exorbitant gift prices, and final exams taking up most of their time.

"Well I'm not going to be stingy," said 18-year-old freshman Cintra Bentley of Brown Residence Hall. Bentley plans to raid her college fund bank account.

At this time of the year the University Store is bustling with as many students as there are sweatshirts to sell in the store.

"There is definitely a noticeable increase in business," said Miles Seaver, Operations Manager at the University Store.

"Everyone is looking for a bargain, you know. Everything sells equally well here," he said of the numerous items emblazoned with the University seal, which he said are popular gift items for family members.

Students more aware of threat of AIDS

By JOHN SWANSON

Student awareness of the AIDS virus and how it is prevented has increased since last year, according to a November survey conducted among University of Massachusetts undergraduates.

The survey was a part of Project PULSE, a series of surveys conducted by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO) for University Health Services. Pam Gonyer, director of health education and supervisor of the survey, said she hopes to release the results by the end of the semester.

SAREO had conducted two previous surveys on AIDS, one in March of 1987, the other in September, 1988. Although Gonyer said she had yet to review the survey data, she was willing to provide some of the results.

Spy-shuttle mission ends in Mojave Desert

HOUSTON (AP) — Atlantis' astronauts returned home under a cover of darkness early yesterday, a fitting finale to their secret space mission during which they reportedly launched a powerful spy satellite into orbit over the Soviet Union.

Atlantis, bruised a lot more than usual, steaked out of orbit Tuesday, completing a four-day space voyage landing on a packed clay runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert.

The military mission, the second shuttle flight since Challenger exploded 34 months ago, was believed to have included deployment of a sophisticated satellite that can peer through clouds and darkness to spy on the Soviets.

The five astronauts' low-key, middle-of-the-night arrival here seemed an appropriate ending to the classified flight, which had been shrouded in secrecy since it launched Friday from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

Despite the crew's 12:50 a.m. arrival, more than 200 people were there to cheer the astronauts and their wives when they stepped off two planes. In contrast, some 5,000 flag-waving spectators greeted the evening return of Discovery's crew in October.

Navy Cmdr. Robert L. Gibson, who guided the 97-ton shuttle to a centerline touchdown Tuesday, was surprised at the early morning turnout.

"I can't believe all of you are out here at one o'clock in the morning," he said. "This is incredible. I expected just a hop in the cars and go.

"It really was a great flight," said Air Force Lt. Col. Guy S. Gradner, who made his first trip into space as Atlantis' pilot. "I think we did a good job for NASA and the space program and think we did some good things for our country."

After making a few brief remarks to the crowd, the astronauts shook hands with other astronauts and then left with their families in vans.

The other crew members were Col. Richard M. Mullane and Lt. Col. Jerry L. Riss of the Air Force and Navy Cmdr. William M. Shepherd.

Before Tuesday's 3:35 p.m. PST landing, NASA and the Air Force only broke their silence twice - to say the crew could proceed with operations and to give 24-hour notice on the landing time.

Mission Control then lifted its curtain of secrecy about an hour before landing to report, as it was happening, that Gibson had fired braking rockets to slow the spaceship's 17,400 mph speed by 283 mph and drop it out of orbit onto an hourlong fiery descent through the atmosphere.

Atlantis landed with as low leak in a tire on its landing gear than NASA previously had said was not a concern. The leak did not seem to effect the smoothness of the touchdown.

As the astronauts and several officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration inspected the shuttle, some damage could be seen to the underside, including "dings" in the black protective tiles. The tiles shown by NASA cameras "appeared to be a lot more damaged than usual," said NASA spokeswoman Nancy Lovato.

The landing was closed to the public because of the flight's classified nature, leaving only a few hundred journalists, invited guests and NASA employees to watch. Some 425,000 spectators witnessed Discovery's landing.

Atlantis' flight was the 27th shuttle mission and the longest of three trips dedicated entirely to military purposes, lasting 4 days, 9 hours and 5 minutes.

Ducks gather by the Campus Pond yesterday afternoon. Unlike many other species of water fowl, these birds do not fly south for the winter.

Ducks quackers over winter home

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Snowstorms and frozen waters this winter will not drive away the ducks surrounding the campus pond, despite some student concern that they may freeze to death, said a professor in the Forestry and Wildlife Department.

Dr. Donald Progulske said if the campus pond freezes over this winter, the ducks will go to the Mill River beyond the intramural fields in Southwest, or to a place where there is open water where they can find food.

"There's open water running there all winter and there's pastures," he said. "You see a lot of ducks in through there."

The ducks are not migratory because humans have created a place for them to live that is favorable all year round, Progulske said.

"They're not truly wild birds," he said. "This is the effect man has had on wildlife. There is always a food supply around all the time," such as popcorn and pieces of bread.

The ducks are heavily covered with down feathers, the material used in garments and quilts, and their legs do not have blood vessels, Progulske said, so they will not become cold.

The freezing water in the campus pond also does not affect the ducks because their feathers are covered with oil, he said, which causes the water to simply roll off.

But, the ducks will sometimes suffocate if their nostrils "ice up" and they are unable to breathe, Progulske said, adding it was unlikely that this would happen here.

One result of the ducks' failure to migrate is interbreeding, causing some of the birds to have "crazy genetic colors," he said.

"They're interbreeding an awful lot," Progulske said. "Some ducks are all white and some are light colored. It's not natural plumage."

The odd-colored ducks are not in danger on campus, he said, but if they were out in the wild they may be attacked by a fox or raccoon since they do not blend in with the vegetation.

Students surrounding the pond yesterday voiced concern as to the ducks' welfare and some volunteered to start a program this winter to insure the ducks will be fed.

"I would work on something," freshman Daniel Shapiro said. "I like the ducks."

Junior Cathy Campbell said, "I've been told that (the ducks) don't get hurt by the cold — but gosh, if they're going to get frozen I want them to be taken care of."

Some students were less than sympathetic to the ducks' plight this winter.

"They can fly," said junior Daniel Cooper. "I don't see why they don't go anywhere — except that they're fat."

Rate increase may not affect student loans

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

A top official in Financial Aid Services at the University of Massachusetts feels the prime lending rate increase to 10.5 percent will not affect student ability to negotiate an education loan.

The prime lending rate, or prime rate, reflects a bank's cost of borrowing money, including interest it pays on savings accounts or certificates of deposit, and trails more subtle increases in other interest rates.

Although the increase of half percentage point, the fourth rise this year, makes the prime rate the highest it has been since mid-1985, Arthur Jackson, director of Financial Aid Services, said it may be just a seasonal adjustment and should not affect student ability to obtain or manage a loan.

About 10,000 students at the University receive education loans each year.

"The rates for student loans actually haven't gone up yet and are only indirectly tied to the prime rate figure," Jackson said.

Education loans are tied more closely to the T-bill, or treasury note, than to the prime rate. Fluctuations in the prime rate affect the ability of the Federal government to insure loans, and may prompt them to adjust the loaning rate. Consequently, if it costs the Federal government more to insure loans, students must pay more.

"The rates for the Guaranteed Student Loan and other loans like PLUS, a parent-oriented loan, are set annually, and in the 17 years I have worked in the Financial Aid Office I have never seen it rise more than one percent," Jackson said.

Jackson explained existing loans will not be affected by the increase, only loans negotiated after the increase was implemented. The prime rate may fall back down in 1989, he added.

"I hope it is not indicative of a steady increase. There are provisions to insure the loan rate does not rise too high too fast," he said.

Jackson said he feels the increase occurred because many people are unsure of how the economy will unfold in the next year.

According to an Associated Press report, economists had been predicting a prime rate increase because interest rates in the bond markets had risen recently due to inflation fears and the dollar's weakness in foreign exchange markets.

The prime rate is watched carefully by bankers who use it as a basis for calculating loans to businesses and for determining many types of fixed and adjustable-rate consumer loans.

Economists were uncertain as to what effect the latest increase would have on the economy, and more specifically, on consumer's spending during the holiday season.

SGA approves budget after questionable meeting

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Seante last night easily approved the fiscal year 1990 budget for the $2 million Student Activites Trust Fund, but three senators and one student objected to some of the methods used in passing the budget.

At about 8:45 p.m., Speaker Robert Fadel called for a half-hour recess to discuss "how amendments to the budget will be presented."

The senate reconvened at about 9:30 and the budget was quickly approved.

During the recess, a meeting was held between several senators from the right and left who apparently worked out a compromise on the budget.

"Tonight in a really underhanded manner, full representation was sold for convenience and expediency," said Sen. John Dunlap. "Granted, it made the budget process much easier, but it allowed some senators to be elevated to a more important position."

Fadel defended the meeting, saying, "Nothing was changed behind closed doors, everyting was changed on the senate floor."

Wheeler House Sen. Dan Chesnicka also disagreed with the meeting, saying it did not take into account all points of view on the budget.

"I understand what Robert was trying to do, and I respect what he was doing . . . but my constituency definitely wasn't represented in that meeting."

Junior Clarinda Rose-Turner, a member of the Commuter Area Governing Board, agreed.

"I don't think certain factions should decide what the whole budget is going to be. It's not representative of the entire senate."

Sen. Ari Weinstein said the meeting was "acknowledging that the egos are the deciding force in the senate."

The senators who complained about the meeting, however, said they had no problems with the approved budget, only with the way it was worked out.

Jessica Mitchell, Budgets Committee chairperson, said, "I can understand people having problems with that meeting, but we didn't vote on anything, we simply tried to determine what were the reasonable amendments." Mitchell said she was surprised the senate passed the budget so easily.

As for the budget itself, a proposal was scrapped which would have established a new research agency similar to the now-defunct Student Center for Research and Advocacy.

The proposal axed by the senate was a charter for the new Undergraduate Reseach Center, which was allotted more than $26,000 in the budget. The money that would have been used for the center will be put into a special "financial reserves" account which can only be doled out by the senate should it reach an agreement on a new research agency or see fit to use the money for some other purpose.

Mitchell was unconcerned the charter did not pass. "That was an attempt at compromise," she said. "We saw there were problems with the URC."

Amherst College thanks UMass with a serenade

By ANTHONY PADOVANO
Collegian Staff

Under the star-filled sky of a crisp winter night the holiday spirit spread across campus Tuesday as hundreds of voices, initiated by Amherst College students, sang the songs of Christmas and celebration.

About 100 carolers from Amherst College assembled at 10:15 p.m. at Converse Hall and marched to the pyramids in the Southwest Residential Area, thus beginning a night when Amherst students could pay back University of Massachusetts students for their "friendly spirit."

Homer Robinson, a sophomore Board of Governors member at Amherst College, organized the event in response to a large group of UMass students who marched to Amherst College late Sunday night to sing carols in the first snowfall of the year.

"It was a ballsy move by [UMass students]. One good turn deserves another. We wanted to show them we appreciated it," he said, "I think a tradition has been started and I think it will stick."

State representative files bill to limit use of student fees

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

State Rep. Stan Rosenberg filed a bill yesterday which, if passed, would prevent students from paying for buildings such as the new sports arena and the Campus Center.

If approved, the move would limit the use of student fees at all state colleges and universities, including the University of Massachusetts, to facilities like dormitories and dining halls.

Rosenberg, a representative from Amherst and a UMass alumnus, said he first got the idea for the bill about two weeks ago, with UMass in mind, specifically, the soon-to-be-built hockey arena.

With the University facing a possible 3 to 5 percent budget cut, many students have expressed outrage that the school would use state money for a hockey rink, instead of using it for academic purposes.

However, Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor for administration and finance, said in the beginning of the semester that the money UMass received for the complex is not transferrable to any other project.

After a four year appeal, UMass was granted $25 million in state funds for the multipurpose arena, which will accom-

Feminist claims women victimized by abortions

By SHARON WILKEY
and JANINE WARNER
Collegian Staff

There is nothing more degrading to a woman's self esteem than abortion, according to a member of Feminists For Life, who spoke to seven people in a lecture last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Rachel Cann, who became active in Feminists For Life in 1984, said the group was formed by ex-members of the National Organization for Women after they were thrown out for their anti-abortion activism. The national group now has 900 members.

Cann said her self esteem became permanently injured after she had a "back street" abortion in 1962, when the practice was illegal. "My mind became a sieve," she said, "and my nights became filled with nightmares about blood."

The catalyst for her work as a pro-life activist, she said, was the 1984 suicide of her 16-year-old foster daughter who had had an abortion 6 months earlier.

Cann, who does not advocate birth control, said she thinks abortions should be illegal. "It boggles my mind that in this state a minor can't get their ears pierced without parental permission, but an abortion — no sweat."

Cann later said she was not aware that it is illegal for minors to receive abortions in Massachusetts without parental or judicial consent.

Fewer women would have abortions if there were places they could get support, Cann said. "It is a sad fact that in this country today there are a mere 200 shelters for women who choose to carry their babies to term."

Abortion has become a major industry, she said, claiming that abortion clinics do not care about the women they serve and are only interested in making money.

While Feminists for Life does not support Operation Rescue, a militant anti-abortion group which has recently demonstrated at several abortion clinics in Massachusetts, Cann said she works with the group.

Cann, who participated in what she called a rescue two weeks ago in Brookline, said she does not believe reports that 16 women got past demonstrators to have abortions.

"Who in their right mind would go through an army of people, where they could possibly get hurt, when they could make an appointment the next day?" she said.

"We have a long fight, girls," Cann said. "We're going to close every one of those clinics and they can't stop us."

■ suit

Collins refused to comment on the lawsuit yesterday because, "I've sought counsel and they indicated that I shouldn't respond until I've read the full text of the charges."

However, Speaker of the Senate Robert Fadel and SGA Treasurer Laura Filkins issued a written statement in the afternoon responding to the lawsuit.

"It seems that Rabinowitz and Silkoff have decided that their personal cause is far more important than the Student Government Association, the Student Activities Trust Fund, and student empowerment on this campus," the statement reads.

"While Silkoff and Rabinowitz may have been wronged, their personal battle is simply not worth the sacrifice," it continues. "Vanity is not justification for the wanton disregard of students' rights."

After issuing the statement, Fadel and Filkins said they weren't absolutely sure the lawsuit had been filed. But, Filkins said, "There've been rumors going around here for the past week or so about Shari and Jason talking to lawyers."

Filkins added she learned that a news conference had been scheduled for this morning, which led her to believe Silkoff and Rabinowitz would indeed file the suit.

of the year. Over the last two years, more than $9,000 worth of damage has been done to Amherst College.

But that was not the case this year.

When the carolers began to sing on the pyramids, some of the students in the towers tried to drown out the carolers with loud rock music but the Amherst students remained undaunted and were soon joined by UMass students.

As the number of carolers began to swell, the leaders of the group rallied the crowd and headed North across Southwest, through Haigis Mall and up to the Central and Orchard Hill Residence Areas, stopping wherever they encountered someone to sing to. By the time the gathering reached the Orchard Hill Bowl, the comfortable throng had grown to about 250.

Amherst student Erica Kornberg said she was caroling because she wanted to do her part in breaking down barriers.

"I've felt for a long time that it is time to foster better feelings between the two colleges. The bad attitudes going back and forth are not really based on anything . . . We're all just a bunch of 18 to 22-year-olds," she said.

UMass senior political science major Bill Adams said, "It's nice to get together with a whole bunch of people and have fun rather than doing damage."

Tim Bohn, an Amherst senior, said he has taken part in both the snowball fights and the caroling and said the caroling is better for the two schools.

"The snowball fights were usually in pretty good spirits and very competitive, but I'd rather be caroling because the consequences of [caroling] are much better than with the snowball fight."

At each stop on the way to Sylvan, the crowd mixed singing Silent Night and White Christmas and other holiday favorites with pleas to those in residence halls to "Join us." Every time somebody succumbed to the warmhearted call, they were greeted by a thunderous cheer.

When the crowd reached the Orchard Hill Bowl, the carolers formed a circle around the sunken area, held it for a moment, then rushed to the center where they resumed caroling and laughing.

The crowd was not limited to Christmas carols either. While in the Bowl, an unidentified man on the sixth floor of Grayson Residence Hall began playing the Star Spangled Banner, a la Jimi Hendrix, on electric guitar. The crowd didn't miss a beat and joined in the singing the national anthem.

UMass Police Department Lt. Steve Warren, who was on the scene with about six other officers and security guards as well as three student security supervisors, said the crowd was well behaved. "We're just following along to make sure something doesn't get out of hand . . . . We'd love them to do this every year — without snow," he said.

Robinson organized the carolers at Amherst College by sending all the students a letter and making a plea to them in the dining commons. The letter read:

"Recognizing that the students of UMass did a totally cool thing by serenading us Sunday midnight;

"Aware of the fact that, generally, personal relations between our two institutions are more strained . . . than they ought to be, and their initiation of friendly spirit took gumption;

"Cognizant of the fact that one good turn deserves another and that lack of reciprocation merely reinforces negative generalizations. . .;

"We resolve: to return the gesture and overwhelm them in kind with our spirit and good cheer. . . ."

When asked if he was satisfied with the results of the evening Robinson said, "This is beautiful. I have to say at the start, with so few people, I didn't think it would work out so well. When we're done here, this might continue at our college."

Rock legend Roy Orbison dies at 52

On Tuesday, December 7, in Hendersonville, Tennessee, rock 'n' roll legend Roy Orbison died of a massive cardiac arrest. He was 52.

Orbison who is famous for songs like "Only The Lonely," "Pretty Woman" and "Crying," was, along with Elvis and Buddy Holly, one of the early pioneers of rock'n'roll.

His remarkable voice, which in its high ranges had an almost operatic intensity, was perfectly suited to the "epic" ballad style of his songwriting, and lent it an almost obsessional quality. It was this quality which led David Lynch to employ Orbison's song "In Dreams" as the theme for psychotic Frank Booth, played by Dennis Hopper in the 1986 film Blue Velvet.

Among those Orbison has influenced include Bruce Springsteen and Elvis Costello, both of whom joined him on stage earlier this year in New York, in a tribute to the great man.

Most recently Orbison worked with Bob Dylan, George Harrison, Jeff Lynne and Tom Petty in a project entitled "The Travelling Wilburys," whose debut single "Handle Me With Care" is currently climbing Billboard's charts. The group were due to embark upon a tour next year.

Roy Orbison will be sadly missed, but his legend will live on, immortalized by the records which have reserved him a unique position in the annals of rock history. So long, Big O. In dreams we walk with you.

Nutcracker, De Camera singers, highlight weekend

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Three performances will be coming to the area this weekend.

First, the Pioneer Valley Ballet will present its 12th annual production of The Nutcracker at the Academy of Music in Northampton, on Dec.10-11 and 17-18. Tickets will be available at the Center for the Arts in Northampton.

The cast of over 250 dancers includes several guest dancers from professional companies such as the Eliot Feld Ballet, the Berkshire Ballet and the American Ballet Theater. Members of the host company include Jana Fugate and Megan Bonneau.

Next, on Sunday, Dec. 11, the Da Camera Singers, a 28 voice chorus under the direction of Gregory Hayes, will perform a concert of a cappella sacred and seasonal music on Sunday, Dec.11 at 3 p.m. at St. Mary of the Assumption Church in Northampton. It will also be held at the Amherst Unitarian Society on North Pleasant Street in Amherst on Friday, Dec.16 at 8:15 p.m.

Featured in the program is music from the 16th to the 20th centuries, most notably a performance of Ralph Vaughan-Williams' mass for eight-part choir and soloists. Admission is free for each performance, but donations will be accepted.

Finally, Smith College is presenting pianist Vladimir Tropp, a distinguished Soviet performer and scholar, will be giving a recital on Sunday, Dec.11 at 2:30 p.m. at Sage Hall, Smith College. Admission is free.

Tropp, who teaches at the prestigious Gnessin Music School in Moscow, is best known for his interpretation of music by such Russian composers as Scriabin, Medtner and Rachmaninoff. His appearance at Smith this fall ended years of negotiations with the Soviet government for permission. Joining him in the recital will be Giovina Sessions and Marcia Harbison, violin; Barbara Wright, viola and John Sessions, cello.

Sharpe sounds of jazz on Friday

UMass graduate makes it big

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Special to the Collegian

Jazz bassist Avery Sharpe will appear with a trio this Friday at the Bluewall Cafe to open up a five-band multicultural evening of music sponsored by WMUA, FM 91.1. Although Sharpe is a Belchertown resident, he definitely does not fit the category of "local artist."

His techniques on acoustic and electric bass are astounding and reveal a wide variety of influences: playing arco (bowed) bass while singing along in unison a la Slam Stewart, strumming the bass like a flamenco guitar a la Jimmy Garrison (bassist with John Coltrane), and playing incredibly fast yet well-articulated solo passages on electric bass a la Stanely Clarke. However, his overall approach is uniquely Avery Sharpe. Compositionally, he refuses to confine himself to any one aspect of the jazz tradition: his material runs the gamut from Bop to Afro-Brazilian to Fusion.

Critics have called Sharpe a "Young Lion" of jazz. This epithet refers to a new breed of talented musicians, many of whom have had the luxury of developing their skills in university or conservatory settings, rather than having to endure years of street scuffling. Perhaps the best-known "Young Lion" is trumpeter Wynton Marsalis. Sharpe got is education right here at UMass, under the tutelage of Fred Tillis, Archie Shepp and Max Roach among others.

Sharpe has appeared throughout the world with major jazz legends like Shepp, Marsalis, Art Blakey, and McCoy Tyner; despite this, Sharpe feels he is "still young in the music." However judging from his performances on record (he just released his debut album Unspoken Words on Sunnyside records) and especially his five-piece group's exciting performance last Saturday night at Hampshire College, Sharpe already has a lot to say on his instruments and as a composer.

The two musicians who will complete Sharpe's trio at the Bluewall on Friday also have connections to UMass. Avery's brother Kevin, currently a UMass undergraduate, will play drums, while Clyde Criner, who earned his PH.D. in music here and who has several albums out under his own name, will be on keyboards.

If the audience's reaction at Hampshire last Saturday is any indication, the trio's set should be thrilling for jazz fans as well as those new to the music. And if you enjoy Friday's performance, look for Sharpe to appear with McCoy Tyner at the Iron Horse in February.

Bill Rosenblatt is production director at WMUA.

Leads discuss Getting Out

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO, II
Collegian Correspondent

What is Getting Out all about? Recently, the actresses playing the two leads in this drama by Marsha Norman explained how they interpreted the play and prepared for their roles.

The play focuses on Arlene, a woman who is released from prison after eight years and is trying to come to terms with and exorcise her past. She wishes to re-enter society, get on with her life and start all over again. Arlene, played by graduated UMass theater major Jami Miller, was imprisoned for murder, drugs and prostitution.

"Arlene is an angry woman," explained Miller, "but she is determined to do something with her life. She has an inner strength to draw on."

Jennifer Lavenhar, a senior theater major, plays Arlene's 50-year old mother.

"She's a very bitter woman," Lavenhar said. "She is bitter about Arlene and thinks her daughter is a burden she does not deserve."

Lavenhar said she had to do a lot of research on her role. "I have never done a 50-year old woman. I had to read about the horror of incest."

Both actresses agreed that the rehearsals were very difficult. Miller said Arlene was a very intense part to portray. "It was sometimes difficult to shake off the anger and the emotions that came out in rehearsal," she said.

Lavenhar said delving into her character was also difficult. "It is a dangerous side of life to explore."

Miller and Lavenhar both said they are glad that the Department of Theater chose this performance.

"It needs to be done," Lavenhar said. "It inspires thought in people. I feel it is a real life play for a lot of people."

Miller agreed: "The play makes you feel for someone . . . it's very understanding."

The ending of the play is open to interpretation. Lavenhar and Miller said they believe that there is a glimmer of hope left in Arlene's life. They feel Arlene has a chance to come to terms with the past. Much is left to the audience because there are a lot of unanswered questions. However, neither actresses thought it was a tragedy.

Find out for yourself when Getting Out, by Marsha Norman, opens at the Rand Theater tonight. The play will run from Dec. 8-10 and again Dec. 14-17 at 8 p.m. For tickets call 545-2511.

Fox's techno-sex pop not much fun

By SCOTT NAUNCE
Collegian Correspondent

Samantha Fox
I Want To Have Some Fun
Jive/RCA

"Hello, it's me again," Samantha Fox lilts on the beginning of the title track to her latest album I Want To Have Some Fun, another dose of synth-pop dance tunes. Fox again employs Full Force — who did Fox's former hit "Naughty Girls (Need Love Too)" — as well as the Stock/Aitken/Waterman team (Rick Astley) and Rick Zarr (Debbie Gibson) to produce a new set of Latin-influenced teenage techno-rock club music.

At least the music industry's being fairly honest about what Fox is doing. In fact, they boast about it. They put out the facts behind Fox's blatant sexuality, and play on it, but then they add that she has the talent to maintain a career. From the looks of it, she shows little effort on the LP except add an occasional carefree lilt or coy sigh — it's hard to see if there's any talent in that. Where she supposedly put out so much creative effort to actually have written — oh, this astounds — one of the songs on the album herself, she actually co-wrote it with two other professional writers.

For all the help she gets from big-name producers and players, the album is pretty plain. It falls into the formulaic sameness that has taken over all the glossy overproduced dance music made these forces: the producers, the formula of the music that's guaranteed to sell, and it sounds just like half a dozen artist doing the same things. She might boast that she's back, but we might as well listen to her last album and been happy. It's not art; its' the musical equivalent of a cookie-cutter Harlequin romance.

But that does sell; you'll be sure to see her dancing in tight Spandex on MTV. It sells predominately to 14-year old "wanna be" girls because it talks about "Boys" and that is boys with a capital "B." And for all the griping about the supreme mindlessness of this techno-sex teenage music, this kind of music has always been around — the sugary stuff for kids. For what it is, it's good fun dance music for a slumber party.

However, the fact remains that students never seem to be able to make ends meet the way they would like them to, no matter how big the sales are or how much they can save on a subscription to Time (free desk organizer included).

There are a few ways for students to provide funding for the holidays. One is the PLP, or Parent Loan Program, which can be used to fully fund or subsidize an ailing student's bankbook. Loans may vary from $50 to $300 with the payback rate incredible and the interest nil.

Karen Morris, an 18-year-old freshman from John Adams Residence Hall, was not to be left out of the bargains at the store and was avidly sifting through the different styles of sweat clothes.

"My mother gave me some money from both her and my father during Thanksgiving break to do some shopping," Morris said, adding that many of the people she was buying for would appreciate the sweatshirts.

The PLP is a popular method of obtaining Christmas presents among the students the Collegian contacted.

Sophomore John Thomas has contracted to get $50 from his parents to do his shopping when he gets home. (He gets that in cash and only has to show one form of ID).

Of course there is another method — the work for your money plan — in which the parent also plays a role.

"I have a penny in my coat pocket and that's about all," said Joanne Falla, an 18-year-old student from Coolidge Residence Hall and employee at the University Store.

"I have to shop for six people. I can't even use my discount here because I have to wait until I can work at my father's law office at home," she said.

Karen Anderson, 19-year-old sophomore also from Coolidge Residence Hall, laughingly suggested making enemies around Thanksgiving to cut down on the number of people for whom to buy gifts. She is depending on the checks she earns working at the Kennedy cluster office, and scoffs at the idea that one can save money up while at the University.

Then there was the remarkable case of Michelle Keane, an 18-year-old freshman from Crampton Residence Hall.

She managed not only to save her money, but to stave off cashing any of the paychecks she got from her job in the Munchies Store in Southwest. Then again, she did mention something about a large phone bill.

Which brings us to the next point. The rare student who has money at this time is either not supposed to touch it or will still shop despite impending credit rating penalties.

"I'm already in debt. I'll put off the bills for a month or so," said John Halladay, a graduate student in the microbiology department. "I'll be buying gifts with my stipend check. Of course, they won't be as good as if it was a bigger stipend check," he said.

Most of the students said they would spend more money on gifts if they could only get hold of some.

The spirit of Christmas is alive and well, even in impoverished college students. Why not order dad a "Christmas" pizza and have it delivered. (Most places deliver for free!).

Parked car damaged

By THOMAS RODRIGUES
Collegian Staff

The roommate of a student who had parked his car at the circle drive south of Baker Residence Hall noticed Tuesday the car had been pushed against a curb, causing extensive damage to the vehicle and bending one of the wheels underside. Damage was estimated at $3,000.

In other police reports:

- A janitor reported a vacuum cleaner worth $100 had been stolen from the door area of a Totman trailer.
- A 10-speed bicycle worth $275 was reported stolen from a sign post it was chained to Tuesday at Worcester Dining Commons.
- A BMX style bicycle worth $270 was reported stolen from a bicycle rack at Gorman Residence Hall Tuesday.
- A wallet containing personal property and cash worth $60 was reported stolen Tuesday from a jacket in Totman gymnasium.
- A Resident Assistant in Washington Residence Hall observed a stove travelling up and down in an elevator. After attempting to contact the Resident Director, he returned to find the stove missing from where he'd seen it previously.

A check of the fifth floor lounge/kitchen revealed the stove had been stolen from there.

It's enlightening, lively, exasperating . . . it's UMass

Ahh, college. An institution of higher learning. Well, that's half right, anyway. The University of Massachusetts is definitely an institution. Call me crazy, but some of the qualities of this school strike me (a considerably well-adjusted, sober freshman from Connecticut) as looney.

Granted, anytime that 25,000 students plus faculty and staff live together for an extended period, your bound for some unique occurrences and little quirks – but I think UMass has something . . . special, a style all our own. Yes, I honestly feel that UMass is touched.

Let's start with the mess hall. I call it that not for sanitary reasons. Actually the DCs' seem remarkably clean. They are none the less a mess concerning the service side of the deal. If you're the linebacker for the football team – you still get the same size portion as the 5-foot-2-inch, 95-pound woman next to you. If you want more, come back. I do sympathize with their problem, there is a lot of waste. I just feel that perhaps the extremes should be broadened.

"May I please have two scoops of tuna with that pocket, one doesn't really fill it."

"I'm sorry, but you may only have one scoop at a time. If you would like seconds, come back."

"Ma'am, you don't understand, I'm not talking about seconds, I wish to eat them both at the same time."

"I'm sorry, but you must come back when you've finished what you have."

"I can't finish this without two scoops! We're not dealing with firsts or seconds, just firsts."

"You'll have to."

"Never mind, give me a hot dog . . . can I get two of those?"

Dan Miller

This is a true story, mind you. I agree with their point, but not their implementation. Let's have a little leeway, hmmm?

Next the laundry room. This is John Adams Tower. A dorm with between 500 and 550 students. There are eight or nine washing machines. This is not very conducive to frequent washing of clothes. (That's eight or nine if they're all working – not bloody likely.)

Lastly, our administration, and student body in general. You just gotta love those 18, 19, and 20 year olds, complaining about a strict alcohol policy. Considering that it's against the law for them to drink, the administration's policy is pretty lenient. If I were them I'd keep my mouth shut, not draw attention, and perhaps the policy won't get worse. When I start losing my right to drink alcohol, I'll complain. At this point I've only been inconvenienced by the loss of a privilege the University has given me. (They write me up, the police arrest me.)

The administration is by far not innocent, however, their legal services position comes to mind, as does the Halloween guest policy, the locking of dorm doors on weekend days, etc. The administration is acting "in loco parentis" to us while we're at school. That's very considerate of them, except that the majority of the students that go to school here are over 18, and therefore are legally responsible for their own lives. "Loco Parentis" may work in high school, but not here.

The student body has parties on Thursday nights, and therefore have problems in class on Friday. They draw swastikas on almost every stall door in JA. The Jews are upset at the Afro-Americans due to the desire to have Farrakhan speak. The Afro-Americans are upset because they feel he would be a positive influence on morale.

On Dec. 2, both JA and Coolidge Tower had fire alarms before 3 a.m. There will probably be one tonight.

So, you tell me, with all these distractions, how is anyone supposed to learn anything at college?

Just my opinion

Watch over UMass for me

Here it is. The end of another semester. For me it is my seventh. I have three more to go. (Three cheers for the five-year plan.) It is at this time I feel it necessary to give the campus some advice to think about for next semester.

Peter Leon

First, and foremost, watch the state government. It has just hacked and slashed the budget of our University. The state is afraid the Bank of Boston is going to repo the capital building in Boston because it can't stay within the budget and has to keep borrowing money to stay afloat. The effects of these cuts are going to be harsh. We are going to lose some faculty positions at a time when we need more classes, classrooms, and thus more faculty to teach these classes in these classrooms. Maybe during the break you could drop a line to your state rep. to help save our educations.

Second, watch your elected student reps. Remember these people control over more than $2 million of our money. So when ever they make a decision it is probably going to cost you money. Also, go to a Senate meeting; see how your representatives act. If they are acting like buffoons tell them, or let them know if you think they are acting with the dignity and respect they should, or if they are just wasting time, yelling and acting like childish brats.

Third, next semester there are going to be new elections for the student trustee and SGA president. The office of trustee to me is more important and so the person elected should be the best we have to offer. The student trustee is a voting member of the Board of Trustees, and is even sworn into office by the Governor, so this person holds a great deal of power. This person must be rational, competent, and above all be able to present the views of the students to the other trustees so as not to offend them.

As for the president's office, I can only hope a person who can bring leadership to this campus and solidify the student body is elected. Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff would have been excellent choices, unfortunately they could never get their ratification through the circus . . . oops, I mean senate.

Fourth, watch the administration. They may make nice-nice with us, but usually it is a facade it seems. They do what they want with little or no student input. It beguiles me, because I get the feeling they constantly forget that they are here for us. That merits repeating:

The Administration is here to enhance student life not to diminish it with absurd policies about how we live our lives

Remember in the past few years they have phased out co-ed bathrooms and all alcohol on campus. Next it could be the concerts or perhaps co-ed dorms.

Lastly, remember what we are here for – learning. This does not necessarily mean only what goes on in a classroom. Learning should, and hopefully does take place every moment of the day. Learning about other people can teach you more than you'll ever learn in a classroom, it might even teach some how to be civil.

Well, there you have it. My advice column. Take care of the campus for me next semester. You see I'm going on exchange to France. UMass has a lot of problems, and though they won't all be solved while I'm away, I hope no new ones erupt.

Till fall of 1989, I'll be seeing you in the funny pages. . .

Making a difference takes energy and time

"It doesn't matter what I think, they (the federal, state or campus government) are going to do what they want to do, anyway."

"I'm not going to vote, because my vote won't change anything."

Too often I hear my friends make disparaging comments about government. The United States has done an especially good job at raising a generation of people who lost faith in their political doctrine. People feel they can have no effect on the system.

Perhaps growing up during the '70s and '80s, many of us internalized the controversies and scandals like Watergate and the Iran-Contra affair. Though at the time I was more concerned about why I had to watch John Halderman instead of Hogan's Heroes, the images of powerful people denying accusations in courtroom settings stayed with me.

Each president since I was child carried a derogatory reputation: Nixon was "not a crook," Ford a "bumbler," and Carter an "incompetent." President Reagan and his administration took urine tests to prove they "just said NO to drugs" while subsidizing one of the biggest cocaine traffickers in the world, Gen. Noriega. Our generation, fed on corruption, learned they couldn't trust their leaders.

Clarinda Rose-Turner

For many years, election fed the fear that the people have no control in who they elect. Both sides centered their campaigns upon the other person being unqualified for president. Polls showed Americans voting for the "lesser of the two evils," instead of the best candidate. Thus, only 49 percent of the public bothered to vote, showing how we became unmotivated, uncaring and frighteningly apathetic.

To regain faith we need to regain the notion that we matter. A single vote among millions feels as though it makes scant difference, but a voice with a view generally finds an attentive ear. Talking or writing to our representatives makes a difference.

This summer I called Rep. Conte's office to help lobby for the bill which would begin to make the pay of state contracted human service workers comparable to what the state pays its own workers. His office researched the bill for me and recorded my opinion to forward to my representative.

My point is that concern and interest breed change. Whether you want to revolutionize or revitalize the existing system, it needs your energy. What needs to happen in America is the renewed belief, the renewed knowledge, that we are the government.

Palestine bashing not appreciated

I must say that I found the cartoon in the Collegian (Dec. 5) by Bob Gorrell very offensive. Gorrell, who is a syndicated cartoonist, has the right to express himself as he pleases, for he is protected by the First Amendment. I must question, however, the judgement of the Collegian staff to run such a cartoon that obviously bashes Palestinians and questions their sincerity in desiring a peaceful settlement to the West Bank turmoil. Drawings like these do not help to alleviate the situation, they can only serve to make people more divided over this serious and tragic conflict.

'M' is for mouth

Killer toys, fashion plates plague X-mas

Here it is folks, that time of year when snow falls, roads get slushy and people wait in long lines to buy their loved ones gifts. Yes, it is the holiday season, Santa Claus is coming to town and all that jazz. I don't think I want to have kids, simply because I'd have to risk life and limb every December fighting icy roads and not-so-jolly crowds to buy the brats presents.

Pamela McCarthy

Well, if any of you do have kids, or very young siblings, nephews, or nieces, and you haven't a clue as to what to get them, relax. I'll tell you what's hot and what's not with the brats – uh, I mean, the cute littel imps.

For hyperactive tykes who like to do wholesome things, like setting fire to furniture and pretending they are members of the Manson Family, you may want to buy a Freddy Krueger glove. Yep, that's right, you too can encourage a homocidal psycho-case to act out the most heinous crimes. Let them slice and dice the family dog with the glove. Let your kid be the first on the block to be charged with murder.

Oh, so your kid's into war, huh? Well, horror and death can be fun – ask GI Joe and Rambo. There are all sorts of fun things to buy for this type. Machine guns, hand guns, machetes, Chinese stars, booby traps – hey, maybe by next Christmas they'll even get a mine field. Sure, why not? They could even have gory plastic limbs that could be strewn about for effect. Of course, you'll need the right clothes with it, and most stores have their share of fatigues, helmets, masks, and war paint. What parent wouldn't want their kid to run around the neighborhood with a machine gun, army fatigues, and green stuff smeared on his face while yelling war cries?

For those of you with humble children who'd rather play war in a different setting, you can always buy them dolls – oops, I'm sorry, I forgot, most people who play with these things are boys, and they insist they don't play with dolls. They are ACTION FIGURES. Sure they are.

Do you want to teach your child the fine points of fashion? Get the dolls (yes, they are called dolls this time) that have it all. You can buy Jem, a rock star doll with pink hair and tacky aluminum foil clothing. You can get Barbie, a tall, leggy, tan, anorexic Beverly Hills beach bum who has the omnipresent grunt named Ken at her side. There are many different moods to Barbie. She's a rocker, a doctor, a tourist, a businessperson, a partier . . . poor Ken can barely keep up. But who cares – Barbie always looks great and wears the best and trendiest clothing. Give your kid the gift that keeps on giving – neurosis. Hang-ups about your looks can be fun!

Does your kid have a love complex? If this is the case, get a Rainbow Brite doll. She loves you. She loves her friends. She just loves everyone. She could give a kid sugar shock. Turning your child into a sap can be lots of fun, so buy two. For even more fun, get the kid with the Freddy Krueger claws to play with it.

The little chef in your life will just die over fake plastic food. It looks real, it looks tasty, the packaging even looks like the authentic supermarket stuff. Some of it looks raw until you put it in water – then it becomes "cooked." The drawback to this is that the kid will get hungry, shuffle into the kitchen, and whine about the lack of any good food for an hour or so. If it's not your kid, and the parents drive you crazy, go for it.

And laugh real hard.

Last but not least is the "I-want-my-kid-to-be-a-genius" genre of toys. Computer games, spelling games, flashcards, tapes, the list is endless. Buy the kid a $5,000 computer and watch it gather dust. Get a pack of flashcards and watch the little brat – uh, I mean, cherub – turn every card in to a paper airplane.

These are my suggestions. Happy Holidays, and peace be with you. Really.

Social awareness breeds new problem

When I came here in the fall, I was surprised at how much work the University was doing to promote racial and ethnic harmony. I can honestly say I have learned many new ideas.

But my appreciation stops there. When striving for social awareness turns into an oppression of others, it's no better than the discrimintation it was trying to eliminate in the first place.

For example, on Oct. 11, the LBGA celebrated National Coming-Out Day. I have no problem with that, as they are people and share in the rights that all people have. But when they choose as their symbol of support something that most people consider commonplace (that is, jeans), that's oppression. Granted this lasted for only a day, but my point is that people shouldn't be forced into voicing a "support/no support" position for a cause.

Recently, I have learned that I can no longer refer to Christmas as "Christmas," because some people don't celebrate it. And I can no longer refer to "Santa Claus" as the jolly old elf who brings presents to little kids, because some cultures don't believe in a Santa Claus. Now I don't know if these are actual University policies or not, but I find them offensive.

I don't mind if someone celebrates some other holiday or nothing at all, and I don't mind if a Santa Claus does or doesn't exist in their culture. I can respect that. But I celebrate Christmas with Santa Claus, and I just ask for the same respect.

I think we all have something to learn from such things as Civility Day. It isn't about social awareness, racial and ethnic harmony, or even commemorating a racial clash which hopefully will never be repeated. It's about being civil to one another, treating people as people. You don't have to be aware of racial, cultural, or ethnic differences to do it. You just have to be respectful.

WMUA is trying to be diverse

I would like to address several points raised in your article ("BMCP wants more hours, self-determination," Dec. 5) about the Black Mass Communication Project.

WMUA has serious concerns about allowing BMCP or any other group to teach prospective members station policy and train them in the use of our equipment. In the eyes of the Federal Communication Commission, WMUA is ultimately responsible for what goes over its airwaves. Having one consistent training process is the only way we can ensure overall sound quality and compliance with rules and regulations, as well as introduce station unity and loyalty. Our intention is not to discriminate against anyone or to discourage participation in the training process. This semester alone, approximately one-fifth of the trainees were third world students. Next semester Director of Third World Affairs Kevin Mitchell will take over one-third of WMUA's training duties.

The article also expressed concern with the number of BMCP DJ's on the air. We, too, would like greater participation from the third world community. But participateion in WMUA is more than just being a DJ. It means being a part of the sports or news departments, working on the biannual program guide, and much more.

WMUA is committed to diversity in its programming. Nowhere is this commitment expressed more strongly than in black music. We must disagree with Rich Gray of BMCP, who maintains that "'rap,' 'house and club,' and 'slow jams' offer a sufficient variety." Perhaps it is sufficient for a certain segment of the community. But WMUA must provide airtime for others too.

We do not just support the culture of African-Americans. We also program the music of Latin America, Polish America, and Jewish culture as well as seeking various world cultures. Unfortunately, we have limited programming time and many groups and individuals are often frustrated. But as we become more diverse, everyone is forced to make room.

TV shock talk is expanding

There was a time . . . years ago, when the limits on televised taboos were stretched only by one salty haired Phil Donahue. Bringing lesbians, transexuals, and prostitutes to the living rooms of daytime viewers was cutting edge, and anything more bizarre or controversial was reserved for the late night shenanigans of Tom Snyder's Tommorrow show.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

Is it any wonder that Geraldo, Morton Downey, Oprah and Sally Jessie Raphael,in the last year or so, have reached new heights in popularity? While Donahue remains a television institution, his daytime counterparts grab for ratings by displaying the most incredulous human phenomena since the National Enquirer, and Downey's fourth down and goal to go approach to the pressing issues of the day finds its magic in turning respectable guests into raving lunatics. Is there anything wrong with this? Not particularly. It's kinda fun . . . but any show that devotes a solid hour to an 11-year-old Satanic priest who dines on the pancreas of his slaughtered mother is bound to stir some questions. Mainly, "What the hell is going on?"

Do we really need to know the motives behind "girls who've had children with their fathers?" Oprah Winfrey thinks so. Her program runs the gamut from male strippers to liquid diets (in particular, the one which transformed Oprah herself from dirigible to delightful). It's amusing to watch Winfrey attack every subject, no matter how absurd, with the concern and conviction of a district attorney.

Geraldo "I changed my name in the late sixties so I could identify with minorities" Rivera, who cut his teeth several years back on ABC's 20/20, is quickly scaling the daytime ratings ladder with his brand of believe it or not television. The favorite target of several TV critics from The Wall Street Journal and Newsweek, Rivera went so far as to do a show examining his own program, titling it: Have We Gone Too Far?

Well . . . he went too far with his Al Capone secret vault fiasco, should we assume that his prime time Satanism special was the next logical step in the search for throwaway subject matter?

It should be noted that Rivera did put together an informative, thought provoking two day series on the conspiracy behind the death of JFK, and while Geraldo made sure to run the grisly "Zapruder" film at least five times, the other clips and close-ups revealed alarming details which were either overlooked, or purposely omitted from the Warren Commission report. The segment was a credit to Rivera, one of the few he'll probably ever receive if he continues with his line-up of female wrestlers, neo-Nazis, and cult priests. Such is commercial television.

Much like Rivera, Sally Jesse Raphael, despite her warm, sweet persona aims for the shock effect, attacking outrageous sexual matters that really should be of no interest to anybody. Raphael has featured male victims of rape, teens who were sex slaves to middle aged women and the old standby . . . transexuals. This groin level subject matter is a far cry from her syndicated radio advice program, and no doubt Sally sees fit to exploit whoever she must in order to grab viewers. Such is commercial television.

And what of Morton Downey? A lot has been said by and about him and his wrestle mania audience. He bullies guests, uses profanity, and lays all his prejudices on the table. Heck . . . there's three good reasons to watch right off the bat. Such is commercial television . . . Cosmos Macero Jr. is a Collegian staff member

Earthquake causes four deaths, damage to Soviet, Turkish cities

MOSCOW (AP) – A strong earthquake centered in the southern Soviet Union yesterday caused "significant" death and destruction in several Soviet cities and killed at least four people in eastern Turkey, authorities said.

"In several regions of Armenia there is significant damage, deaths and injuries," the official Tass news agency said. "the cities of Leniakan, Kirovakan and several others especially suffered." Yerevan Radio said damage also occurred in the cities of Gugark, Stephanavan and Spitak.

Officials said communications had been cut off with Leninakan, and consequently there was no estimate of the number of dead. The quake was centered near Leninakan, which is near the Soviet-Turkish boarder.

Extensive damage was reported in Turkey.

The US Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., said the quake registered 6.9 on the Richter scale and its epicenter was just south of Tbilisi, the capital of the Soviet republic of Georgia and a city of nearly 1 million people.

The Geological Survey said earthquake was followed less than five minutes later by a moderate aftershock, measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale.

Tass, quoting the Moscow Central Seismic Station, put the epicenter 30 miles for Leninakan, a city of 200,000 people 95 miles north of Yerevan.

Tass said tremors were felt throughout the southern Caucusus region.

The quake registered 8 on the Soviet scale of one to 12, which measures tremors on the basis of their visible effects, said Tamara Levkina, an official of the National Earthquake Center in Moscow.

Tass said the quake reached 9 on the 12-point Soviet scale.

An earthquake with an intensity of 8 is described in Soviet reference works as "destructive," causing "cracks on sharp slope and in wet soils. Monuments are moved or turned over. Houses are considerably damaged."

An editor of the official Armenpress news agency in Yreevan said "everything in quake hit but that there were no reports of damage in the Armenian capital.

Armenian environmentalists have said a nuclear power plant near Yerevan is located on a geological faulty and have demanded it be closed because of the danger of earthquakes. Yerevan radio said the power plant wasn't damaged.

Sate Turkish radio quoted Kars povincial Gov. Hasan Fakir as saying four residents of the ten of Akyaka were killed in the quake. Many houses were damaged in Akyaka and in the nearby Cildir township, it said.

A strong earthquake centered in the southern Soviet Union yesterday knocked out communications with an Armenian city and killed at least four people in Eastern Turkey, authorities said.

Salem State College president denies alleged trust fund misuse

BOSTON (AP) – The new president of Salem State College used a general purpose trust fund to pay $6,500 in expenses for personal guests at his inauguration, according to sources in a report yesterday by the Boston Globe.

Ronald E. Bonachea was inaugurated as the school's resident last month, months after the school faced a controversy over his predecessors use of a college trust fund to pay for a self-promotinal booklet.

But Bonachea Tuesday denied any wrongdoing.

He said the bills, which included $2,000 for limousine service for 10 guests and $2,555 for hotel expenses were paid with donations for the inaugural that had been deposited into general trust fund. An inaugural committee did deposit donations into the general trust fund, but several committee members said Bonachea should have paid the bills himself.

The committee voted three time that none of the donations could be used by the president to pay for his guests.

Bonachea told the Globe that he also used college trust funds to pay for a trip to Annapolis, Md., in October.

Expert says Agawam cadets suffering harassment, mental strain

BOSTON (AP) – Police cadets at the Agawam training academy are experiencing mental strain and harassment from western Massachusetts police officers following the controversy over stress training at the school, a police stress expert says.

"There was not only physical injury (from the training), but emotional injury," Gary Berte told a legislative panel Tuesday.

The panel is studying procedures at the academy and the operations of the Criminal Justice Training Council, which oversees the school, as a result of the death of trainee Timothy Shepard and the hospitalization of 15 other cadets during their first week of training in September.

Stress training, which includes physical punishment for mistakes and confusing oral commands, has been linked to the illnesses, and has since been suspended.

But Berte said he has been told by trainees that they now are being subjected to abuse at the police departments they are training to join.

"They have been verbally harassed and called 'communist', 'sissy', and 'wimp'," Berte said. "They have been singled out because they haven't received stress training."

Murphy receives new Chevrolet

BOSTON (AP) – At a time when the Dukakis administration is looking to cut costs to avoid a budget deficit, Lt. Gov. Evelyn has taken delivery of a new $13,700 Chevrolet to replace her breakdown prone 1986 state car.

The Chevrolet Classic, featuring a phone, AM-FM stereo, air conditioning, power windows and door locks, tilt steering, cruise control and the lieutenant governor's traditional "State 2" license plate, was delivered to Murphy Tuesday.

The new car is a notch up from the mechanically troubled Chevrolet Clebrity it replaces.

"It's a heavy car, but the lieutenant governor spends a lot of time on the road, travelling to places like Pittsfield and Springfield," said Murphy's chief of staff, David Rosen.

Prof says rate of cancer growing fast on Cape Cod

BOSTON (AP) – The rate of cancer on Cape Cod is growing much faster than in other parts of the state, according to a professor who reached the conclusion from a mathematical analysis of cases statewide.

"This is no random phenomenon, and it's growing worse each year," Joel Feigenbaum, professor of mathematics and physics at Cape Cod Community College in Hyannis, told the Boston Globe, of the situation on the upper Cape.

Feigenbaum worked with figures for the cancer rate in 1986, the latest available for the upper Cape, the five towns nearer the Cape Cod Canal, and both the actual number and projected member of cases statewide form 1982 through 1985.

Extrapolating from those, he said the cancer rate for the upper Cape in 1986 is 21 percent higher than rates for the rest of the state.

He attributed the increase in cancer cases on the upper Cape to Otis Air Force Base in Bourne and Camp Edwards which he said "dumped 6 million gallons of aviation fuel in the ground and burned toxic substances, such as gas and waste oils."

Feigenbaum, who lives of the upper Cape, has criticized the government about the handling of toxic substances at Otis and was arrested on disorderly conduct during a demonstration in front of the base in 1986.

"On the upper Cape, the severest elevation by type is lung cancer. for male and female, it's running 63.7 percent above state average," Feigenbaum said.

He acknowledged the Cape Cod attracts many retirees, who might be more likely to contract lung cancer.

On the upper Cape, "in 1986, the number of cases was 587, and the expected number was 485 - in females, 24 percent above the expected number and in males, and 18 percent elevation above the state average," he said.

Feigenbaum said the upper Cape, comprised of Barnstable, Bourne, Falmouth, Mashpee and Sandwich, has the state's highest cancer rate.

For the first time, Sandwich is showing a reduced rate, he said, 21 percent below the state average.

The projected 1986 statistics for the other 10 towns on Cape Cod showed the total cancer rate from Yarmouth to Provincetown was 12.8 percent above the state average, he said.

The rate for those 10 towns was 4 percent below the state average in 1985 and for the three-year period of 1982 through 1984, he reported.

Richard Clapp, director of the Massachusetts Cancer Registry, said state projections for 1986 will be calculated when town-by-town cases are reported fully and sorted by type of cancer and region.

Clapp said some types or cancer "have nothing to do with toxic-type exposures and others might," and he would not comment on Feignenbaum's theory that the upper Cape rates may be attributable to the dumping of contaminants at Otis.

broad-based Afghan government and for an end to all arms shipments to either side in that country's war. The United States has been aiding anti-communist fighters in that war.

While Gorbachev was spelling out his actions and his ideas, Reagan and Bush flew separately to New York to have lunch with him on Governors Island, a secure spot across New York Harbor from the Statue of Liberty.

Reagan, Gorbachev and Bush — all three smiling in the bright sunshine and mild temperatures — posed for pictures on the steps of the two-story brick and columned Admiral's House where lunch was to be served. Two cannons of the Civil War era stood outside the building and the three steps to the front porch were flanked by the American and Soviet flags.

Said Gorbachev, "If we score any points, we can do it only together. If we try to score points alone, nothing good will happen."

Bush let Reagan do the speaking.

Responding to reporters, the president reacted cautiously to Gorbachev's speech.

"I think he's sincerely dealing with the problems he has in his own country," Reagan said, adding, "We'll have to wait and see" about the responses of the United States and its allies to Gorbachev's proposal for a reduction in forces in eastern Europe. He said it was something the United States "had been suggesting" for some time.

Second of five bodies identified by dental records

NEW BEDFORD (AP) — Investigators yesterday identified the second of five bodies found along nearby highways whose deaths police believe are connected.

The body, discovered July 30 along Interstate 195 in the town of Dartmouth, was identified as that of Nancy Paiva, 36, of New Bedford, said Thomas Gibney, a spokesman for Bristol County District Attorney Ronald A. Pina's office.

Paiva, who had two daughters aged 14 and 17, was one of the women reported missing in recent months from Weld Square, a prostitution and drug dealing center in this port city of 98,000 people.

The first body identified also as that of a woman known to the area, Dawn Mendes, 25.

Investigators suspect one person may be responsible for the deaths because the bodies were found in a 6 to 8 mile radius in dense woods within 25 feet of Interstate 195 and Route 140.

"We have no firm suspects - nothing," Gibney said yesterday.

The identification was made based on dental records, Gobney said.

Paiva was reported missing July 9, he said. Investigators do not know the cause of death, he said.

Bristol County authorities have enlisted the help of a Washington-based forensics expert to study the remains of the women.

"The district attorney had been in contact with an anthropologist at the Smithsonian Institution and has made arrangements for him to come to New Bedford to work with the office," Gibney said Tuesday.

Dr. Douglas Ubelaker, a forensic anthropologist, said yesterday he planned to arrive Monday in new Bedford.

"The hope is (Ubelaker) will be able to assist in more clearly answering questions such as how long the victims were there and perhaps how they died," Gibney said.

"When you're only dealing with a skeleton, medical examiners and coronoers do not have the expertise that a forensic specialist has," said Dr. Jophn Verano, who works with Ubelaker in Washington.

"A lot of cases have been solved and a lot of important evidence has been presented by a careful study of human skeletal remains," he added.

Meanwhile, two state police dogs, one from Connecticut and one from Massachusetts, hunted along Route 140 outside New Bedford, just north of where the skeletal remains were found of the fifth victim in what police believe is a series of connected murders. The search, which turned up nothing Tuesday, was to resume yesterday.

"We're hoping we found the last one, but obviously there are some concerns that more victims exist," Gibney said Tuesday. "Searchers have mapped out areas they want to cover and we hope to complete the search by Friday. Whether the search expands will be determined at that time."

Pina said Monday that not all evidence found so far matches the women believed missing and that more victims could be found.

"Some parts of the physical evidence just don't match the people we have," Pina told WJAR-TV in Providence, R.I.

"For example, we have some clothing that does not necessarily belong to the body we found and that would lead you to believe that there is another victim somewhere, someplace."

The fourth victim, whose skeletal remains were found last Tuesday, was Mendes, who had been reported missing in September.

An autopay performed last Friday on the fifth victim indicated she was between 18 and 20 years old and had been dead between four and six months, Gibney said. She has not yet been positively identified.

Arafat claims to reject terrorism, accept Israel

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — PLO leader Yasser Arafat yesterday said he told a group of American Jews that his organization accepts Israeli's right to exist and condemns all forms of terrorism.

But he told a press conference that a two-page declaration drafted with the Jewish group "is nothing new" from the resolutions adopted by the PLO's parliament-in-exile last month.

He repeatedly avoided answering questions on whether PLO attacks against Israel were terrorism, but said resistance against occupation was legitimate under the UN charter.

Foreign Minister Sten Andersson announced the declaration, saying it was intended to elaborate on the PLO's acceptance last month of two UN resolutions, which implicitly recognize Israel.

Andersson said that according to the statement, the Palestine National Council "established the independent state of Palestine and accepted the existence of Israel as a state in the region."

The statement, released in English, said the PLO also "declared its rejection and condemnation of terrorism in all its forms, including state terrorism."

But the Palestine National Council spoke of limiting "military action" to Israel and the occupied territories in its meeting in Algiers, Algeria. Israel contended the council did not recognize Israel and had not outlawed terrorism.

Yesterday's declaration mentioned UN resolutions 242 and 338 as the basis for an international Middle East peace conference, in which the PLO wants to participate.

But it did not refer to the resolutions in relation to the recognition of Israel's right to exist or an end to terrorism.

The five-member Jewish delegation hailed the document as "an important step forward on the peace process" which removed the ambiguities from the PLO council's declaration last month.

"With this clarification of what were ambiguities in the Algiers document, we hope fervently that the United States will open a dialogue with the PLO," said Rita Hauser of the International Center for Peace in the Middle East.

Washington has made recognition of Israel and renunciation of terrorism condition for dealing with the PLO.

President Reagan, asked about yesterday's declaration as he was leaving the White House for New York, said: "We haven't had time to review what it is that he (Arafat) said there specifically."

Arafat held six hours of talks Tuesday with the Jewish delegation led by Ms. Hauser, whose leftist coalition advocates that Israel give up part of its occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The meeting came a week before Arafat's speech to a special session of the UN General Assembly in Geneva. He is expected to seek support there for the Palestinian state proclaimed last night by the Palestinian National Council.

The UN session was moved to Geneva after the United States denied Arafat an entry visa.

In Jerusalem, Israel's Foreign Ministry yesterday said the American Jews who met with Arafat could not be regarded as representatives of any major Jewish organization on the United States or Israel. "These people represent only themselves," the ministry said.

Jewish leaders in the United States and Sweden also dismissed the Jewish delegation as unrepresentative.

UN Resolution 242 primarily calls for withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from occupied territories and the end of all hostilities in the Middle East, with all states recognizing the rights of the others to "live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or other acts of force".

Resolution 338 calls on all parties to begin implementing Resolution 242 and urges negotiations between the parties for "a just and durable peace in the Middle East."

HEADED FOR POWER LUNCH — President Reagan talks to reporters as he leaves the White House yesterday for a luncheon with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in New York.

Trotsky's grandson granted visa to visit dying sister in Soviet Union

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The grandson of Soviet revolutionary leader Leon Trotsky has been given permission to visit the Soviet Union for the first time in 57 years because the sister he hasn't seen since he was five is dying of cancer.

"Things are much more open in Russia now. It's all part of (Soviet leader Mikhail) Gorbachev's policy, I'm sure," Esteban Volkow Bronstein said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Volkow said he has already been granted a visa to visit Alexandra Zakaronavna, his half-sister and Trotsky's granddaughter, in Moscow.

Volkow was living with Trotsky in Mexico City when the former head of the Red Army was assassinated on Josef Stalin's orders on Aug. 20, 1940. Volkow was only 14 at the time but still remembers finding Trotsky on the floor, dying from serious head wounds.

Trotsky, born Lev Davidovich Bronstein, was one of the leaders of the October 1917 revolution that established the Soviet Union, but he lost a power struggle with Stalin and was exiled in 1920.

Trotsky became a non-person, his name reviled in the Soviet Union.

He eventually settled in Mexico City, where one of Stalin's agents finally killed him with a mountain climber's ice-ax.

"For 50 or 60 years, the Russian public has been conditioned to think of him as almost the devil," said Volkow. "Things are changing, but gradually."

Volkow, 62, said that until last month, he had known nothing of his sister's fate except for a reference in a book published 10 years ago that showed she was still alive.

He said he had asked friends traveling to Moscow to try to find her several times, but none could until Pierre Broue, a historian and Trotsky specialist at the University of Grenoble in France, located her in November.

Report deems chloroquine use safe for treatment of malaria

BOSTON (AP) – Injections of a drug that has long been the mainstay of malaria treatment can safely be used, despite recent concerns about its safety, according to a new report.

The drug, called chloroquine, is the world's most widely prescribed malaria medicine. It is an important medicine in poor parts of the world where malaria is common, because the drug is cheap, widely available, well tolerated, and cures the disease quickly.

The drug is used in both pill and injection form to treat and prevent the disease, which kills an estimated 2 million to 3 million people annually.

Nuclear waste disposal proposal worries, angers Mass residents

BOSTON (AP) – Proposals that would allow nuclear power plants to burn contaminated waste oil and bury waste have raised the ire of nuclear opponents.

Plant opponents said they will ask state officials and congressmen to push for denial of the regulations being considered by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and said they will call for a public hearing on the proposals.

John Fidler, a spokesman for Boston Edison, said the company has no plans to burn waste oil generated at the company's Pilgrim nuclear power plant in Plymouth or to bury waste there.

But opponents say they are concerned the changes are being considered.

"We just see this as further evidence that we have no control of our destiny here," said Mary Ott of Duxbury, a member of Citizens Urging Reliable Energy.

The proposal giving the NRC authority to allow nuclear power plants to bury waste on sites would not affect Massachusetts, said Sue Gagner, spokeswoman for the NRC.

Local deer hunters come across various surprises during season

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — In addition to several thousand whitetails, deer hunters found the body of a murder suspect, a human skull, a crashing helicopter and a bazooka in the woods during the state's shotgun deer season, which ended Wednesday.

"We always seem to come up with lots of things during deer week that we aren't really looking for," said Allan McGroary, head of the state's environmental police.

Despite enforcement cutbacks and a ban on overtime, which allowed wardens unprecendented regular days off during the season, McGraory reported the 10-day hunt that normally sends 40,000 to 50,000 men and women into the woods was "blessedly free" of human fatalities or major injuries.

State officials won't have a complete count on the deer kill for several days, said Ellie Horwitz, a spokeswoman for the state Division of Fisheries and Wildlife. But it appeared that heavy rain and fog on opening day, Nov. 28, may have kept many hunters out of the woods and kept down the number of animals killed.

Last year, about 5,500 deer were killed, slightly below the record 5,612 taken in 1986, she said.

Everything hunters fired at didn't have hooves and fur.

Chicago hospital reduces number of Caesareans

BOSTON (AP) — A Chicago hospital reduced its Caesarean sections to half the national rate by requiring doctors to get second opinions and follow a few simple rules, a strategy that could save more than $1 billion if followed everywhere, its developers said.

Caesarean sections are the most common form of surgery in the United States. Many medical experts agree that physicians perform far too many of them, but there is little consensus over how to cut back.

The program started at Chicago's Mount Sinai Hospital Medical Center lowered the Caesarean rate from 17.5 percent to 11.5 percent over a two-year period. Nationwide last year, 24.4 percent of the 3.8 million births were Caesarean deliveries.

"We lowered it not from 24 to 17 percent, but from 17 to 11 percent, which is even harder to do," said Dr. Stephen A. Myers. "It's like going on a diet. The first five pounds are easy. The last five pounds are tough."

The hospital accomplished the reduction by setting these rules:

- Except in emergencies, second opinions must be obtained before all Caesareans.
- Vaginal deliveries are preferred for all patients who have undergone previous Caesareans.
- Difficult birth is considered to be an acceptable reason for a Caesarean only if a woman fails to deliver after two hours of strong, regular uterine contractions.
- Fetal distress must be confirmed by a blood sample drawn from the fetus.
- Vaginal deliveries are recommended for nearly all breech births, those in which the baby appears bottom first.
- A peer review process makes sure that all doctors follow the rules. Those who seem to be performing too many are notified, although no disciplinary action is taken.

A report on the program, developed by Myers and Dr. Norbert Gleicher, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

The doctors estimated that if their program was adopted by other hospitals, the Unites States could avoid 450,000 Caesareans nationally. Hospitals charge about $3,000 more for Caesareans than for vaginal births, and doctors charge $250 to $500 more.

At Beth Israel Hospital in Boston, Dr. Benjamin Sachs said doctors frequently do Caesareans at the first sign of fetal distress, because they fear they will be sued for malpractice if anything goes wrong.

"I don't think what they have done in this particular hospital is going to be easy to duplicate in the enviroment that we have today," Sachs said.

In an additional editorial, Dr. Frederick C. Battaglia of the University of Colorado questioned whether the Chicago doctors paid enough attention to the safety of sharply reducing Caesareans.

The doctors said the reduction made no difference in the death rate among babies or mothers. Although there were more reports of depressed breathing among infants, they said this was probably because doctors were more alert to this problem, not because of a true increase in its occurrance.

Myers said doctors at the hospital were generally enthusiastic about the program, although some women were unhappy when told they could not have Caesareans.

"Some women say, 'I don't want to go through that aggravation. I want another Caesarean section,'" Myers said. "But because they say it, that's not a valid reason to do it. We said, 'No, we are going to have a trial of labor.'"

State money problems may affect enviroment programs

CHICOPEE (AP) — Another in the list of victims of the state's money troubles may be programs to protect wetlands, improve air quality and cleanup hazardous waste, the head of an environmental agency said yesterday.

"It may have implications for us in terms of our ability to simply run certain programs. . . at any kind of level that's manageable," Commissioner Daniel S. Greenbaum of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering said at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Milk, Food and Environmental Association.

Greenbaum warned that towns and cities must shoulder more of the cost of cleanup because of a $300 million shortfall in state revenues. "I'm frustrated by the bickering over who should pay rather than coming together and saying, 'We together should pay,'" he said.

Most of the 50 members at the meeting were local health board officials who got their first glimpse of the commissioner, who was sworn in last summer as ozone levels soared on Cape Cod and a chlorine fire routed 25,000 people from Springfield.

Greenbaum said his foremost goal in his new job is to find ways to prevent waste rather than dispose of it.

"Unfortunately, the history of trash disposal in western Massachusetts reveals a distressing cycle of what we might have called 'solutions,'" he said. "First we tried open burning and then sanitary landfills and then the solution called incineration . . . but in each case the solution opened up new problems."

He said the department is now looking at several ways of managin waste "so we don't put all our eggs in one basket." They range from persuading companies to cut back on trash to recycling plastics and composting newspapers.

Nearly 80 percent of the 800,000 tons of trash produced yearly in western Massachusetts goes into its 39 landfills, Greenbaum said. Another 14 percent goes into two waste recovery plants, in Pittsfield and Agawam, and 7 percent is recycled or composted.

He praised western Massachusetts for what he described as an unusual degree of cooperation in solving trash problems, and he complimented the area for breaking ground on the state's first regional recycling plant, in Agawam.

"There are people in other parts of the state that are quite jealous of this area and its ability to get this thing under way," he said. "The reason . . . has a lot to do with a lot of leadership going on."

The audience questioned Greenbaum on such headaches as disposing of hospital wastes and getting rid of what he called "white goods," refrigerators and other appliances.

"I helped contribute to why no one will pick them up right now," he said.

All six metal-shredding companies in the state closed when Greenbaum notified them in June that the appliances and junkyard cars may be classified as hazardous waste.

The state has worked with two companies that handle appliances to devise a simple way to separate the hazardous components from the rest of scrap metal. Greenbaum said he hopes to come up with a similar formula soon for car shredders.

He also made the unorthodox suggestion that there may be more money in recycling plastic foam cups than paper, despite moves by communities to ban polystyrene.

"Paper is not a terribly good recycleable material to create a high-quality material out of," he said. "We may find it far cheaper to recycle Styrofoam, as much as we personally don't like it."

Springfield museum disappointed with art thief's 'light' sentence

SPRINGFIELD, (AP) — A curator says officials at a Springfield museum have been able to positively identify only about one-third of the 1,300 American Indian artifacts it lost to a glib theif and the damage to its collection and that of five other museums may be "irreparable."

"We've had a real headache for the last six months," John Pretola, curator of anthropology at the Springfield Science Museum, said Tuesday, criticizing what he called a light sentence handed to George B. McLaughlin, 48, by a federal judge in Bridgeport, Conn.

McLaughlin, who admitted stealing thousand of items, valued at about $820,000 from six New England museums in 1986, was placed on four years probation Monday and ordered to continue psychological treatment. He was also fined $10,000 and ordered to make some restitution to the museums.

"We museums are very disappointed," Pretola said. He said the $800 McLaughlin was ordered to pay the Springfield museum would barely cover the staff's travel costs in connection with the case. Many of the items, which were up to 6,000 years old, were damaged beyond repair when McLaughlin used acid to try to remove catalogue numbers.

The man gained admittance to the collection by claiming to be doing legitimate research, Pretola said.

"He's a confidence man. He gained my confidence. Even thought we had people watching him all the time, he was able, by slight of hand, put things in his pocket," Pretola said.

Also victimized were the Memorial Hall museum In Deerfield, the Peabody Museum of Natural History at Yale University, the Robbins Museum of Natural History at Yale University, the Robbins Museum in Attleboro, the Robert S. Peabody Foundation at Phillips Academy in Andover and the Worcester Hisorical Museum.

Billionaire blames attitudes for industry's failure to stay ahead

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Billionaire entrepreneur H. Ross Perot struck out at what he sees as a deterioration of American society and industry during a spirited address.

"Keep the music going until the dance hall burns," said the 58-year-old Texan, summing up his view of the country's attitude.

"Our country is diseased with just doing enough to get by," Perot said at a seminar Tuesday sponsored by Decision Support Technologies, Inc. The company is a consulting firm specializing in advising companies on the best use of computer hardware and software.

Japan's rise to industrial prominence was the focus of much of Perot's warning.

"In 1945, if I had told you that nine of the 10 biggest banks would be Japanese, you'd have dismissed me as a lunatic," Perot said.

Perot blamed American industry's failure to stay ahead on "being on top for too long."

Nun forced to leave 33-year post in order to adopt young child

METHUEN (AP) — A nun who for 33 years has called the Sisters of Mercy her family says she will leave the order to form a new family with the 2-year-old girl she plans to adopt on Dec. 15.

"It was a very difficult decision. The Sisters of Mercy have been my family since I was 17, but there was no choice on my part as far as Maria was concerned. I am her mother," said Sister Rejeanne Keeley, who began caring for the child when she was eight months old.

Sister Keeley was forced to choose between Maria and the Sisters of Mercy after a five-member leadership team of sisters rejected her request to adopt the child and remain in the Windham, N.H.-based order.

She has applied to the Vatican for a dispensation from her religious vows, but says she is still hoping her commitments will not have to be mutually exclusive.

"I still hope a miracle will happen, I will the happiest woman in the world if the sisters somehow change their minds," Sister Keeley told the Lawrence Eagle-Tribune in a story published yesterday. "I am not angry or bitter. I will remain close to the community."

Hit-and-run driver pleads innocent to assault, motor vehicle charges

NORTH ANDOVER (AP) — The hit-and-run driver of a stolen car that injured two teen-agers during a police chase in North Andover was in custody yesterday, officials said.

Police arrested Everett Murray, 38, of Boston after the stolen car he was driving crashed into a tree. He was held on $25,000 bail at the Lawrence House of Correction after pleading innocent to assault and motor vehicle charges Tuesday, police said.

The chase began about 2:30 p.m. Monday, when officers spotted Murray operating erratically and tried to stop his vehicle, said North Andover Police Chief Richard Stanley.

The chase, which reached speeds of 60 mph, was called off, but police continued to tail Murray's car and saw it slam into a station wagon while traveling southbound on Route 125.

The operator of the station wagon sustained only minor injuries.

After fleeing the scene of that crash, Murray allegedly turned onto Main Street, where he struck Daniel Richmond and Roland Giuffre, both 15, as they headed home from North Andover Middle School, where both are in the eighth grade.

Richmond was listed in critical but stable condition at Lawrence General Hospital Tuesday. Giuffre was listed in critical condition yesterday at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Lockdown continues as jail employees repair damage caused by riot last week

SALEM (AP) — A lockdown continued at the Essex County Jail yesterday and was not expected to be lifted for at least a week as workers repaired damage wreaked in a two-hour riot, said Sheriff Charles Reardon.

About 150 inmates shattered windows, smashed security locks and tore 10-foot water pipes off walls during the disturbance Monday night.

Heating and water has been restored to the jail, but the windows and railings torn out must still be repaired, Reardon said.

"We had a meeting with the contractors and starting Saturday we should be able to do the major work," the sheriff said. He said there are no damage estimates, but the cost probably would exceed $50,000.

The disturbance erupted shortly after a Boston television news show depicted overcrowding at the jail. Reardon said the show was a factual account of overcrowding at the jail, built in 1813, which he described as the worst in Massachusetts.

"We're backlogged and overcrowded and we have these problems," he said.

The jail held 270 inmates Tuesday. It is under a federal court order to lower the number of inmates it houses to 143 by June.

Reardon said officials are trying to take measures to prevent another disturbance, putting on additional staff and maintaining the lockdown.

"We're just trying to control it through any method possible. (Prisoners) have had privileges taken away (because of the lockdown), such as visitation rights. This is a terrible time of the year to deny anybody privileges like not seeing your loved ones," Reardon said.

■ hunters

For the second straight season, gullible Nimrods, cheerily blasted away at wooden deer temptingly set out in a field by a Hadley carpenter.

David Chmura, 23, said he had been certain last season that nobody could be fooled by the plywood cutout sporting a red motor oil container for a nose and emblazoned "Stupid."

But, persuaded by his friends to see what would happen, he left out the target they have been using for shotgun pracitce when the season opened. The group was immediately rewarded by the sight of hunters, crawling through brambles to get a better shot. They laughed so hard, that this year Chmura fashioned three deer — two eight-point bucks and a doe. The first was holed by buckshot within hours after the season opened.

"I was only surprised they didn't find it opening day," said Greenfield Police Chief David McCarthy after a hunter came upon the body of Mark Branch, the only suspect in the killing of a Greenfield Community College student Sharon Gregory, hanging in a tree in the Buckland woods a few miles from where his car had been found abandoned Oct. 25.

McCarthy said he was so confident that the body of Branch, an apparent suicide, would be found that he had officers stand by in the Greenfield station house until the call came in a few hours after daybreak the second day of the season.

"That area was just saturated with hunters," he said. "And you need hundreds of men to properly search it. We tried, but we just didn't have the manpower."

The helicopter, which otherwise might have taken hours or days to locate, went down Friday on a Boy Scout camp in an isolated section of Russell, killing the pilot, as four stunned hunters dived for cover.

■ AIDS

In the November poll, 71 percent of the students surveyed indicated they had received enough information and had a clear understanding of the issues. In September, only 68 percent of the students surveyed responded the same way, and in 1987, 41 percent, Gonyer said. In the 20 months between the two surveys, student self-confidence increased 58 percent.

Julie Lam, associate director of SAREO, said the November survey was conducted, in part, to determine the impact of AIDS Awareness Month last October.

Gonyer said 58 percent of the students in the November poll indicated that they had reviewed current information on AIDS in the previous month, while in September, 45 percent responded the same way.

Lam said there was no difference in how the September and November surveys were conducted except for the questions asked.

"We took random samples of the undergraduate population through the Student Database (computer system)," she said. "Both surveys were done in Wednesday night telephone surveys."

Gonyer said not all of the questions asked in the September and March polls were used in the November survey. Lam said questions in the November survey that had not been asked in previous surveys were used to find out student awareness of the disease as a result of AIDS Awareness Month.

Said Gonyer: "I'm pleased to say that 72 percent of the people on campus said they were aware that AIDS Awareness Month was going on. Forty-nine percent said they attended something, read articles or stopped at the table on the (Campus Center) concourse."

Health Services is required, as an AIDS test center, to keep confidential any information regarding how many students on campus have either contracted AIDS or tested positive for the HIV antibody, Gonyer said. However, the Massachusetts Department of Health releases the number of AIDS cases per county, Gonyer said, adding that there are nine reported cases in Hampshire County.

Although students feel they have a clear understanding of AIDS, they are not necessarily taking precautions to avoid contracting the disease, Gonyer said.

The November results show that only 26 percent of the students polled have started using condoms to avoid contracting the virus. That is only 36 percent of the total number of students who felt they had a clear understanding of issues regarding AIDS.

AIDS, or Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, is an affliction in which a virus weakens the body's ability to combat normal illnesses. It is most frequently transmitted through sexual contact or the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles used in intravenous drug use. At least 60 percent of the people with a positive antibody test actually contract the virus.

The September survey indicated that "compared with the 1987 study, students today are actually more likely to believe that AIDS can be transmitted through social (non-sexual) contact." Last year, three percent of those surveyed either agreed or strongly agreed that the virus could be transmitted through "social contact, such as shaking hands." In 1988, 20 percent gave the same response.

The complex is projected to cost about $50 million. Students will pay for half of the cost through an increase in an authority fee, which will not appear on the students' bills until the fall semester of 1992.

Rosenberg said his proposal will not restrict the complex from being built, but instead prevent students from picking up the $25 million half of the bill.

"It would relieve some of the pressure on fees that students are facing," he said.

"It's expensive enough to go to college already, without having to pay for buildings," Rosenberg said.

The proposed bill would not come up for public hearing until next year, he said.

At the public hearing, the proposed issue is discussed and is then either forwarded for further action or thrown out and is considered "dead."

Celtics fall

BOSTON (AP) — Moses Malone capped a season-high, 27-point performance by making three free throws in the final 10 seconds, enabling the Atlanta Hawks to hold off the Boston Celtics 106-103 last night and extend their winning streak to six games.

It was Atlanta's first regular season victory in Boston Garden since March 1, 1985 and broke an eight-game losing streak there. The Celtics suffered their third consecutive loss.

The Hawks, who snapped a four-game road losing streak, erupted from an 83-83 tie with a 20-9 run. That gave Atlanta a 103-92 lead with 2:43 left and seemingly assured victory. A three-point shot by Glenn Rivers and a lay-up by Cliff Levingston capped the surge.

But after taking a timeout, Boston battled back by scoring the next eight points, cutting the margin to 103-100 on Kevin McHale's free throws with 24 seconds left.

A foul by McHale gave Atlanta the ball at midcourt with 20 seconds to go, but Reggie Theus failed to make the inbounds pass in five seconds and Boston got possession.

12, despite picking up his fourth foul with 17:10 left.

In fact, the big men were plagued with foul trouble all game. Senior Duane Chase fouled out with 13:19 still left to play, and sophomore Ben Grodski followed with 8:53 to go.

But the Minutemen, despite the comeback effort of New Hampshire, were able to pull it out.

The Minutemen had their hands full in the first half. The lead changed possession eight times, until the Minutemen took it over at 30-28 on a Rafer Giles' three-pointer. The Wildcats didn't score in the final 4:45, in which time the Minutemen ran off nine straight points — carrying an eight-point lead into the locker room, 36-28.

The leading scorers for UMass in the first half were McCoy and David Brown, who each connected for eight points. Giles followed with seven, making up 23 of UMass' 36 points.

Hoop du jour: A television crew from ABC World News Tonight was on hand to do a feature on much-maligned UNH coach Gerry Freil. The Lundholm crowd of 1,475 responded, cheering he and the team from start to finish, which made life difficult for the visiting Minutemen.

Duane Chase fouled out early, but the Minutemen held tough down the stretch.

■ Minutewomen roll past Holy Cross

But UMass responded down the stretch. With the heart rates pounding and the Crusaders breathing down the Minutewomen's necks, Wilbor (12 points and a game-high 10 boards) pulled up from about 15 feet on the left baseline and buried a clutch hoop. That broke an eight-point HC run to push UM back up by five with 1:47 left.

"Beth's hoop was a key bucket in terms of our enthusiasm," Hewelt said. "We needed one badly and the senior delivered."

Pick up UMass it did, while deflating the guests at the same time. Holy Cross bumbled away its final chances and the Minutewomen cashed in on eight straight points to seal the win. Included was a key stretch where UMass killed 45 big seconds off the clock with a brilliant display of the four-corner drill.

In the first half, Zullo showed a sign of things to come, scoring six of her team's first 11 points. But the game was tight and slow developing early on. The lead changed hands nine times in the first 14 minutes before UMass took over for good.

Down 19-17 with 7:24 left in the half, the Minutewomen got down to business and for the rest of the half could almost do no wrong. Eight straight points gave them a 25-19 edge with 4:44 left, and Helen Freeman and Keyburn McCusker (12 points apiece) combined for 14 points down the stretch as UMass gradually built on that lead. Zullo capped the first half with a shot from the bonusphere (three-point land) to send the Minutewomen into the halftime break in firm control.

"We've got our people to believe that we can do anything if we work hard and keep our composure," Hewelt said.

The Minutewomen did just that, and the results were pleasant.

"I'm proud of the kids. They believed they could do it," Hewelt said.

"We played great," Wilbor said.

It took a great effort, one that will be remembered in many ways for a long time.

Minutemen escape UNH with 73-72 win

Freshman Anton Brown beats buzzer to boost UMass

By RONN GARRY
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — Pearl Harbor Day will be a day that will live in infamy, especially for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team.

A shot by freshman Anton Brown from the right side of the basket with no time left on the clock pulled out a much needed victory for the Minutemen over the Wildcats of New Hampshire, 73-72 last night at Lundholm Gymnasium.

Minutemen, 73-72

Massachusetts 73: Jamal Brown 9 4-6 22, Duane Chase 2 0-0 4, John Tate 3 7-8 13, Jim McCoy 1 0-1 2, Anton Brown 1 3-5 11, Ben Grodsk 0 0-0 0, Rafer Gibbs 1 0-0 2, Jim Calnimo 1 0-0 2. Team Totals: 27 17-23 73.

New Hampshire 72: Derek Coates 4 4-5 12, Bob Cummins 7 2-4 18, Dave Marino 2 1-1 5, Keith Carpenter 4 1-3 10, Jeff Carr 1 1-2 4, Chris Perkins 1 2-4 10, Joe Spitale 4 1-1 9, Eric Theilen 5 5-6 15. Team Totals: 28 17-29 72.

Three-point goals: [illegible] Carpenter, Carr, Spitale.

With the win, the Minutemen even their season record at 2-2, snapping a two-game losing streak.

The Minutemen had led by as many as 12 with five minutes gone in the second half, but the scrappy Wildcats battled behind the shooting of Eric Theilen (15 points) to take the lead by one with 30 seconds left, setting up Brown's heroics.

In a hectic final two minutes, the Minutemen had to scramble to hold on to their lead behind the offense of David Brown (22 points to lead all scorers) and the pressure free throw shooting of John Tate, who hit seven of eight free throws in the final five minutes.

"I knew it was going to be a tough game," UMass coach John Calipari said. "I'm just happy we got out of here with a 'W.'"

With 1:54 left, UMass led by six, 71-65 with a Tate free throw. On UNH's next possession, freshman Joe Spitale nailed a three-pointer to cut the UMass lead to three. As Anton brought the ball up the court he was picked clean by Spitale, who missed the break away lay-up. But it was followed up by Bob Cummins.

With 48 seconds left Cummins cut the UMass lead to one, 71-70. Calipari called time out. On the ensuing inbounds pass, UNH's Keith Carpenter stole the inbounds and put the Wildcats up by one with 30 seconds left on a breakaway finger-roll layup.

UMass set up for the last shot and freshman Jim McCoy's jump shot bounded off the rim and was knocked out of bounds.

UMass got the ball back, passed it to Anton and the rest, as they say, is history.

"It wasn't designed to go to Anton," Calipari said. "I didn't want to put the pressure on anyone, but anyone who could take the shot could."

UMass was sparked by the play of the senior captain Brown, who carried the play for much of the second half, scoring 13 points after intermission. John Tate played brilliantly in the second half, leading all rebounders with

Minutewomen slip past Holy Cross, 80-69

Zullo burns Crusaders for career-high 32; women's hoop rolling with perfect 4-0 start

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Coming into last night's game at the Curry Hicks Cage, University of Massachusetts women's hoop coach Kathy Hewelt knew her team would have to be at its best to beat its opponent, Holy Cross.

Well, the Minutewomen weren't perfect, but played well enough for a thrilling 80-69 win over the visiting Crusaders.

The victory, which improves the Minutewomen to a perfect 4-0 on the year, is one of the more satisfying around these parts in quite a while.

"This is the best in the four years that I've been here," said senior co-captain Beth Wilbor said of the win.

"It's great knocking off a solid team like Holy Cross," said senior co-captain Christel Zullo. "It's a real confidence builder. We know we can beat anyone at home."

It was Zullo who stepped into the spotlight last night, scorching the Crusaders for a career-high 32 points. The 5-4 point guard from Somerset, N.J. took control and came through whenever UMass needed a boost.

"Christel Zullo came to play. She's a real take-charge player," Hewelt said. "The seniors really rose to the occasion."

"I don't concentrate on scoring," Zullo said. "I just play and see what happens."

What happened is that Zullo played a big role in sending the Crusaders back to Worcester with their fourth loss in six tries. She had 11 points in a stunning first half that saw UMass blow out to a 12-point halftime lead, 42-30. Then, she bettered her previous career high of 19 in the second half alone, netting 21.

But she wasn't alone. Three other players were in double figures, and the rest of the team dug in against a tough opponent and gutted out a win for the books.

"It was a great effort by all. We had super support from the bench," Hewelt said. "We developed our game nicely and were running well. We played heads-up basketball."

It was actually a closer game than the 11-point differential indicated, but shouldn't really have been that close to begin with. Despite the fact that Holy Cross was the favorite coming in, the Minutewomen quickly wrested control and had the Crusaders on the brink of a blowout well into the second half.

Leading 42-30 at the half, UMass blew out of the box, outscoring the Crusaders 14-5 to go up by 21, 56-35 with 14:11 left. UMass was busting through the vaunted Holy Cross backcourt press and running the floor at will. Plus, the Crusaders were fouling regularly, as UMass was in the bonus situation with over 12 minutes left in the game.

This created a parade to the foul line that in effect killed everything that UMass had going for it. The Minutewomen were drawing the fouls, but at the same time went nearly eight minutes without hitting from the floor.

"At times we made some mental errors. We're still not satisfied with the way the game turned out, but we're happy with the win," Hewelt said.

After Zullo tossed in points 23 and 24 on a pull-up jumper with 9:26 left, UMass led by 18, 64-46. But Holy Cross, which committed 28 fouls, kept sending the Minutewomen to the line. They hit 8-of-12 but were scoreless from the floor. In the meantime, the Crusaders were coming alive as they managed to cut the once-cozy UM lead to just three, 72-69, with 2:05 left.

"We stopped playing. We got way too conservative," Hewelt said. "That made us tentative. We just had to stay within our rhythm."

Men's swimming to host So.Conn.

By DENNIS MADSEN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's swimming team, at 2-1, is having a good season, but it is still looking for a home victory this year.

The Minutemen will get a second crack at a win in Boyden Pool Saturday at 1 p.m. as Southern Connecticut State University comes up to do battle with them. UMass coach Russ Yarworth expects that his opponents will be psyched up for their first-ever battle with the Minutemen.

"They'll be coming after us," said Yarworth. "I wouldn't be surprised if they were shaved and tapered (rested)."

A perennial Division II powerhouse, Southern Connecticut has a number of new excellent swimmers to test UMass. Mike Sportini swims a 1:45 for the 200-yard freestyle and a 47.9 in the 100 free and should give Minuteman sprinter Brian McIver some tough competition. They also have Paul Zakrzewski and Bill Ball, two excellent swimmers in the breaststroke.

UMass will be no pushover, though. "Everyone's going to swim out of their minds," Yarworth said. "We're ready to go and they [the Minutemen] know what they have to do. The divers are keyed," and the diving events could make for the margin of victory.

Unlike past weeks when he tried swimmers in different events, Yarworth is going with his strongest lineup. The team doesn't want to peak before the New England championships but it would really like to go into the intersession break with a win.

After this meet, Yarworth sees an even bigger trial. "My challenge to them [the Minutemen] is to see if they can keep up the training, to see how bad they want the championships," he said.

Duffey: Fee hike plausible to offset budget cuts

By YANA DLUGY
Collegian Staff

An additional $50 fee on next semester's bill seems unavoidable in order to help offset about $5 million to be cut from the University of Massachusetts' budget, Chancellor Joseph Duffey told an audience of about 700 in Bowker Auditorium yesterday.

During what Duffey called "an informal meeting," he revealed various actions the school will have to take to make the necessary 3 percent cut.

He stressed the proposed options are not definite, since he has not received any official word from the UMass Board of Trustees as to the exact amount of the cuts. However, the $5 million figure is not likely to change, he said.

Among the options Duffey presented are as follows:

- A $50 increase beginning in the spring semester.
- A reduction of class sections offered next semester. "Hundreds of classes will have to dropped," he said.
- A "furlough" program for faculty, where staff will have to take anywhere from one half to two days a month without pay.
- An additional $2 million reduction in supplies, which includes equipment, telephone service, and travel.
- A "flexible" hiring freeze, already begun, to continue until July. Duffey said only emergency hirings will be made, such as the Dean of Students and the Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, for which the University has already started conducting national searches.
- A substantial size reduction of entering classes.

During his presentation, Duffey said he welcomed further suggestions from faculty.

He said he will not support another tuition increase unless it directly contributes to the quality of education. However, if that should happen, the new fees will be absorbed in the increase, Duffey said.

From the money collected through the new fee, Duffey said he wants to use $300,000 to establish a scholarship fund "for those [students] to whom the fee will be a burden."

He said at least $800,000 obtained through the fee will be put toward "instructional purposes," such as teaching assistants and visiting faculty, necessary for some courses to exist.

Because this is the fourth cut UMass has faced in the past 16 months, Duffey said he foresees the school shrinking and becoming smaller, in order to keep the present quality of education.

Duffey also complained about the inability of the University to manage its funds.

"One thing that has happened under Gov. Michael Dukakis is that this campus has lost its ability to manage its accounts," he said. "You cannot build a great university on this system."

Rep. Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst), also present at the meeting, said in order to prevent further cuts in education, the people of Massachusetts should be willing to pay more taxes.

"I think the way to say no right now is to say yes," Rosenberg said.

Duffey said he expects the trustees to meet Tuesday, which is when the possible options will be discussed.

He once again urged faculty, students and parents to notify the media and lawmakers about the effects the cuts will have on the University.

Soviet surgeons scramble to help victims of destructive quake

Tens of thousands feared dead in devastated Armenia

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet authorities rushed military surgeons and tons of medical supplies yesterday into Armenia, rocked by an earthquake that officials said virtually destroyed several cities and killed tens of thousands of people.

Armenian journalists said a Politburo commission led by Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov received preliminary estimates that up to 50,000 people died in the Wednesday earthquake, which measured 6.9 on the Richter scale, Soviet officials reported thousands of people were killed but provided no death toll.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev cut short his trip to the United States and flew home to lead a worldwide emergency rescue effort in the southern republic, which has a population of 3.3 million.

"Urgent measures are being taken to help all those affected by this terrible tragedy, and I have to be there in this effort, said Gorbachev, who planned to fly to Yerevan after arriving in Moscow. He canceled his planned trips to Cuba and Britain.

President Reagan offered emergency humanitarian aid, Cuban President Fidel Castro pledged to send construction workers, and Britain dispatched London firefighters to join the rescue effort.

Soviet TV showed a clock on a building in the city of Leninakan, on the Turkish border near the epicenter of the earthquake, stopped at 11:41 — the instant disaster struck.

The earthquake destroyed two-thirds of Leninakan, Armenia's second-largest city with a population of 250,000 people, a TV correspondent said.

Spitak, a town of 16,000 about 45 miles away, "was practically erased from the face of the Earth," the correspondent said.

Senate reacts to civil rights violation suit

By GEORGE FRANCY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate may lose money and its autonomy from the University of Massachusetts, senators said yesterday, as a result of a lawsuit filed Wednesday by Shari Silkoff and Jason Rabinowitz.

The suit seeks to drop barriers keeping Silkoff/Rabinowitz from holding the office of Student Government Association co-presidents.

Senate speaker Robert Fadel said that University of Massachusetts attorneys will not represent members of the Student Government Association in the suit.

Associate University Counsel Sid Myers said yesterday he had no information on whether the University would defend the students. He said any decsion on this would have to come from William Searson, University counsel.

Fadel said the suit could be extremely damaging because attorney fees run at about $125 per hour, plus any damages awarded in the case.

"We're contacting outside attorneys," Fadel said. "At present the University is not representing the students."

Amherst attorney Michael Pill, a former University employee, said he was contacted by several members of the SGA about the case, and said he would accept it.

"Even if the allegations [concerning the civil rights violations] were true, I would still be happy to take the case," Pill said. He said he would take the case because all parties deserve a trial.

Pill said he did not know enough about the specifics of the case to comment on it.

The senate Wednesday night made a provision to pay for a potential suit with money from the Student Activities Trust Fund stabilization and contingency accounts. These accounts totalled over $70,000 at the beginning of fiscal year 1989.

The provision allows the SGA Coordinating Committee to allocate money for

Gorbachev's message was a welcome one

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev arrived at the United Nations this week with precisely the message people across the globe most wanted to hear from a man with his finger on the button: It's time to stop using military might to settle political disputes - nobody's omnipotent.

Even in his hurried departure from the United States, Gorbachev was showing a face of Kremlin leadership that stood in stark contrast to the shoe - waving visit of the last Soviet leader to visit the United Nations.

Addressing diplomats who know well that he is wrestling with difficult choices between guns and butter, Gorbachev on Wednesday delivered a poignant call for peaceful coexistence punctuated with a theatrical announcement of Red Army troop reductions.

"Our people want to live in peace with the American people," he said at one point. Later, sightseeing in Manhattan, he remarked, "We're very pleased by the fact that thousands of New Yorkers have come out to see us. We saw their faces, we saw their eyes, their friendliness."

All in all, quite different from the 1960 visit of Nikita Khrushchev.

It was Khrushchev who took off his shoe, waved it around and then pounded it on his desk in anger. He was unhappy when a speaker had referred to Eastern Europe as nations which "have been swallowed up, more or less, by the Soviet Union."

Gorbachev was polished and polite, making friends from his arrival on but never so many as with his declaration on unilateral troop reductions. Even his sudden departure demonstrated a fresh character of Soviet leadership: Gorbachev was returning home to cope with a devastating earthquake that had killed thousands in the Soviet Caucasus region.

"Despite the fact that all emergency measures are being taken . . . Mr. Gorbachev believes when the people are suffering he has to be there, he has to lead the efforts," the Soviet foreign minister said late last night.

Gorbachev left behind him a troop - reduction timetable that many experts had expected last spring as a welcome - to - Moscow gesture toward President Reagan. The American view, clearly, was better late than never, and officials applauded Gorbachev's call at the United Nations for less reliance on military force.

Black leaders of anti-apartheid group given 'lenient' jail terms by judge for treason

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — A judge yesterday sentenced three black leaders of the country's biggest anti-apartheid group to what he called lenient jail terms of 10 and 12 years for treason.

Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu joined other activists in condemning as "vicious" the sentencing at the close of a controversial three-year trial in which the nationwide coalition United Democratic Front was declared a revolutionary organization.

Tutu also accused the government of "playing games" by moving jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela to a house on a prison farm.

"Mr. Mandela is still a prisoner," said Tutu. "Let the government release him and all other political prisoners unconditionally. Then they will see the enormous influence for good, for peace and reconciliation that he will be."

US Ambassador Edward Perkins was among several diplomats at Pretoria Supreme Court. In a statement, his embassy said the sentences were "not as harsh as they might have been" but regrettable because those convicted were "men of good will working peacefully for a non-racial democracy."

Patrick Lekota, 40, a spokesman for the front, was sentenced to 12 years; 10-year terms were given to its national secretary Popo Molefe, 36, and Moses Chikane, 40 the Transvaal Province branch secretary; church field worker Thomas Manthata, 48, was sentenced to six years' jail, also for treason.

Seven other defendants were convicted of terrorism. Six received suspended sentences and were banned for two years from talking to the press or participating in politics. The seventh is to serve five years in jail.

Supporters in the courtroom raised clenched fists then joined the defendants in singing "God Bless Africa," anthem of the anti-apartheid movement.

Judge Kees van Dijkhorst ruled that the United Democratic Front collaborated with the outlawed African National Congress to incite anti-government violence in 1984. Tutu and more than 900 other supporters of the front were named as unindicted co-conspirators.

Earthquake sends Gorbachev home early

By TERENCE HUNT
The Associated Press

Mikhail S. Gorbachev urgently headed for home yesterday to cope with the crisis of a devastating earthquake, expressing confidence that superpower relations were on track after a summit with President Reagan and President-elect Bush. The American leaders expressed condolences and offered US assistance.

Gorbachev, standing on a windswept runway at John F. Kennedy International Airport, said his talks with Reagan and Bush in New York on Wednesday and by telephone today made him confident "that our relations will expand and improve on the basis of cooperation, on the basis of mutual respect for each others' interests."

The Soviet leader said, "The road ahead will be tough but we will go ahead."

Soviet officials said Gorbachev cut short his New York visit, and scrapped stops in Cuba and Britain, because of an earthquake in Soviet Armenia that killed thousands of people. Gorbachev said there were "extremely grave consequences, devastation and great loss of life. I urgently have to return to the Soviet Union."

During a visit of less than 48 hours in Manhattan, Gorbachev drew praise from Reagan and Bush for his announcement of a unilateral, 500,000 - man reduction in Soviet troops and cutbacks in artillery, tanks and planes.

Expressing gratitude to Reagan and Bush for US offers of earthquake help, Gorbachev said, "I would like to thank them and thank the American people for those feelings and for their readiness to give assistance in this difficult hour."

Reagan, in his farewell telephone call, expressed "deep personal sorrow" over the earthquake tragedy. The president, speaking from his second - floor living quarters in the White House, also told Gorbachev their meeting on Wednesday was "very useful . . . for both sides."

He expressed concern over the magnitude of the Soviet loss. "If there is any way we can be of assistance either bilaterally or through the international community, please let me know," Reagan said. His comments were relayed to the press by White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

List of Branch's 'horrors' revealed

GREENFIELD (AP) — A district court judge yesterday released a list of horror movies, books and masks found in the home of a teenager suspected of slaying a college student before his own apparent suicide.

Judge Benjamin Apkin ruled in favor of a motion by The Recorder newspaper of Greenfield to release the impounded list of items found in a police search of the home of Mark Branch of Greenfield in October.

Branch was 19 when he was found hanged from a tree on a densely wooded mountainside in Buckland on Nov. 29. District Attorney Judd Carhart called the death a suicide and said it closed the case on the slaying of Sharon Gregory, 18, a Greenfield Community College student. Her stabbed body was found Oct. 24 at her Greenfield home.

The slaying frightened the town of 19,000 people in western Massachusetts because of published reports that Branch was a fan of horror movies, particularly the "Friday the 13th" series featuring a character named Jason who slashed his victims while wearing a hockey mask.

Among the paraphernalia found in Branch's room during the police search were 80 movies, 65 paperbacks and 110 magazines, all horror-related, and four masks, including three facsimiles of the type used by the Jason character, according to the impounded documents.

Apkin said he released the documents because of the overriding right of the public to know what the search turned up.

An attorney for the Branch family, Robert Carlsen, had argued last week that court records "should be sealed forever" because of the family's right to privacy in the matter.

"Because the young man is dead, there will be no trial to explain or try factual matters," Carlsen said at a court hearing.

Joanne Kuzmeski-Jackson, an attorney for the newspaper, contended that the courts traditionally balance the public's right to see such records against the risk of jeopardizing a defendant's right to a fair trial if the records are released, not his family's right to privacy. Branch's death made the fair trial issue moot, she said.

Orefice organizes petition against fee hike

A petition drive is being organized by Student Trustee Stephanie Orefice and members of the Undergraduate Student Senate to fight a proposed $50 increase in next semester's fees to University of Massachusetts students.

After the first day of the drive, Orefice said about 1,500 signatures had been collected.

A table outside the Hatch in the Student Union Building was set up yesterday, today, and will be staffed Monday and Tuesday to get more signatures.

Sen. Michael Greiner, another organizer of the drive said, "I'm really pleased with how the students have mobilized on this." Greiner said that based on his experience with other drives, he believed this was one of the most successful.

"It may decrease it," Greiner said. "If [the Trustees] see that enough students feel strongly about it."

He said he realized the drive probably would not eliminate a new fee.

Greiner and Orefice are also organizing a trip to Boston for the Trustees meeting Tuesday to oppose to the fee.

UMass aids research in infant hearing loss

By C.C. SANDORFI
Collegian Correspondent

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts are working with working with scientists at three other universities to investigate the impact of early hearing loss on infant development.

The study, conducted by the Infancy Research Group at UMass, examines the effect that early hearing loss has on social interaction between infant and mother, the infant's readiness to explore objects in their environment, the ability of infants to cope with stress, and the development of their communications skills, said Dr. Edward Tronick, head of the group and principal investigator for the project.

Gallaudet University in Washington, D.C., a school for the deaf, originated the study and chose UMass as one of the four sites where research will be conducted. The University of Texas at Dallas, the University of Pittsburgh, and Georgia State University are also participating in the study, Nelson said.

"Gaulladet has already done some research of infants with hearing loss, but nothing this extensive," he said.

Karen Nelson, Tronick's research assistant, said, "What's unique in this is that we're studying infants who are pretty much healthy otherwise. This way, we can study the effects of hearing impairment on a normally developing child."

Tronick, a professor of psychology at UMass, said he believes knowledge gained from the study will have important applications in educational programs for hearing-impaired children and their parents.

Observations of the mother-child pairs are made by using two cameras and a split video screen. The observations will be repeated at three-month intervals, when the child is six months, nine months, and one year old, said Nelson. He said the researchers will also work with slightly older children and will observe them up to the age of 18 months if necessary.

Nelson said there are four interactions that will be monitored by researchers. In the first, the mothers play with the child without toys while the infant is seated in an infant chair.

In the second, the infant and mother sit on a quilt, playing with toys.

The third method has the investigator presenting toys to the child, who is seated in the mother's lap. The toys have varying degrees of complexity, and the researcher will examine how the child explores the toys as the difficulty level progresses.

Finally, the researchers observe the child and the mother when a stranger is present to see how the infant uses the mother to interpret the person, Nelson said.

Basically, said Nelson, the study will try to determine whether a hearing impairment affects a child's feelings about exploring his environment.

The researchers are currently seeking mother-infant pairs for the study. Infants with sensory-neural loss rather than conductive (infection related) loss are the focus of the study, Nelson said. Observations are made both at Tronicks' lab in Tobin Hall and the Child Development Unit at Children's Hospital in Boston.

■ Suit

the suit.

The suit, filed with Hampshire County Superior Court, alleges the civil rights of Silkoff and Rabinowitz were violated in that they were not allowed to take office because of their political beliefs.

Members of the Student Judiciary, former SGA Attorney General Bill Collins, who prosecuted the case against Silkoff/Rabinowitz, and the UMass Board of Trustees are named as defendants in the suit.

None of the parties named in the suit who were contacted would comment.

The suit seeks preliminary and permanent injunctions against the defendants from preventing Silkoff/Rabinowitz from holding office, along with monetary compensation.

The lead counsel in the case is Edward Etheredge, a Northampton attorney. As a "cooperating attorney" for the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts (CLUM), he agreed to take the case "pro bono," or free of charge.

Other attorneys involved in the case are William Newman, director of the western Massachusetts office of CLUM, and Margaret Maisel, staff attorney for CLUM.

According to Etheredge, Silkoff/Rabinowitz will be charged only for certain out-of-pocket expenses, such as filing costs.

The next step in the case comes Friday when an injunction hearing is scheduled for Northampton Superior Court. In it, the attorneys for Silkoff/Rabinowitz are requesting a preliminary injunction stopping the Student Judiciary from enforcing blockades barring the two from office.

Challenging autonomy

In addition to the possible financial implications of the suit, student leaders say there are potential repercussions regarding the autonomy of the SGA.

"It totally undermines the student senate and the judiciary," said Sen. Sandy Edwards. "Since they named the Trustees in the suit, it leaves room for [the Trustees] to decide to disband us and take the $2 million we control."

Newman disagreed: "The fact that the suit was brought up does nothing to change the autonomy of student government," he said.

"The critical issue here is whether the persons who were duly elected to political office are allowed to hold that office," he said.

Newman said the Trustees are named in the suit because under Massachusetts General Law they are ultimately responsible for the actions of the University.

Said Fadel, "It's funny. I learned a lot of things about student government from Jason and Shari, and the one that's increasingly clear is that you never do anything to endanger the trust fund.

Do you have questions about SEX — or anything else in between?

ASK US

Q: I am worried that I don't orgasm during sex with my boyfriend. Is this normal?

A: Actually, many women do not orgasm during sex — if sex means penetration of the penis into the vagina. Many women orgasm through direct stimulation of the clitoris rather than through penetration which provides only indirect stimulation. Males and females have many different erogenous zones through which partners can stimulate one another. Explore these.

Q: With all the sexually transmitted diseases around, I have finally decided to use condoms. The trouble is, which kind should I use? There are so many different types.

A: Latex condoms provide the best protection against sexually transmitted diseases. Natural lambskin condoms because of their porosity do not provide adequate protection. Condoms should be used with a spermicide containing non-oxynol 9 to ensure maximum protection. At present non-oxynol 9 is the only sure protection against the AIDS virus. So, which latex condoms? Lubricated? Ribbed? Colored? The "best" condoms are the ones you will use. So experiment with a few different types until you find the ones most suited to you. And remember to use them correctly (i.e. read the instructions).

Q: Is it true that you can get AIDS through a dirty toilet seat?

A: No. AIDS cannot be transmitted through casual contact because the virus which causes AIDS, human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) cannot survive outside the body for more than a few seconds. HIV is transmitted primarily through blood, semen, and vaginal secretions and requires direct contact and transference.

Ask Us is prepared by the Peer Sexuality Education Program at University Health Services. Questions should be sent there.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Mystic Pizza is the unlikely title of one of the year's best films, a "sleeper" that caught me off guard. Set in Mystic, Ct., it concentrates on character study more than plot. Daisy and Kat (played by Julia Roberts and Annabel Gish, respectively) are sisters from a poor ethnic family. Both yearning for love, Daisy is the sexy and promiscuous sibling, while Kat is the innocent, bright and headed for Yale. Their best friend Jojo, however, has found love, and wants to keep it — as long as it doesn't mean marriage (and with a strict Catholic upbringing, this is difficult). The film follows this trio through good times and bad, ofter centered around their place of employment: the Mystic Pizza Restaurant.

This is a "feelgood" kind of movie, one that leaves you smiling, even after the sad parts. There's no bad guys here, only times when good people act badly out of frustration or hurt. You always know things will work out. All three actresses, unknown for now, are terrific. Each gives incredible depth to their characters, and each leave quite an impression. The script, by Amy Jones, Alfred Uhry (who won the 1988 Pulitzer Prize for drama with his play Driving Miss Daisy), and others, is a perfect balance of humor and heartache, always on target.

Despite the unusual title, Mystic Pizza is an affecting slice-of-life movie.

The second film introduces a new breed of cop, one that blows Dirty Harry away. In the first five minutes, he singlehandedly breaks up a meeting of the world's most dastardly leaders: Quadhaffi, Amin, the Ayatollah, even Gorbachev. Then it's back to the US to break up a sinister plot masterminded by Ricardo Montalban. Who is this superman? It's Frank Drebbin, detective-lieutenant from "Police Squad."

In The Naked Gun, Leslie Nielsen is superb as the dim-witted officer, reprising his role from the short-lived 1982 ABC series Police Squad!. Falling for innocent Priscilla Presley, he's suave when he asks her out for "Viking Food," or sensitively describes the loss of his first love (Girl dies in a tragic blimp accident). The supporting cast includes O.J. Simpson (the dedicated partner who gets shot, beaten, clubbed, and caught in a bear trap), and Reggie Jackson in his "first dramatic role."

Masterminded by the trio responsible for Airplane!, Zucker, Abrams, and Zucker (ZAZ), The Naked Gun is a very funny movie, one with more adult humor than previous works. Best of all, the leads have fun, and often resist the obvious jokes (Montalban never talks about "Corinthian Leather"). If stupid jokes and merciless parody are your thing, don't miss this film.

Opening at the local theaters are two more holiday comedies (humor seems to be in this season). Twins has been advertised for months, pairing opposites Arnold Schwartzenegger and Danny Devito as identical twins seperated at birth, now reunited for a special mission. Directed by Ivan Reitman (Ghostbusters), I figured it would either be very funny or terrible, but amazingly, advance word suggests the former.

My Stepmother is an Alien, starring Dan Aykroyd and Kim Basinger, is an uneven farce with an excellent performance by Basinger and some genuinely funny moments, but the script gets badly off track towards the end. It's still worth a look if you're in a mindless mood.

Madam Sousatzka is a Shirley MacClaine vehicle, one she's gotten rave reviews for. She plays an eccentric piano teacher who has a positive impact on a new student. As she says, "I teach not only how to play, but how to live." I bet. It's playing at the Amherst Cinema.

Answer to last week's trivia question: An American Werewolf in London was the first film to win an Academy Award for Makeup. Talented Rick Baker took the gold statuette home.

This weeks trivia question: What was the name of the "Dread Pirate" that had such a reputation in The Princess Bride?

Images open Monday

"Essential Images," a BFA thesis exhibition by Phillip A. Robertson and Linda M. Lewis opens Monday and will run through Saturday Dec. 17 in Hampden Gallery. Robertson, whose works are oil on paper and canvas, focuses on the use of expressive color and form; while Lewis, whose work consists of paintings done in acrylic and oil, focuses on images which act as symbols of expression of human emotion.

Flies, Beef, Roach and a Treat

Saad didn't show up tonight; Jen is pissed; I was down here doing some gross things with the photo chemicals so Live Wire has been handed to me. I've got no remorse for ole Saad. He and I haven't quite seen eye to eye since he stiffed me in a business transaction. The business wasn't strictly legal so I ended up the big loser. I've never been a money man.

Last year Max Roach received enough "no strings" grant money to finance a private fleet of stealth bombers and yet he still prefers travelling around in a gutted Greyhound bus playing gigs. It's a good thing too because, at 64, Max is still a hound on the drums. He's a must see on Saturday night at the FAC with the Jazz All Stars.

The rhythm craze goes on at the Iron Horse. Last week it was The Feelies and this Friday it is The Horseflies. They look like any other early baby boom yippie types from Ithaca but they've been getting rave reviews from all corners of the music scene and beyond.

I once saw Sleepy LaBeef at the Sportsmen's Lounge in Millis, Massachusetts. Toxic waste dumping in Millis has prevented I.Q. from reaching three figures and the audience acted accordingly. Most eventful was a fight between a girl with a satin Iron Maiden jacket and the local idiot's doberman. Sleepy rocked up a storm during the whole mess. I can't guarantee that degree of animal madness on Saturday at the U-Joint but you might get lucky.

UMass must protest Dukakis' budget cuts

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis must not truly care about the University of Massachusetts — its students, faculty, and its ability to do important research — as Wednesday saw the fourth budget cut for UMass in 16 months.

UMass President David C. Knapp said the University will probably increase student fees by up to $50 for the semester that begins in January. The UMass/Amherst budget as a whole was cut by three percent, or approximately $5 million. The University's 2-week-old hiring freeze will continue, UMass officials say, and layoffs are under discussion.

Every student at UMass should protest this latest budget cut by either travelling to Boston, or certainly by writing to Gov. Dukakis.

Send your letters to:
Gov. Michael S. Dukakis
Statehouse
Boston, Mass. 02133

We must work together or we will as a University suffer. Fewer classes and tuition hikes will only scratch the surface of the damage that a $5 million budget cut will have on UMass.

Please protest.

Thanks for the songs, UMass

On behalf of the students of Amherst College, the Amherst College Board of Governors wishes to recognize the good will expressed by the University of Massachusetts students who came to sing at Amherst on Sunday night. This impromptu gesture of friendship was greatly appreciated and served to demonstrate that a more positive relationship between our two schools is readily obtainable. The establishment of a dual tradition of both caroling and snowball fighting could serve to build new bridges between students of both schools. We commend the students who took the initiative to make this unprecedented event possible. In addition, we wish to thank all the UMass students who made our caroling expedition a success by joining us on Tuesday evening. While the students of Amherst thoroughly enjoy the competitive spirit of the annual snowball fight, we hope that in the future it can be limited to exchanges of snowballs among participants, and that the amicable atmosphere of Sunday night will prevail. Thanks again UMass, and Happy Holidays!

False information slanders JFK

I had the great displeasure of reading an article in the Collegian by Rusty Denton ("The truth behind the man, the myth, the legend" Dec. 6) about President John F. Kennedy.

Denton began with absolutely irrelevant accusations concerning the business practices of the Kennedy family and alleged extramarital affairs. He then continued on with deceiving and outright wrong statements concerning certain decisions of Kennedy's adminstration, like tape recordings, economic policies, and an assassination plot against Ngo Dihn Diem.

First, tape recording has been used in every administration from the time the device was invented. Second, JFK's economic policy of cutting taxes and increasing government spending is basic Keynesian economics, imitated by President Ronald Reagan.

Third, Kennedy did not order the assassination of Diem, the CIA did because they felt he wasn't as interested in maintaining the South Vietnamese war effort as he was own power. Lastly, I will not make excuses for the Bay of Pigs. However, it is important people know that JFK was reluctant to carry out this mission but did so in an effort to silence "hawks" in Congress and our beloved CIA, who was, incidentally, stressing the necessity of assassintating Fidel Castro. Kennedy absolutely refused that recommendation.

would advise that Denton get his information from reliable historical sources, instead of the back pages of the National Enquirer.

Notes from the basement

Winter ducks and late graduates abound at UMass

Chancellor Joseph Duffey said recently state budget cuts might keep some seniors from graduating on time, because necessary courses might be cut. That's right, you've sweated through three-and-a-half years here, just so mismanagement in Boston will cost you another $3,000 and six months of your life.

But hey, autumn is Amherst's prettiest season.

Nancy Klingener

Outgoing editor in chief Pedro Pereira, a hopefully graduating senior, has a solution to this mess, in the spirit of the Silkoff/Rabinowitz solution to university problems: "If that happens to me," he said, "I'll sue."
